The era of the Mound Builders falls into three distinct archaeological periods: the Adena, which was centred around the Ohio River valley from roughly 500 B.C. to 100 A.D. (although these people may have had an even older hunter-gatherer pedigree) and the Hopewell (named after Cloud Hopewell of Chillicothe, Ohio on whose farm their artefacts had first been found). Their culture seems to have peaked between 50 B.C. and 400 A.D. They were also centered in Ohio but had spread to other areas including Pennsylvania and Mississippi which existed from about 800 A.D. onwards until the European invasions of the 16th century. This latter civilization appears to have been the most highly developed and stretched as far south as the Mississippi River, building great temple mounds as they went. It was the last remnants of the Mississippi culture, the third archaeological period, that the Spanish conquistador Hernan de Soto (1500–1542), as he entered the Mississippi River area in 1542. But by this time, they had been decimated by diseases that they had contracted through the Europeans, mainly French traders and trappers who were already in the area. In fact, de Soto's death on the banks of the Mississippi has sometimes been attributed to his interference with some of their shrines, which he had allegedly desecrated. All through the territories were "effigy mounds," which were shaped or bore the shape of various animals, birds, and serpents. Others seemed to suggest odd geometric shapes—octagons, circles, and squares—all of which aroused the curiosity of the early settlers.

The Mississippi culture would seem to have a highly developed religious aspect to it. It has been suggested that its religion was primarily Shamanistic, and if this is so, the evidence suggests that connections between the human world and that of the spirits may have been very close. When excavated, some of the mounds and tumuli were found to contain layered tombs, lined with logs, where the remnants of bodies resided, perhaps still somehow involved in the world around them.

Ephraim J. Squier and Edwin H. Davis

Between 1845 and 1847, Ephraim J. Squier and Edwin H. Davis, both working under the auspices of the American Ethnological Society, dug in to a large earthwork known as Mound City located in south-central Ohio, and found that it was in fact a necropolis—a city of the dead—which covered 13 acres and contained over 23 burial tombs. Squier and Davis published their findings in 1848, as the first of a series of books on natural science and archaeology sponsored by the recently established Smithsonian Institution. Their writing was to set the tone as to how these early people might be viewed. They spoke, for example, of "sacred enclosures" devoted to obscure religious functions and surmised that the builders were skilled engineers, well versed in geometry and mathematics. This led others to speculate that the alignments of such constructions were somehow connected to the stars and might be used for mysterious purposes. Their book, Ancient Monuments in the Mississippi Valley, proved to be a best-seller and won such widespread attention that, in 1849, the newly-elected President Zachary Taylor appointed Squier, a political activist, to a diplomatic post in Central America, where he continued to develop archaeological theories and interests. Attention was now paid to other great mounds, such as Monk's Mound near Collinsville in central Illinois. It was said to be the biggest man-made earthen mound north of Mexico, which contained four terraces and provoked much speculation. This speculation was already taking strange and unnerving turns.

Manasseh Cutler

In 1788, an astute clergyman from Massachusetts named Manasseh Cutler arrived at the new town of Marietta on the Ohio River. He found trees being cut down to make way for a new building and as they did so, a massive 40-acre earthen settlement was revealed. Assuming that the felled trees had flourished after the settlement had been abandoned, Cutler decided that the age of the trees could be determined by counting the number of annual growth rings in a cross-section of the trunk. Using this method he determined that the earthworks was anywhere between four hundred and over a thousand years old. However, apart from being mathematically astute, Cutler was also a little fanciful and concluded that this was the central structure of a powerful, advanced, and religiously orientated civilization that had flourished along the Ohio before the coming of either Indians or Europeans.

Cutler's ideas, coupled with the discovery of ancient necropolises such as Mound City, couple with Squier and Davis's emotive language (they had referred to many areas as "sacred" or "taboo" ground—the home of ancient and terrifying gods), set the scene for much of early 19th century thinking. By the early 1800s, fables connecting the Mound Builders to a vanished prehistoric "super civilization" had taken root in the American imagination. The mythmakers evoked theories of an advanced prehistoric race, which had worshipped extremely ancient and powerful gods dwelling amongst their earthen temples. These people were now gone from the plains and river valleys, leaving only behind these monuments as testament to their existence.

Caleb Atwater

This theory gained fresh credence as an amateur archaeologist, Caleb Atwater, a postmaster from Circleville, Ohio, began to take an interest in the earthworks. Although sometimes fearful of such places, many of the farmers showed no great respect for them and began to systematically pull them down. Before they vanished completely under the plough, Atwater began to measure them and record details of their structure, publishing his findings in 1820. He found, to his astonishment, that many of them, no matter how far apart, conformed to a similar construction. This led him to believe that some widespread "super race" of engineers had built such structures. Although he was meticulous and methodical in assessing the mounds, Caleb Atwater was also a romanticist. He believed these people (more advanced than even 19th century Americans) had come from somewhere in the East—possibly India—in order to establish ritual sites to ancient Eastern gods on the banks of rivers and in remote places. His theories might appear ludicrous today, but in the early 19th century they were taken seriously, especially as they appeared to be backed with such meticulous empirical research. Atwater was lauded by no less than an expert of the day: Stephen Williams, a professor at Harvard, commended him on the detail of his work and the excellence of his deductions. For many people, the mythology of a prehistoric "super race" somewhere in America was becoming a reality. A number of "scholars" trawled through numerous ancient texts as well as their own imaginations, attributing the mounds to a wide variety of ancient peoples—Celts, Vikings, Anglo Saxons, Greeks, Romans, Persians, Assyrians, Phoenicians, and ancient Chinese. Some even suggested they had been built by the Ten Lost Tribes of Israel and there was a suggestion that they may have been constructed by survivors from the vanished continent of Atlantis. Later the imposing academic figure of John Wesley Powell—a Civil War veteran, famous for his epic journey down the Colorado River and through the Grand Canyon in 1869, which lead to his appointment as director of the U.S. Geological Survey in 1879—was to assert that these works had been raised by the forerunners of the Indians themselves. The idea was now too deeply ingrained in the popular psyche to completely disappear.

Abelard Tomlinson

Not even the exposure of a massive fraud, perpetrated by a farmer named Abelard Tomlinson at Grave Creek Mound, West Virginia in 1838 shook this belief. Tomlinson claimed that whilst digging near the Mound, he had unearthed a small oval sandstone tablet bearing a 25 character inscription written in a mysterious language. This tablet generated 35 years of research and controversy as University-based experts variously identified the inscription as Canaanite, Numidian, Celtic, and Phoenician. Later, the tablet was declared a fraud, designed by Tomlinson himself, but it had already led to a burgeoning tourist industry which still continues today with the establishment of Grave Creek State Park.

Effigy Mounds

If their enclosures were sacred, what sort of gods did these early people worship? It is widely thought that all the Mound Builder civilizations—particularly the Mississippi culture—had a highly developed priestly order that conducted and guided their worship. This is suggested by the elaborateness of their burials, which are indicative of some form of intensive ritual. The shapes of the "effigy mounds" also seems to indicate that most of their deities were animistic—serpents, wolves, and eagles. But there are others that are suggestive of no living thing. Manessah Cutler declared that the geometric shapes of some of the hills denoted ancient formulae for contacting spirits (later archaeologists derided this, stating that they were simply gathering places for various clans), whilst others have interpreted other mounds in entirely different ways. For instance, one mound in Illinois is said to resemble a humpbacked dwarf, which may have been one of their gods. Others have a definite shape but are said to resemble something inhuman. It is also highly probable that the priests of the Mississippi and even earlier cultures practiced human sacrifice, using obsidian knifes for the purpose. Obsidian knives appear from time to time in Lovecraft's work, always suggestive of extremely ancient ritual. Ceramic bowls, unearthed in some mounds, bore odd faces that, said scholars, might have represented the gods they worshipped. The fact that many of these may be funerary urns, as they have been found beside the crouching cadavers—the Hopewell culture seems to have buried its noble dead in sitting positions—signalling some sort of transition to another world. It is surmised that the deities worshipped by all these people were intensely barbaric and fearsome—perhaps a suitable template for some of Lovecraft's ancient entities.

What became of the Mound Builders and why did they vanish? The common theory is that they were completely wiped out by epidemics. By the time de Soto encountered them on the banks of the Mississippi, they were already suffering from European diseases such as smallpox and typhoid, which must have eventually extinguished them. However, such explanation did not readily satisfy the followers of the "super-civilization" theory. If these people did indeed worship powerful old gods perhaps these deities, coupled with their own scientific prowess, would enable them to survive. The fact that many of these Mound Builders had lived in caves within their structures gave rise to another theory—that they had gone underground to avoid the advance of the Europeans and were still down there, waiting for a chance to return to the surface. This was given further credence by the fact that the folklore of some of the local Indian tribes—for example the Choctaws—made references to underground races living in the lightless realms under the earth, emerging only at night to steal away maidens and horses. The notion of a subterranean super civilization of Mound Builders together with its ghoulish gods, still extant and perhaps hostile towards Mankind (whom they wished cleared away from the surface so that they might return to the light once more), was gaining in popularity throughout the early 19th and 20th centuries.

Subterranean world

The idea of a subterranean world, of course, was not new. From earliest times, it had been surmised that the earth might, in fact, be hollow and that various races had fled into its interior in order to avoid certain instances on the surface. For example, an ancient tale from the Middle East suggests that the terrible spawn of humans and demons had fled into the Underworld in order to avoid the deluge (flood) that God had sent to cleanse them from the upper world. But there were also tales about vanished Roman and Greek cities, the inhabitants of which had fled underground to avoid some natural disaster, such as volcanic eruption, and continued to live down there, either as they had been at the time of their flight or else developing separate cultures and technologies.

Athansius Kircher, Mundis Subterraneus

In 1665, the scientist Athansius Kircher was speculating in his Mundis Subterraneus concerning "great cavities" under the earth's crust in which a civilization might establish itself. The idea was taken up by others—including Edmund Halley in his Theory of Magnetic Variations (1692). It was not long before writers began to speculate what some of these "inner worlds" might look like, and fanciful accounts soon began to appear "from those who might have visited them." Early tales, reputedly taken from those who had been accidentally swept into the inner worlds, usually by the sea (as in Edgar Allen Poe's Descent into the Maelstrom which Lovecraft must surely have read in his grandfather's library), speak of lightless caverns where strange creatures dwelt, such as pale and bizarre-looking fish. The walls of the caverns were covered in mysterious inscriptions.

Charles de Fieux

In 1735, the French writer Charles de Fieux, the chevalier de Mouhy, penned a now-forgotten classic, which involved subterranean travel—Lamekis, ou les voyages extraordinaires d'un Egyptien dans la terre interierure. The story is set in the distant past and the characters are centered around the "hero" Lemakis, who moves from ancient Egypt through a number of fantastic countries in which he encounters a prince and princess who have been banished to a subterranean world upon the death of their father. The chevalier de Mouhy explains that he received the story from an ancient and mysterious Armenian who arrived at his court and told him the tale, which he declared to be true.

Ludvig Holberg

One of the earliest and most detailed accounts, however, must be that written by Ludvig Holberg (1684–1754), often referred to as "the father of Norwegian and Danish literature." His The Journey of Neils Klinn to the World Underground describes a complex and fantastic world lying far beneath our feet. Although this was thought to be a satire on the religious and political life of his time, "the Moliere, or the North" insisted that it was based on real accounts given to him by Norwegian fishermen.

John Poltrack

The English, too were beginning to consider the possibility of an underground world. John Poltrack's The Life and Adventures of Peter Wilkins contains many elements of Gulliver's Travels, but provides details of "underground Utopia." In the story, Wilkins, a Cornishman, is wrecked somewhere near the South Pole (long considered as being an access to the subterranean world), and accidentally falls into a strange land existing under the earth's crust. There he finds the kingdom of Doorpe Swangeanti, to which he was borne on a chair, held aloft by several winged beings. He discovered a thriving civilization of "ingenious and industrious" people. He introduces them to technology and whilst they are happy, perhaps they were more so before the coming of the civilizing stranger. In many ways similar to Gulliver's Travels, the story is an allegory and owes much more to the writer's imagination and satire than it does to fact, but in the world of the 18th century, it was thought to be a truthful account.

Jules Verne

Following in the steps of Peter Wilkins, a number of other such tales appeared (some portraying the inner world almost as outer space in which near-dead planets orbited around dark stars), including (in 1864), Jules Verne's classic Journey to the Centre of the Earth. By this time, of course, the theory of the hollow world seemed to have been backed by at least some scientific evidence. Following the War of 1812, a veteran of the conflict and gifted amateur scientist, John Symmes, made a number of calculations concerning the North and South Poles. His conclusion, which was submitted with full mathematical and astronomical calculations, deduced that neither pole existed but, according to magnetic movements, their alleged sites were actually entrances to the subterranean world. This entrance became known as "Symmes Hole" and the concept of it caused great excitement. In the late 19th and early 20th centuries, it fired the imagination of a number of writers of fiction, especially in America and Britain. The Chicago-born writer, Edgar Rice Boroughs (1875–1950) described a number of fictional adventures set in an inhabited underworld.

Edgar Allen Poe

Lovecraft, however, may have been more familiar with the work of two other celebrated writers who had either dabbled in or had made reference to the hollow earth in their fiction. One was the American, Edgar Allen Poe, whose The Narrative of Arthur Gordon Pym of Nantucket (1830) drew a great deal of attention when it was first published. Although it starts off as a conventional sea-tale with Pym enlisting on the whaler Grampus, it soon turns into a story of shipwreck, cannibalism, and darkness, ending with the hero being swept into a hole leading (apparently) to the core of the world. In this, Poe had clearly been influenced by the work of Symmes, and the yawning vortex into which his hero was plunged is undoubtedly a "Symmes Hole." Much more detailed and fantastical was Edward George Bulwar-Lytton's The Coming Race. Bulwar-Lytton (1803–1873) was a novelist and poet, widely known for his historical novels such as The Last Days of Pompeii. But The Coming Race firmly established him in the genre of fantastic fiction. In the story, the narrator and his friend descend into a deep chasm, when the rope securing them to the surface breaks, trapping them in a terrifying Underworld. His friend is devoured by "a monstrous reptile. The narrator then encounters the Vril-ya, an extremely ancient race of advanced beings who fled the surface countless millennia before. They resemble humans, although they are clearly descended from frogs. The account is very detailed and may have inspired Lovecraft in some of his own creation.

Arthur Machen

Another influence on his work may well have been that of Arthur Machen. Born Arthur Llewellyn Jones (he would later change his name for writing purposes) at Caerton-on Usk in rural Wales in 1863, Machen was fascinated by local folklore and by stories of fairies living under hills. America, of course, was not the only country to boast strange mounds and to have legends and folktales associated with them. Ireland, for example, had a rich and detailed history concerning ancient earthworks (ringforts) and standing stones. Here, too were the ancient tumuli of former races that had dwelt on the island in prehistoric times. These were the paces of the Sidhe (pronounced Shee), that translates roughly as "the people of the mounds." Although they'd been consigned to earlier times, remnants of their race were still said to exist underground, close to tumuli, standing stones, and lone trees. Such places, together with the remains of ancient earthworks which dotted the Irish countryside, were often considered to be supernatural sites and are usually avoided by local people.

Fahr Ree

Similar geographical features occur in Wales and, as in Ireland, were attributed to supernatural elements, particularly fairies (the word "fairy" is believed to have originated from an old form of Gaelic—fahr ree meaning "the spirit race"). Stories concerning them circulated widely throughout the Welsh countryside, and Machen certainly picked up on these and incorporated some of the themes into his stories. Throughout the Celtic world, the fairy race was not considered as being terribly friendly towards Mankind—indeed, they were often believed to be hostile and not to be crossed. As in Ireland, the Welsh fairies dwelt underground—a subterranean race—and their places were to be avoided if at all possible. Much of Machen's horror fiction therefore deals with a small "primordial" race, living beneath the Welsh hills and secretly seeking to overthrow Mankind or to do harm to humans. Machen's portrayal of a hidden race, well away from Mankind's gaze and inimical towards humanity was at once both terrifying and fascinating. It preyed on many people's deepest nightmares. What if such a proposition were actually true? Lovecraft himself must have picked up on this, as he also hinted at dark races living in remote areas of rural America, (and remote areas elsewhere in the world) together with their dark and hostile gods, who were ready to attack Mankind at a moment's notice. The idea translated readily to America where there were still sparsely inhabited places and areas that had dubious reputations, such as the "balds" (hilltops on which no vegetation would grow) in Missouri, the Devil's Tramping Ground in North Carolina, or indeed the Devil's Hop Yard in East Haddam, Connecticut (note that the same name is used in Lovecraft's The Dunwich Horror). In some legends, these were connected with either mysterious and elemental forces or the worship sites of cults who communed with such forces or with rumoured weird races of underground people. These were areas in which people were said to vanish, queer lights were said to be seen, and strange noises heard. They were places best avoided and they are featured in many of Lovecraft's stories.

Pale Underground-Dwellers

Such beliefs were "fleshed out" by old Indian tales of subterranean worlds. The Choctaw Indians for example, spoke of mysterious pale-skinned people who lived far underground, away from the light and who only came up to the surface in order to hunt by moonlight. They were deemed to be the descendants of the Mound Builders; their interior world was highly dangerous and no surface dweller should seek it out. In effect, the Choctaw tribe sought to avoid any form of contact with them and often referred to them as "ghost men." Some of them were reputed to be giants with an appetite for human flesh, dwelling in deep river caves and ravines. But it was not only men who inhabited these interior worlds. There were stories of monsters dwelling in great caves under the earth—particularly monstrous insects.

Tsul-ka-lu

The most famous of these monstrous tales were to be found amongst the Cherokee Indians of the North Carolina area. They told tales of a particular monster known as Judaculla that lived in a deep cavern at the head of Tuckaseegee River. Descriptions of this creature vary—at times it was a huge wasp-like insect, bigger than an eagle, that could carry away full-grown horses or a full-grown man to its lair; at other times it was a massive slant-eyed giant, sometimes referred to as Tsul-ka-lu (the name translates from the Cherokee tongue as "Great Lord of the Hunt")—the last of a monstrous breed of ferocious hunters who had lived in the area in prehistoric times.

Judaculla's Rock

In Jackson County, North Carolina, just outside the town of Sylva, a 3,000 year-old soapstone boulder known as Judaculla's Rock stands. Deep in what is known as Cullowhee hill country, the stone is almost overgrown by the surrounding vegetation and is difficult to find. However, it appears to be covered in indecipherable pictographs, said to be the unknown language of a vanished race. Others have claimed that they are nothing more than the traces of microscopic creatures, first observed in the 1500s by European explorers. Some historians state that they are an ancient battle plan, drawn up in 1755 by the early Cherokees but nobody is really sure. What is known is that the Cherokees still consider it an extremely ancient site and have held rituals there from very early times. There were certainly mysterious ceremonies held there between the years 1850 and 1880. Local legend says that there are at least two other similarly marked stones in the area but the location of these has been lost. The Judaculla Stone is said to bear the mark of the giant's seven-fingered hand as he leapt from hill to hill, but these lines may in fact be part of the ancient pictographs. Judaculla was also allegedly able to change his form and so in some instances is depicted as a massive human, and at others as a gigantic wasp. In this form it descended on sleeping children and carried them off. According to Cherokee myth, the creature could not be destroyed, except by fire.

The Devil's Courthouse

Close by is an area of bare rock known as the Devil's Courthouse, that lies just off the Blue Ridge Trackway, near Pisgah. Cherokee legends say that this eerie spot is Judacullah's dancing ground, both in humanoid and insect form, and is even today widely avoided by locals. Some say that somewhere amongst the bleak rocks is an entrance to an underground world that is Judacullah's kingdom, and that certain people have been carried off. There are rumours, too, of scattered pictographs in the area, but no one is quite sure where they are to be found. Incidentally, The Devil's Courthouse is noted for its high instances of unusual plants and strange insects that can often deliver a deadly bite.

Spearfinger

The Courthouse was also believed to be the home of Spearfinger—a ghastly witch-like being whose skin was supposed to be as hard as the rock. She lived in the area far beyond the memory of any human and had the power to take on any shape including that of a wasp or bee. It was said that she could even take on the form of the rocks and could only be recognized when in human guise, by the first finger of her right hand, which was long and sharp like a pick or awl. In her human form she would attempt to lure away Cherokee children by imitating the voices of those whom they loved—especially that of a grandmother. When the child drew close she would pounce upon the child and carry it away to her underground world beneath Whiteside Mountain (on which the Devil's Courthouse is to be found). She was said to be the last of an ancient race that once lived on the mountain and that was incredibly hostile towards humans. Despite this sinister reputation, extensive developments have been made to turn the area into a tourist attraction. The place is nevertheless suggestive of a monstrous elder race of giants, witches, or insect creatures (or else shapeshifters who can assume attributes of all of these).

Nanthala Gorge

Similar tales relate to Nanthala Gorge, which runs along U.S. Highway 19 through Swain and Macon Counties in North Carolina. The bottom of the Gorge is a very dark and forbidding place and is heavily lined by trees and foliage. It is also said to be the entrance to the home of Ulagu (the word in Cherokee means "boss" or "leader"), a giant Yellow Jacket or wasp.

Ulagu

In appearance, Ulagu is said to be as big as a house with a massive wing-span, which creates a roaring wind wherever it goes. Ugalu has a taste for human flesh, particularly that of young children, so the stories say, and will drop without warning on a settlement to carry the unsuspecting humans off to its lair. Most victims are quite simply paralysed with the speed of its descent and the ferociousness of its attack. The creature can travel and manoeuvre in the air quickly so that when Cherokee infants were carried off screaming, it was difficult for the hunters to keep up. They managed to trace it to its hideout by tempting it with a whole deer, to which a long string—the thickness of a rope—had been attached. In this way they could track Ugalu to its hideout in the gorge. The hunters made their way down into a great cavern that was filled with thin papery material. Many yellow wasp-like creatures, all slightly smaller than the Ugalu itself but vastly bigger than human beings, lived in these chambers. Fearful that they would be stung to death, the hunters fled the terrible place. For all we know, Ugalu and his insect followers may still be down there to this day, watching and waiting to strike against Mankind.

Clingman's Dome

Again, similar stories exist around Clingman's Dome in the Great Smokey Mountains. Named after Thomas Lanier Clingman, a Confederate general during the Civil War and later a United States senator, the highest point of the Great Smokey Mountains National Park overlooks Newfound Gap at the heart of the mountain chain. Somewhere on its slopes is a well-hidden entrance to another world, possibly underground. It is a place where the two worlds cross. The Cherokee call the spot Kuawa-Hi, which means "the Mulberry Place" and at one time considered the entire mountain a place to avoid, lest they should accidentally stumble into it and be transported to another world, never to be seen again

Stull, Kansas

In the village of Stull, Kansas, a similar spot is said to exist, possibly on the edge of an ancient graveyard. This is supposed to be an entrance to Hell and has gained Stull some notoriety over the years. Evil forces are said to emanate from the place, reputedly from far underground. Indeed there is a popular urban myth that when the last Pope, John Paul II, visited the United States, he had his plane specially rerouted so that he would not overfly Stull and be exposed to such evil.

The idea that lost races—whether human or insectoid, perhaps more advanced in some ways than us, may be living underground in the dark and waiting to attack humanity—was an extremely powerful one that appeared in many cultures from rural Wales to rural America. Mankind shuddered at the thought of something monstrous and shadowy lurking just outside the limits of our vision and of our knowledge, on the periphery of existence. And who was to say that it was not true? Fragmentary evidence suggested (and, for some, continues to suggest) that there might be some element of truth behind it all. This terror was to form the very basis of Lovecraft's work and lend it an immediacy. The very idea of the Great Old Ones and of an Elder Race, waiting to strike against Humankind, must have filled the hearts of his readers with a fear that resonated throughout the modern psyche.

The Vanished Continent

There was yet another element to be considered—the legend of a vanished continent. The most famous of these was, of course, the doomed continent of Atlantis, which has given its name to the Atlantic Ocean. Legend states that the advanced civilization was overwhelmed by a volcanic eruption, causing the entire continent to sink beneath the waves and disappear. But did such a place in fact ever exist?

Atlantis

The notion of Atlantis is, in fact, a very old one. It appears around 355 B.C. when the Greek philosopher Plato mentioned it in a series of dialogues (philosophical treatises). Plato located a fabulous and highly civilized island continent in the Western Ocean somewhere beyond "the Pillars of Hercules" (which have been identified as the Straits of Gibraltar)—a long distance away from Ancient Greece. Atlantis, argued Plato, was similar to a Paradise on earth, with almost every luxury that Man could dream of or that civilization could bring. Unfortunately this wonderful lifestyle made the people there complacent and greedy and the gods decided to punish them. They created a massive earthquake that disturbed the sea so greatly that it overwhelmed the entire island, consigning Atlantis to the ocean depths. This occurred, Plato said, nine thousand years before his own lifetime. Since then, the myth of an advanced and vanished civilization in the West has persisted, but a central question has also arisen amongst commentators. Was Plato simply using the legend of Atlantis as an allegory—a warning commentary on the Greek civilization of his time—or was he referring to an actual destroyed culture about which he had heard?

The myth of a sunken continent has appealed to the popular imagination throughout the years and many attempts have been made and theories put forward to suggest that Atlantis might have existed. Similar to the Mound Builders, the idea of a prehistoric "super civilization" was, and still is, an immensely exciting one. Various locations have been given for its location—from the Arctic Circle, to the Eastern Coast of America, to New Zealand. Perhaps the most convincing argument for the lost continent came from Professor K.T. Frost of Queen's University, Belfast, who suggested that it might have been part of the Minoan civilization based around the island of Santorinas (north of Crete), the majority of which appears to have vanished almost overnight around 1500 B.C. Seismology seems to back up Frost's theory, detailing a massive volcanic upheaval in the area—on a scale of that of Krakatoa—around that time. Shortly afterwards the relatively advanced Minoan civilization collapsed. Could this have been the Atlantis disaster to which Plato referred?

Atlantean Civilization

Descriptions of the Atlantean civilization vary. There is a common thread throughout all the accounts that it was advanced for its time. Some descriptions portray it as a place of towering spires—futuristic even by our standards; others as a Classical Greek culture in the midst of a savage and primitive world. Still, other accounts show it as a more barbarous place, where its people, though technically advanced, still worshipped old and monstrous deities. Human sacrifice was said to have been carried out on a regular basis. Outraged by this unseemly behaviour, the god Zeus condemned the entire continent to volcanic destruction. Not only do the accounts fail to agree on the religious make-up of Atlantis but few can agree on its political make-up either. Some describe it as an "island city state," making it very small in size, whilst others call it a "confederation of kingdoms" (some of these accounts speak of "seven kings") stretching over an entire continent.

Hyperborea

The notion of Atlantis was further confused by some ancient Greek legends concerning another semi-mythical land—Hyperborea. Amongst the Greeks, there dwelt a number of "foreigners" who allegedly had come from somewhere in the Northwest. The Greeks referred to them as Hyperboreans (from the word boreas, meaning "the north wind") and claimed that they came from a country far beyond the Pillars of Hercules. Pliny makes reference to them as coming "from the North." It was said that the sun always shone in that country, which was a peninsula from a much larger frozen continent, and that Apollo often wintered amongst these people. It is thought that the Hyperboreans who dwelt amongst the Greeks were either slaves or captured mercenary warriors and that their "country" might have been a geographical mixture of Britain and the Scandinavian lands. The idea of Hyperborea was to appeal, not so much to H.P. Lovecraft (although he did make mention of it), but to one of his contemporaries, Robert E. Howard, creator of Conan the Barbarian. The Hyperborian lands, home of a tall fair-haired people, bordered on Conan's own native land of Cimmeria, and the Hyborian Age in which many of his adventures are set, holds overtones of an ancient land. During World War II, the Nazi party were deeply interested in Hyperboria as the possible home of the Aryan race from which Hitler claimed that all true Germans were descended. It was the home, the Nazis decided, of ancient occult mysteries and powers and therefore was located by German occultists as being somewhere near the North Pole, perhaps within a "Symmes Hole." Hitler believed that this ancient land had been inhabited by a race of fair-haired giants who were physically perfect in every way and this became the prototype for his ideal of the Master Race.

Lemuria

Of more interest to H. P. Lovecraft perhaps was another vanished land. This was Lemuria which, similar to Atlantis had sunk beneath either the Indian or the Pacific Ocean. Tales of a lost island kingdom had featured heavily in the legends of the Tamil peoples of southern India and Ceylon (now Sri Lanka) but such a place was called Kumerinatu. It was the land of their origin from which they had fled when the oceans had overwhelmed it. The name "Lemuria" (deriving, it is said, from "lemur," although another rather dubious definition gives it as a Tamil word meaning "old red ground") was given to it by the anthropologist Philip Sclater in 1864. This was a time when the Darwinian Theory of Evolution suggested that land bridges to explained the dispersal of various animal types throughout the world. They drew on old legends of sunken landmasses to describe how certain creatures of similar strains were found hundreds of miles apart, and in doing so popularized these tales once more. For example, this was the time when the theory of the lost land of Lyonnaisse (which was reputedly an early medieval kingdom said to lie between the south of England and the French coast—now the English Channel) enjoyed a new surge of popularity. The idea of Lemuria allowed for the spread of various species in the East and fitted in well with evolutionary theory.

Theosophists

What would have been of interest to Lovecraft, however, was the fact that, in the 1880s, the vanished continent attracted the attention of an occult group known as the Theosophists, led by the eccentric Helena Petrovna Blavatsky.

The Society of Theosophists had been founded in New York in 1875, by Henry Steel Olcott, William Quan Judge, and H.P. Blavatsky. It was initially set up to investigate, study and explain mediumistic phenomena (Blavatsky herself claimed to enjoy certain psychic powers) but very soon it extended its remit to explore Eastern religions. Both Blavatsky and Olcott travelled extensively in India, and Blavatsky claimed to have visited Tibet (which was then practically inaccessible to foreigners) several times. She claimed to have made contact with the "Great Masters," ancient, mystic lamas who had powers well beyond that of normal humans and who were in constant contact with beings on another plane. She also claimed that she was their representative in the world (they never left their mountain fastness) and that they regularly communicated their will to her. In order to convey their wisdom to Mankind, the Masters instructed her to write a series of "truths" which she did in her first major work—Isis Unveiled. The Masters also revealed to her the location of the Garden of Eden which they said lay in a "great lost continent" stretching south from Asia to Tasmania and which served as the birthplace of all occult sciences.

The Book of Dzyan

From this continent had emerged a mystical work known as The Book of Dzyan that outlined the true history of the world. It revealed that Mankind was only the Fourth Race of creatures that had lived upon the earth, and that previous races had been imbued with many occult and psychic powers. This intelligence was communicated directly with H.P. Blavatsky, so no original version of that work can be seen, although many subsequent versions of it have been published.

Blavatsky's theories stirred up a great deal of interest, particularly as she followed Isis Unveiled with further Theosophical works such as The Secret Doctrine and founded a journal on Theosophical matters, which was widely circulated. Indeed her notions concerning vanished Lemuria intrigued other people who soon emerged with theories of their own. One of these was Frederick Spencer Oliver.

Frederick Spencer Oliver

had arrived on the West Coast of America. (This echoed earlier theories that remnants of the Atlantean civilization had also reached the American coast and that the rise of the Mayan and Aztec civilizations was due to their influence.) Oliver suggested that these survivors had made their home beneath Mount Shasta in California where they lived underground in subterranean cities and influenced events on the surface world, particularly in America, through their supernatural powers. From time to time, they made themselves known to ordinary humans with whom they communicated telepathically as did the Great Masters in Tibet with whom the people beneath Mount Shasta were in contact. More recently, followers of the theory have claimed that the survivors of Lemuria have also been in contact with extra-terrestrial beings which accounts for the seemingly increased UFO activity along the Western American coast.

Mu

There was one other "lost land" that appealed to many followers of the mystic and occult. This was the vanished continent of Mu, although many of the theories concerning this place seem to replicate those concerning Lemuria.

Mu was first identified as a "lost world" by the 19th century traveller Augustus Le Ploageon (1826–1908) and was said to be located somewhere in the Pacific Ocean. He had conducted some research amongst ancient Mayan ruins in the Yucatan Peninsula and advanced the theory, once again, that Mu might be the home of the Mayan race. However, the idea of the vanished continent did not grip the public attention until James Churchwarden (1852–1936) wrote a series of books on the subject, closely identifying it with the development of early America. Since then, other theories concerning Mu have emerged, most owing more to the imaginations of the theorists rather than solid fact. For instance, it was suggested that this might, in fact, be the home of the Chinese and Japanese races and survivors of the catastrophe that had swamped it brought that advanced scientific and occult practices from the drowned continent. Mu was therefore added to the catalogue of mythic "lost lands" and its people to the index of "super civilizations," whose knowledge is now mostly lost to the present world.

Dagon

There was also the question of the gods, whom such peoples worshipped, some of whom were said to be exceptionally ancient. Little is known about the worship in places such as Atlantis or Lemuria, but the deities there were said to have been "blasphemous," having existed "since the foundation of the world." At least some of these primal gods seem to have filtered down into later civilizations where they continued to be worshipped in various forms. One of these is thought to have been Dagon, although the original name of the deity is thought to have been something else. The name "Dagon" is, in fact, Semitic, coming from the root "dag" meaning "little fish." The name indicates a fish-shaped god that swam in the primordial chaos. Later it was represented as an ambiguous deity—half-man/half-fish. There was reputedly a temple to Dagon in the city of Azotus, mid-way between Gaza and Jaffa, that was eventually cleared of idols by Judas Maccabeus. Nevertheless, the cults of Dagon continued (some historians argue that the deity was later transformed into a fertility god) and that it was known to the Phoenicians during early Biblical times. Dagon was probably not the only deity that passed down across the years—others older and just as dark may have featured in the early mythologies of many ancient peoples, forging a connection with what were perhaps the earliest days of Humankind. The thought that ancient gods were also waiting, still worshipped by the survivors of lost continents, was an even more terrifying prospect for many people. Such gods are both monstrous and inhuman in physical shape—writhing masses of tentacles; towering misshapen beings with pseudopodic extremities hanging from their bulbous heads and with bulging and malevolent eyes, reflecting Blavatsky's assertion that all previous races on the earth before Mankind did not even look vaguely human.

Funan and Angkor Wat

As stories of lost cities and speculation regarding the civilizations that built them began to proliferate from around the mid-19th century onwards. For example, the discovery of the Khmer kingdom of Funan and the city of Angkor Wat deep in the Cambodian jungles by the explorer Henry Mahout in 1860, as well as tales of other lost cities hidden by the Amazonian rainforest (so interest and excitement about ancient cultures began to develop). Far from being something on the fringes of science, the idea of these mysterious cultures was now moving to the centre of the human imagination.

The Great Old Ones

The heady mix of sunken continents, vanished kingdoms and civilizations, subterranean worlds, ancient gods, and slumbering powers inflamed the imaginations of dreamers and writers all across the world. Many of these themes surface in Lovecraft's work. The Great Old Ones, beings that once dominated the earth, lurk just beyond human consciousness waiting for a time when they can return such as "when the stars are right." Given his interest in astronomy, Lovecraft would have been aware of celestial movements and could have incorporated them into his fiction. One of the times when these ancient deities were at the height of their powers was when the star Algol was in the ascendancy. Lovecraft would also have known that the name Algol derives from the Arabic al-ghul and that it was widely known as "the demon star." These incredibly ancient beings were worshipped by degenerates living in remote rural areas or in squalid quarters of the larger towns, who could from time to time contact them or whom they could control (usually through dreams) to do their bidding. Knowledge of their ways was usually too much for the human mind to cope with and those who trafficked with them were usually rendered insane by the contact.

R'lyeh

In Lovecraft's tales, Atlantis or Lemuria becomes the sunken city of R'lyeh, submerged somewhere under the South Pacific. Here, amid the ruins of an incredibly old civilization, the great god Cthulhu lies slumbering, waiting to be awakened. This powerful deity contacts its devotees—amongst whom are those already mad or weak-minded—through the power of dreams and visions as they sleep. Cthulhu is also related to the ancient god Dagon, of Semitic antiquity, and controls the Deep Ones—strange half-man, half-fish creatures who inhabit the decaying town of Innsmouth on the New England coast. Other Great Old Ones lie further away in the deeps amongst the stars or in another reality between the stars, making their presence known in oblique ways to those who seek them. Yet others dwell in the recesses under the earth, hidden away in deep woodlands or below crumbling churches, appearing only briefly from pits and gloomy cellars to terrify the narrator of the tale. Throughout many of the stories, these entities are served by degenerate inbred families, perhaps reflecting Lovecraft's personal concerns about his own family. Many of these are the descendants of ancient peoples who initially worshipped such beings in times long past and who are carrying on that tradition into the present day. The idea of mysterious races, working to destroy the reasonable, sane world is central to Lovecraft's fiction.

The Necronomicon and Other Magical Texts

Another major element in Lovecraft's work is the books that are from time to time consulted by characters throughout his stories and one in particular—The Necronomicon. These ancient tomes, which are sought by the followers of ancient gods and by scholars alike, contain terrible histories of the world as well as rituals and incantations for directly contacting these Elder beings. Foremost of these was The Necronomicon—the Book of Dead Names (although this can also be rendered as The Laws of the Dead), which was apparently a Latinised translation of an older work originating in the Middle East. The title of this volume first appeared as a reference in the short story The Hound (published in 1923) but later resurfaced as a major work in many of his other, much longer tales—for example, The Dunwich Horror. So central to the growing Cthulhu Mythos was this "abhorred and blasphemous tome" and so detailed were some of the quotations from it that many readers began to wonder if indeed such a book actually existed, and how Lovecraft somehow had access to it. Indeed, certain publishers have produced "facsimile" editions of a book purporting to be The Necronomicon, which have been eagerly bought by fans and followers of the Lovecraftian tradition. Copies of this text were supposedly held by various respected bodies across the world—always locked away in their "forbidden books" section—from the British Museum to the Vatican Library. But did such an "abhorred and terrible" book actually exist? And if not, what were the sources for the idea that it did?

Abdul Alhazerad

In its original form, the book is attributed to Abdul Alhazerad (born around 712 in the city of Tabez), a poet from Senna, Yemen and was allegedly penned during the time of the Ommiade Caliphs, around 730 A.D. Alhazarad supposedly journeyed into the Roba al-Khaliyeh or, Empty Quarter of the Southern Arabian Desert. There he found a nameless city (sometimes given as Irem of the Pillars) built by a vanished race and housing unimaginable horrors, which drove his mind over the edge of sanity. When he returned to civilization, he attempted to set down much of what he had seen and learned in a text that he entitled Al-Azif. The name comes from the sound made by nocturnal insects which, in Arab folklore, is also thought to be the conversations of (or the howling of)demons and spirits. An alternative title which has sometimes been accorded to it is the Revelation of the Djinn or The Secrets of Demons. After penning this terrible work, Alhazarad was allegedly torn to pieces in the marketplace of a bustling town in full view of everyone, by unseen and hostile demons. His text, however, survived and passed through various hands until it was translated into a Greek edition by Theodorus Philataes of Constantinople.

Olaus Wormius

The name Necronomicon was not given to the book until its translation into Latin by a figure whom Lovecraft identifies as a 13th century Dominican monk named Olaus Wormius, who also added a preface displaying a deep occult knowledge. Here, Lovecraft makes a slight error, because he is writing of an actual historical person who was most certainly not a monk nor did he live during the 13th century. Although certainly an antiquarian, Olaus Wormius wrote on medical matters during the 17th century when he spent his time as a student, attached to the Danish court. Actually, he is thought to have had absolutely no interest in the occult and so to name him as a translator of the darkly magical Necronomicon is something of a mistake. According to Lovecraft and several other writers following in his wake, the book was formally banned in 1232 by direct orders of Pope Gregory IX (1227–1241), founder of the Papal Inquisition and a fierce and implacable opponent of heresy. The idea that the Pope would denounce a book compiled by a Dominican friar (or indeed that Wormius would be a Dominican) seems a little odd. The Dominicans were staunch protectors of religious orthodoxy and although Gregory favoured the Franciscans, he was also sympathetic to the Dominican Order, making them the chief Order of the Inquisition. Their nickname in this role was "Domini Canes"—the "Hounds of God." It therefore seems slightly strange that a Dominican should be so readily prepared to translate such a "blasphemous book"—but this is a minor issue.

Dr. John Dee

Using the Wormius translation, several other editions of the book are alleged to have appeared in Europe. One, said to have been circulating in the 15th century, was a German "black-letter text" whilst the other, supposedly dating from the 17th century, was probably Spanish. Some writers have also alleged that the celebrated Elizabethan magus, Dr. John Dee, possessed an English copy, which he kept well hidden. Most copies of the text, however, were said to have been destroyed—the last of them perishing in a fire in the studio of the crazed artist Richard Upton Pickman, in the story Pickman's Model. Lovecraft's friend, Frank Belknap Long, was said to possess a copy of it, from which he reprinted fragments (his copy was said to be incomplete) after Lovecraft's death. But was there even a book that might closely approximate the terrible volume lurking somewhere in the world? Or did the entire volume simply emerge from Lovecraft's fevered and brooding imagination?

From earliest times, ancient texts with magical overtones had been circulating in the scholarly world. A number of these had initially come from Egypt and, although supposedly Christian, had distinctly Pagan overtones. Most of them had to do with magic and the summoning of spirits for either healing or protection from harm. Some were charms designed for transcriptions to amulets. Other texts, originating in the Middle East, concerned themselves with astrology and astronomy. Some were the utterances and lore of the pre-Islamic kahins who often linked the destiny of individuals to the movements of celestial bodies.

Poeticon Astronomicon

It is thought that Lovecraft actually derived the name Necronomicon from the Poeticon Astronomicon, a poem concerning the stars written by the Roman writer, historian, and astronomer, Gaius Julius Hygiaus who lived in the first century B.C. This was a star atlas, detailing the constellations in their relation to mythology and showing the positions of certain individual stars. Its first known printing was in 1475 and was attributed to "Ferrera" about whom nothing is known. It was later reprinted in 1482 by Erhard Ratdolt in Venice, Italy. A mysterious and esoteric book, it may well have formed the basis for the idea of the Necronomicon. But there were others, too.

The Great Magical Papyrus of Paris

The Great Magical Papyrus of Paris, dating from the fourth century A.D. and housed in the Bibliotheque Nationale in France is one of the more terrifying manuscripts, which date from earliest times. It gives instructions for the drawing out and control of demons and is one of the earlier documents of exorcism. Certain paragraphs have been added to it in Coptic Egyptian in order to add a more Christian element—the Names by which the Divine can be addressed for instance—but the entire document has a Pagan feel to it. There are also references, contained therein to astrological and astronomical "houses" detailing a connection with the celestial spheres. It provided a codex of the names of demons and the utterances by which they should be called. It was widely regarded as a "dangerous text."

Yao Sabaoth

Intriguingly, the Papyrus gives a list of names, which can be used in the commanding of demons. Some of these names are echoed in other papyri from later periods—most notably a magical papyrus attributed to Diokoros of Aphrodos (also an exorcism and protective spell), held in the Cairo Museum. One of the Names, which occurs in many of the Coptic manuscripts, is that of that of "Yao Sabaoth" or "Yao Sabao" which is used as both a summoner and protector. It is unclear exactly who or what this entity was—it may be a secret Name for God (and there is every indication that it may have been amongst the later Egyptian Copts) or it may have related to another being entirely. However, its seemingly close connection to Lovecraft's Yog Sothoth—the Opener of the Way (Who is the Gatekeeper and the Gate) cannot be ignored. Indeed, the names of some of Lovecraft's gods—especially Yog Sothoth and Nyarlathotep (servant of the blind, idiot god Azathoth)—have an Egyptian "feel" to them and are suggestive of some of the ancient entities which emerge within the early Egyptian Christian and Coptic literature.

The Book of Black Earth

Legends concerning extremely ancient and blasphemous books were not, however, solely confined to the Middle East. Some tomes were featured in the folklore of Western Europe as well. The most persistent of these legends came from Celtic lore and referred to a fragmentary volume known as The Book of Black Earth that seems to have surfaced in Scotland. Exactly what this text was is not altogether clear, but variants of it seem to have appeared at certain times throughout Scottish history. For example, a version of it was supposed to have been copied down from the lips of Highland chailleachs (witches), by the Wolf of Badenoch Alexander Stewart, (1343–1405) at some time during the 14th century. It was transcribed either at Lochindorb, the Wolf's castle in the Highlands, or in the great stone circle at Kingussie in Speyside (now demolished). Although dating from the 14th century, The Book of Black Earth was said to reflect a much older and extremely dark knowledge, which had been passed down orally since prehistoric times. It mentioned dark gods worshipped amongst the early Celts but whose names had been practically forgotten, even in the medieval period. Disputes arise, however, as to the format of the text or as to what happened to it after the death of the Wolf. Some authorities state that the volume was only a fragmentary manual (there are even assertions that at least part of it was written on portions of flayed human skin) and that the majority of it was destroyed during the "reign" of the Wolf's brother, the self-styled Robert IV of Scotland (who acted as Regent for the infant James I of Scotland who was in captivity in England at the time). Other sources claim that portions of it formed the basis of the most celebrated of all Scottish grimoires The Red Book of Appin that was reputedly held by the Stewarts of Appin until the 1800s. Fragments of it also allegedly surfaced in Scotland during the late 17th and early 18th centuries, during the period of the persecutions of the Covenanters. They referred to it as "The Wicked Bible" and placed it in the possession of one of their chief persecutors—John Graham, Earl of Claverhouse and later Viscount Dundee. There are assertions that portions of it exist, somewhere in Scotland, even to this day.

Crom Cruach

Scotland was not the only part of the Celtic world to have such an allegedly vile tome. In Ireland, too, fragmentary texts reputedly existed, allegedly dating from shortly after the arrival of St. Patrick on the island. Most of these were said to deal with the worship of a specific god, supposedly embodied in some of the standing stones which dotted the landscape and which was being increasingly overthrown by the followers of the Saint. This was the Crom Cruach, the Bowed God of the Mounds. The Crom was a particularly bloodthirsty god, who regularly demanded human sacrifice and who was reputedly originally worshipped by the Sidhe (the People of the Mounds) and later by certain druidic factions amongst the Celts. Some accounts describe him as an exceptionally powerful wizard who met with Patrick shortly after the Saint landed in Ireland. Others describe widespread and gory sacrifice to the god during the reign of a legendary Irish pre-Christian king—Tigernmas—during whose reign the Druids flourished and stones were worshipped.

Magh Sleact

The central place of worship was believed to have been Magh Sleact (or Sleaght)—the "Plain of Adoration or Prostration," now Tullyhaw in County Cavan. Here a central stone, sheathed in gold, was surrounded by a circle of twelve lesser stones. This suggested a solar connection and, there is a legend that, The Crom originally came from the stars with twelve helpers, each one a bloody and ferocious god in its own right. When the Blessed Patrick arrived at the site, however, legends state that the Crom Cruach sank into the ground before him. In other versions, he smote the stone circle with his crozier, destroying most of the twelve surrounding stones. The central Cruach, however, he was unable to destroy. As Christianity began to spread throughout the region, the stone was removed and supposedly disappeared. It was carried across Lough MacNean and stands today in a corner of a field outside the village of Belcoo in Southwest Fermanagh. The stone is actually just over six feet in height with a concave top and long incisions in its sides. Local tradition says that the Crom was a fertility god and into the top of it was placed the first-born of the year, where it was ritually decapitated and its blood allowed to run down the sides of the idol and into the earth to ensure plentiful crops for the following year. The barbarous Crom Cruach was widely known throughout Ireland and appears under a number of other names—the Bloody Crescent (symbolized by the horns of a crescent moon, again emphasising its solar connections), as rig-iodol-hEireeann (the king idol of Ireland), and as the Cenn Cruaic (the Bloody Head) in the Tripartite Life of St. Patrick. In this incarnation—of a bleeding head—it is supposed to have divulged ancient secrets that were written down and passed into a corpus of knowledge that formed the basis of a blasphemous tome.

Culdees

An ancient legend tells of how certain sections of the Culdees (an esoteric and aesthetic Celtic Order of monks formed in the 8th century by St. Mael Ruaine of Tallaght near Dublin. The name is an Anglicised corruption of the words Ceili Dei—the Friends of God) had in its possession, the Bleeding Head of the Crom that uttered strange and terrible accounts of the origins of the world and about pre-Christian Ireland that the monks dutifully wrote down. This lore they kept hidden from the eyes of mortal men. The legend was probably no more than malicious rumour, introduced by the English monks who supplanted the Irish Order after the 12th century but there are stories of ancient texts, dating from that time and attributed to the Culdees in both Irish and Scottish folklore. (Many of the Culdees eventually fled from Ireland to Scotland, where they founded a monastic settlement near Dunkeld.) The stories of their mystical literature survived long after the last of the Order had died out in Ireland, around the 16th century.

Druid Library

Although the early Celts wrote very little down, there were also Irish tales of infamous collections of works, which stretched back into early times. One of these was the rumoured Druid Library. In 1186, a famous Irish preacher and exorcist, St. Ambrose O'Coffey, came to the monastery of St. Columcille's Seat at Magilligan in North Derry to die. With him he brought a collection of extremely ancient manuscripts that was reputedly the greatest collection of works on witchcraft and evil worship anywhere in Western Europe. Some texts were allegedly written on tree bark, others on dried human skin. A number were copied by the monks onto parchment for storage in the monastery. After St. Ambrose's death, the library was kept at Magilligan to prevent it from falling into the wrong hands. St. Columcille's Seat was destroyed in 1203 by Donnell McLaughlin—a chieftain of Donegal—and "certain foreigners" (probably half-Viking raiders) but there is no mention as to what became of the library.

St. Columcille's Chest

Tradition says that the library was split up and hidden before the attack. Indeed a connected legend says that part of it was secreted in a chest—known as St. Columcille's Chest—and hidden in a cave somewhere along the coast. What became of the remainder of the Library is unknown. In the late 18th century, the legend continues, workmen building the Mussenden Temple on the estate of Frederick Hervey, the Earl-Bishop of Downhill, discovered the chest and brought it to Hervey himself. He managed to open it and found part of the contents still intact. What he read there disturbed him so greatly that he left the area, and afterwards could not sleep in a house for more than two consecutive nights. He died in 1803, reportedly a broken man. The chest was removed to Derry (where Hervey was Bishop) and has disappeared from the annals of history. That is the story, although there have been mentions of fragments of the Druid Library surfacing elsewhere. The ground on which the monastery stood is now a field—no trace of the structure remains—but is still treated with suspicion by some locals.

Viking Magic

As well as these ancient Celtic texts, the folklore of the West was also dominated by stories of books of Viking magic. In Celtic thinking (and in the thinking of other ancient peoples) evil and darkness resided in the North and so it seemed logical that the Scandinavian countries should be home to some of the blackest magics. The ferociousness of Viking attacks on Celtic settlements, of course, did not help matters much and it was thought that the lands to the North were frozen, bleak places in which the Devil and grim old gods still dwelt. There were rumoured to be Black Schools existing amongst the Viking communities in places such as Iceland where sorcerers were schooled in enchantments and witchcrafts of the vilest kind. Curiously, many of these schools were reputedly attached to Christian establishments.

Jon Arnason

The Scandinavian folklorist Jon Arnason, who published a collection of folktales on ghosts and magic in Iceland in 1862, mentions a particularly nefarious Black School that existed somewhere in the country (although he gives no specific location for it) that circulated a number of ancient books and grimoires throughout Scandinavia. There are also many tales from Ireland, England, Wales, and Scotland concerning Runebooks and Omenbooks which were said to contain witchcraft "of the darkest kind" in circulation throughout much of Western Europe and which hinted at gruesome deities that had been worshipped in the Northern lands since earliest times.

Could any of these books—Middle Eastern, Celtic, or Scandinavian—been a basis for the "abhorred" Necronomicon? It is impossible to know for certain but at least some of them might have served as the inspiration for that tome.

Apart from the Necronomicon, a number of other titles continue to surface within the confines of the Cthulhu Mythos. The Book of Dzyan transcribed by H.P. Blavatsky has already been mentioned but there were others—many of which were added to the Mythos by writers other than Lovecraft himself. A number of these may have had their origins in the literature produced around the medieval as well as in the early days of the Enlightenment as scholars were trying to replace these beliefs with myths of former days.

Malleus Malificarium

From the late 15th century onwards, the interest in witchcraft began to reach new heights. The reason for this was, arguably, the writing and circulation of one book which enjoyed the seal of Papal authority. This was the Malleus Malificarium (The Hammer of the Witch), which had been commissioned by Pope Innocent VIII (1484–1492). Similar to previous Pontiffs, Innocent was concerned about the continuance of "heresies" in remote rural areas—particularly in parts of Germany—which still contained elements of old Pagan worship. Although essentially a relatively weak Pope overall, Innocent was determined to deal with these heresies as soon as he took up Papal office. Almost immediately he convened a Council, which appointed two respected Dominican theologians to investigate the problem in the Hertz, Mainz, Trier, and Treves areas of Germany and Austria where it was considered that such heresies were at their height.

Jacobus Sprenger

The first of these investigators was Jacobus (James) Sprenger (1430–1494). Sprenger had been born in Basle and had joined the Dominican Order there, showing early promise as a scholar. In 1480, he was appointed as Professor of Theology at the University of Cologne and was later appointed Inquisitor Extraordinary for the Province of Mainz, Treves, and Cologne. His investigative partner was Heinrich Kramer (1430–1505) who had been born in Schletstadt in Alsace. In 1474, he was appointed as Chief Inquisitor in the Tyrol, where he earned himself something of a reputation as a "hardliner" against alleged witchcraft, but he also worked in Bohemia and Moravia. His appointment was to "give teeth" to the investigation because Sprenger had no real experience in legally persecuting Witches. And there is little doubt that Kramer had a deep interest in witchcraft, for in 1485, he drew up a damning treatise on the subject, which afterwards was incorporated into the Malleus. Kramer had also worked as an Inquisitor in Innsbruck but had been banished from the city by the local bishop who referred to him as "a bigoted old fool." Nevertheless, he was the person that Innocent wanted and so was appointed to investigation with Sprenger.

The book that the two Dominicans produced was to complement a Papal Bull entitled Summis desiderantes, which Innocent issued on 5th December 1484. In it, he attacked the heresies in Germany and instructed the German Inquisition to condemn and punish alleged instances of witchcraft with the utmost severity. The book that Sprenger and Kramer produced became a witch-hunters manual, detailing all sorts of horrors, which the Ungodly could commit. This book, with its Papal backing, was to set the tone for many other such volumes.

Demonoltria Libri Tres

There is little doubt that the French Catholic priest Nicholas Remy (1534–1600) was influenced by this terrible work. He published his own text Demonoltria Libri Tres (Demonology Book III) which for many years, became a textbook for those persecutingwitches and the main source for the study of the works of Satan on Earth. Nor was it only officers of the Catholic Church who produced these monstrous tomes on witchcraft and on the persecution of witches.

Jean Bodin

The Calvinist French witch-hunter Jean Bodin (1530–1596) also penned several treatises on the matter, advocating the use of torture, even in the cases of invalid persons and children. In order to justify such horrendous views, such people detailed the rituals and blasphemous incantations, used by alleged witches to fulfil their evil designs. Such horrors presented in manuscript form, terrified and sickened those who read them and some of these treatises were to perhaps establish the basis of some of the terrible volumes of the Cthulhu Mythos.

Compendium Maleficarum

It was a relatively unknown priest from Milan, however, who was to produce the most terrible book. In 1608, Francesco Maria Guazzo produced a catalogue of terrors, which he entitled the Compendium Maleficarum (A Compendium of Witches). This would give, in graphic and terrible detail, the powers and practices of Witches and depraved people who had sold their souls to the Devil. It shocked the early modern world with its explicitness. Guazzo's work has never really been equalled for the sheer terror it created in the minds of European scholars and it firmly established what was to become known as the "witch craze" in the religious mind of the day.

This was a craze that was to last throughout the late 17th and early 18th centuries until the birth of what became known as the Age of Reason or the Enlightenment, when science came to the fore and the old superstitions began to fade away. Even then, the interest in the occult did not appear to die out. The thinkers of this time were anxious to explain away some of the superstitions that had gripped their ancestors or to place them within a new scientific context, so as to better understand them. This led to a plethora of books, combining what had formerly been considered to be witchcraft with science.

Alchemy

In a sense, magic always had its scientific and philosophical side. Alchemy—the art of transforming or creating matter from other elements—had always been considered as a magical operation. It would, however, form the basis of recognizable science. Philosophy, too, was connected into magical thought. From earliest times, the Gnostics had taught salvation through knowledge.

Gnosticism

The origins of Gnostic belief are unclear and are still a matter for research and debate. Nor was there any single universal doctrine in Gnosticism—the term was used to denote disparate groups of thinkers who shared a generally common philosophical outlook—but the basic tenets of the belief contended that human salvation lay not through faith and obedience of God's Laws (as the Christian Churches taught) but rather through an understanding of the underlying mysteries and secrets of the Universe itself. This drew the seeker closer to the Monad (the One), which lay at the centre of all things surrounded by lesser emanations known as Archons. Those who gained such knowledge became beings of considerably greater power than those who did not. Lovecraft's fiction mirrors some of the Gnostic beliefs.

Azothoth

In Lovecraft's books, at the centre of the Universe, the mad, blind god Azathoth seethes and bubbles whilst around him, lesser entities come and go.

Certain individuals attempt to make contact with some of the lesser brings and ultimately with the central deity itself, which usually sends them mad. The fits in with some Gnostic thinking that the Monad was essentially "unknowable" and that seeking out too much knowledge about it would ultimately destroy the seeker. The finite minds of mortals were not equipped to handle the infinite.

Gnostic writings influenced many seekers during what became known as the Age of Enlightenment. The pursuit of esoteric knowledge was now closely linked to the Divine and those engaged in such pursuits used this as a justification for their researches.

Raymond Lully

No man embodied such a quest more than the medieval figure of Raymond Lully (Ramon Lul) whose thinking enjoyed something of a renaissance during this period. Lully seemed to successfully combine the scientific search with that of the supernatural journey—combining the scientific with the mystical—and this appealed to many of the Enlightened thinkers.

Born in Palma, Majorca somewhere between 1232 and 1236, Lully (Lul or Llul) became heavily involved in the Christian Church as a missionary in the Middle East. However, he was also a man with a curious and philosophical mind and the writings and debates of the early Arabs fascinated him. He became interested in the writings of the early Christians, particularly Gnostic branches of them that were to be found in the Arab lands. He also became interested in alchemy and astronomy. In these times alchemy was considered a sin because, through experimentation (and the supposed creation and transformation of substances) it was deemed to tamper with the order of things that God Himself had established. Astronomy, too was considered as a sinful practice because it was thought to query and explain the order that God had created in the Firmament. In order to protect themselves from Church attention (this was the age of the Inquisition) many alchemists and astronomers wrote down their experiments and findings in code, usually in some mystical or quasi-religious format. Thus the alchemist's literature is littered with accounts of strange journeys, of bizarre landscapes and encounters, unnatural births and of "alchemyical weddings," all seeking to conceal research and works that individual practitioners had carried out. Lully was no different. Some of his works—treatises, books—are couched in obscure terms . It was the fashion to try and "decode" some of these writings in order (it was thought) to discover and understand esoteric truths. Lully took his theories one step further. Greatly influenced by the astronomical and mathematical works of the Arabs (he had intently studied and learned Arabic), he was convinced that knowledge could be "created" using mathematical and scientific formulae. In order to prove this, he constructed a set of machines, that could "create" permutations of ideas which were fed into them and which were then supplemented by Lully's own thought and mathematical equations.

Ars Magna

The result was a massive work known as the Ars Magna, which was reputedly Lully's greatest work. It is a set of combinations of ideas linked by philosophical and mathematical equations—many of them in diagrammatic form. Some of these were said to represent stellar constellations and a few of them bear a resemblance to ancient symbols found amongst the Mound Builders of America. This led to a fevered speculation that perhaps Lully had discovered arcane secrets of the Universe which were known by some other more ancient peoples and, as late as the 1930s, he was still being hailed as a great alchemist and occultist, almost as a forerunner of Madame Blavatsky—even though it appears that he had always opposed the occult and saw himself more as an early scientist. When Lully died in Tunis in 1315, he was reputed to have left behind a series of treatises, which were filled with esoteric knowledge and claimed to describe the ultimate secrets of Creation. A number of these were believed to have turned up during the Age of Enlightenment but have been subsequently proved to be forgeries. Nevertheless, the idea of an ancient civilization that had some kind of advanced knowledge and which was connected to certain other cultures in the world gained widespread interest, mainly through his work. Books, interpreting his work and the work of other alchemists and philosophers—including the works of the English alchemist, occultist, and follower of Johannes Kepler, Robert Fludd (1574–1634)—proliferated throughout the 18th and early 19th centuries. Such works were highly popular in respected circles—almost the Da Vinci Codes of their day.

The interest in ancient magic, however, hasn't gone away. Indeed, if anything, the emerging new scientific philosophies had increased investigation into it—particularly into ritual magic and the use of incantations. In the 17th, 18th and into part of the 19th centuries, grimoires (books of spells and ritual) began circulating widely in Western Europe. Many of these claimed great antiquity, stretching back to the early Middle East.

The Key of Solomon

The greatest of these books was allegedly, The Key of Solomon, which was later split into two books—The Greater and Lesser Keys. This was attributed to the celebrated Biblical king who was famed for his wisdom and also for his command of demons and reputedly dated from the 1st century A.D. From this single source, many other grimoires had their origin as students copied what were supposedly fragments of the original work. In 1350, Pope Innocent VI certainly ordered a volume known as The Book of Solomon to be destroyed but whether this was indeed the Key, as some students claim, is open to question. A text named the Book of Solomon was condemned by the Church around 1559 but copies of it were widely circulated amongst scholars in Europe at the time. A Greek version of this work dating from somewhere between 1100 and 1200 is said to be housed in the British Museum in London. Excerpts, directly copied form the Key, would form the basis of another grimoire in wide circulation during the 18th century—The Secret of Secrets.

The Sacred Book of Abra-melin the Mage

Another celebrated grimoire was The Sacred Book of Abra-melin the Mage which gained some credibility in the late 19th century when an allegedly 14th century copy of it was "discovered" in the Biblioteque de L'Arsenal by the occultist S.L. McGregor Mathers, a member of the famous Order of the Golden Dawn (which was to gain some notoriety by including Aleister Crowley in its ranks). According to McGregor Mathers, this was a translation of a work of "potent power" which had been written by an ancient Hebrew magician named Abraham ben Simeon. This volume was widely circulated in Paris and London during the late 19th and early 20th centuries and still enjoys a certain status amongst many occultists.

Grimoire of Pope Honorious

A third major grimoire was perhaps incorrectly attributed to Pope Honorious III who occupied the Pontificate from 1216–1227. There is little to connect this old and frail Pontiff with the occult—most of his Papacy was concerned with the Fourth Lateran Council and proclaiming the Fifth Crusade. Nevertheless, the Grimoire of Pope Honorious was believed to be a potent and terrible book, directly transcribed either by the Pope himself or under his direction, from ancient Semitic texts, which formed part of the Kabbalah (a body of mystic Jewish literature that featured heavily in rabbinical magic). Its alleged Papal connections seemed to give it added status and so it circulated widely amongst scholars of the occult during the 18th century. It is still considered to be something of a magical text today.

Others were added to these main allegedly magical tomes. These additions were simply portions of the books which had been copied or which had been combined with portions from other works. Many of them contained incantations and recipes, couched in quasi-mystical language and augmented by geometric illustrations, which resembled ancient symbols found elsewhere in the world, which seemed to give them an added authenticity. Many had fanciful names—Le Grand Grimoire, The Red Dragon, The Black Pullet, the Book of Secrets, all claiming great antiquity which stretched back as far as ancient Egypt and beyond. Most of them were fraudulent, put together by lively and imaginative minds and their pedigree was extremely questionable.

Lovecraft and his correspondents would, in all probability, been well aware of the existence of such books and many others like them, both quasi-mystical and scientific. They fitted in well with the notion of esoteric knowledge left by former civilizations and avidly pursued by the Gnostics and those who came after them, as late as the 18th century. The creation of a corpus of ancient and blasphemous lore was in many ways, central to the Cthulhu Mythos with its emphasis on vanished gods and lost civilizations.

Lovecraft and others picked up on some of these books and several of them also created their own in order add to the Mythos and to give it credibility beyond the confines of horror literature. Each one was a "terrible and blasphemous" volume, full of arcane secrets, which could only be correctly interpreted by those with a certain knowledge. This held echoes of the scholars of the Enlightenment as they tried to break the hidden "codes" of the alchemists. Many of his correspondents would send their ideas for "new" books to Lovecraft in his Providence retreat, and from time to time, he would incorporate them into his own fiction.

Book of Eibon

The most sinister of these additions, according to Lovecraft himself, was the sinister Book of Eibon, although no details about such a monstrous volume are available. This seems to be some sort of "fragmentary" work although no real detail about it is given. The title of the book was actually dreamed up by one of Lovecraft's writer-correspondents, Clark Ashton Smith, although it was rumoured to have been based on an actual book. In the last years of his life, Lovecraft declared that there were two versions of this work—the Norman-French Livre d'Eibon (The Diary of Alonzo Typer) and a slightly later translation—the Liber Ivonis (The Haunter of the Dark). The translation from Latin into 13th century French was, according to Smith, completed by a monk named Gaspard du Nord. Smith was to make reference to the work himself in his tale Ubbo Sathla and was to refer to Eibon (who allegedly initially compiled the text) as a Hyperborean sorcerer in his story The Door Into Saturn.

Cultes des Ghoules

Another of the "abhorred books" was Cultes des Ghoules by the Comte d' Erlette. This volume arose out of a connection to Lovecraft's friend August Derleth, whose ancestors were French and were named Erlette. No specific details are given about this volume, but several alleged "pages" of it have been published as part of the materials for role-playing games in both Europe and the U.S. They seem to reveal a book, which is little more than a traditional French grimoire of possibly an 18th century printing.

De Vermis Mysteriis

A further addition to this catalogue of horrific books was Ludvig Prinn's De Vermis Mysteriis (Mysteries of the Worm), which is mentioned several times in Lovecraft's work. Prinn was reputedly an elderly occultist who was burned at the stake as a witch after compiling the volume. In fact, the title of the book—Mysteries of the Worm—and its author are creations of Lovecraft's correspondent Robert Bloch. Lovecraft, however, gave the book its Latin title and used it in his stories The Shadow Out of Time, The Diary of Alonzo Typer, and The Haunter of the Dark.

People of the Monolith

Another of Lovecraft's correspondents, the famous Robert E. Howard (creator of Conan the Barbarian amongst others), created the book of poetry People of the Monolith and its insane author, Justin Geoffrey. Geoffrey was a Baudelairean poet who had travelled across Europe and had seen many strange things, especially in the area surrounding the Balkans, the knowledge of which had driven him mad. He died confined in an asylum. Howard was to make reference to the book and to Geoffrey in his short Lovcraftian story The Black Stone and was to quote from one of his poems in best Lovecraft tradition:

> They say foul beings of Old Times still lurk,
> In dark, forgotten corners of the world,
> And gates still gape to loose, on certain nights,
> Shapes pent in Hell.

Lovecraft himself was to briefly mention Geoffrey in one of his own stories—The Thing on the Doorstep.

Unaussprechlichen Kulten

Howard, who corresponded regularly with Lovecraft, is also credited with the creation of yet another volume. This is the Unaussprechlichen Kulten of the alleged German occultist Fredrick von Junzt. Not much detail is given concerning von Junzt except that he had made a study of ancient and terrible cults, which had survived since earliest times. He had catalogued them into a volume, which he called Nameless Cults. Shortly after its completion he was strangled and mauled by an unseen demon whilst in his locked chamber. The work is probably a creation of Howard's (although some scholars state that this volume more than any other might have its origins in reality) although Lovecraft balked at his original suggestion for its title—Ungennte heidenthume. It was August Derleth who came up with the title, although his command of High German leaves something to be desired (the name literally means Unpronounceable Cults. Lovecraft, however, liked the idea and gave it at least three editions—Dusseldorf (1839), Bridewell, and a heavily expurgated version published by the Golden Goblin Press in 1909.

The Pnakotic Manuscripts

Last but not least amongst the texts was one of Lovecraft's own creations—The Pnakotic Manuscripts. References to these texts were widely scattered throughout his stories—indeed they were second only to The Necronomicon in their number of mentions—although it is unclear as to exactly what they were. They are described as "fragmentary" but it is not clear as to whether they were scrolls, chapters of a single volume, or pieces of pottery. What is known is that they were pre-human and, according to Lovecraft, "inconceivably ancient." They had existed, he went on, since "before the advent of Man." He further describes them as being "mouldy" but gives no indication as to what form or material they might be.

The Seven Cryptical Books of Hsan

To this basic corpus of foul literature, Lovecraft's other correspondents and followers have added further blasphemous works. These were such terrible creations as The Eltdown Shards, the creation of Richard F. Searight, which have appeared in numerous Lovecraft pastiches as well as a couple of Lovecraft's own tales—The Shadow out of Time and The Diary of Alonzo Typer. There are also a one of Lovecraft's own creations—The Seven Cryptical Books of Hsan briefly mentioned in The Dream Quest of Unknown Kadath—together with the R'lyh text which has appeared in a number of Lovecraft-related fictions. Amongst this was mixed a good number of actual literature on Witchcraft and the supernatural. For example, Cotton Mather's Magalia Christi Americana (Picture in the house, Pickman's Model, The Unnameable, The Case of Charles Dexter Ward), and Wonders of the Invisible World, Pickman's Model; Giovanni Batista della Porta's De Furtivis Literarium Notis (The Dunwich Horror), Robert Fludd's Clavis Alchemae (Case of Charles Dexter Ward), and Joseph Glanville's Saducismus Trumphatus (The Festival) amongst others. The inclusion of actual devil books leant extra weight to the text and caused the reader to wonder whether any of the other grimoires might indeed exist. Indeed, many still wonder if there is not a grain of truth in the supposed existence of some of these books and perhaps there is. The inclusion of such tomes, whether real or imagined, has added a certain scholarly gravitas, which has characterised much of Lovecraft's work.

American Degenerate Communities

A third strand of Lovecraft's frightening fiction was drawn from American history. Much of his horror derives from the "degenerate, inbred families" who dwell in the remote areas of the New England landscape. Even the old stately families had their "decayed" branches with whom they seldom spoke and had little contact. Some of these ideas may, as already noted, have arisen from his mother's family—the Phillipses, but there may have been more. It was not for nothing that he chose rural New England as the setting for the majority of his most horrific tales. Even in the 20th century an air of degeneracy and decay underlay some parts of East Coast society.

The American East Coast had largely been settled by the British and the Dutch, two countries that were not always exactly friendly towards each other. Therefore settlement had been extremely patchy. Today we think of bustling cities and busy freeways all along the coast—the New England of the 17th, 18th and early 19th centuries was extremely different. It was largely a wilderness of forest and swamp into which people might venture never to be seen again. There were a number of thriving cities to be sure—New Amsterdam (now New York) and Boston—but in many cases, settlers lived away in squalid and (by present standards) primitive settlements in the rural wilds. The isolation and insularity of such settlements produced a reclusive and suspicious people and sometimes allowed strange practices and beliefs to flourish, relatively unchecked.

Salem Village

For instance, in the largely Puritan Bay Colony in Massachusetts centred on Salem Village, a witchcraft hysteria was able to take hold during 1692. In the narrow, "pressure-cooker" atmosphere of the Salem community (now a part of Danvers, Massachusetts) nineteen women were to be hanged on the bare Gallows Hill outside the village, whilst one elderly man was crushed to death between stones on the say-so of a number of frightened and hysterical girls. Although it has attracted a great deal of interest, Salem was not unique amongst the introspective and often claustrophobic communities along the New England coast. Indeed, many were more bizarre and stranger beliefs and ideals flourished there. Scattered all across the Eastern American seaboard and away from the main settlements, were communities of what we today might call "peripheral people"—those who were driven out of the main settlements for various reasons. For example, there were communities of Quakers, shunned by the Puritans who dwelt on the edges of the major towns or in the forest. But we also have accounts of some even stranger communities, well beyond what constituted "civilization." An example of these was the community of Dogtown.

Dogtown

On a grassy plateau overlooking Gloucester, Rockport, and Ipswich Bay in Massachusetts, a disparate and extremely motley collection of individuals had made their home in the mid-to-late 1600s. The settlement of Dogtown was reputedly found sometime in the 1660s by a number of widows of Gloucester seamen who had perished in the ocean. With no men to look after them, they had become a burden on the Gloucester society and were therefore cast out into the wild. Some of them were rather strange individuals and presumably this didn't help their case. They were to be joined by the widows of soldiers who were lost in the various campaigns along the coast and soon the settlement began to grow. It was named Dogtown because of the amount of feral dogs which wandered about the "streets" of the community unhindered. The place became a magnet for the strange and the peculiar—both women and men—who were not wanted or who did not fit into a recognizable society.

Many of them were either Irish or Scottish. Some of them were mentally unbalanced. They lived in sod huts or in falling wooden cabins along the side of a single track, which formed the community's main "street," or around an open patch of grass that served as Dogtown's main common. Contemporary accounts speak of old beldames sitting on this green, cackling or talking to themselves in a most alarming manner. The smell of the place, according to commentators, was nauseating. This strange settlement would continue for almost two hundred years and was only finally cleared out during the 1830s when the last residents had left. What evidence of the place that had been left was swiftly demolished.

Local people from the Gloucester, Newbury, and Ipswich areas, had already branded Dogtown as a "witch village" and categorically stated that the Black Arts were worked there under public gaze. It may be that some of these old women earned a meagre living telling fortunes for the sailor-folk of the area, or that they may have issued curses against their neighbours, and this was essentially equated within the wider community as a practicing of the dark sciences. The majority of the village's inhabitants were described as "crones" (evil-looking women)—some very old, some deformed, some generally hideous in aspect—and were strenuously avoided even when they ventured beyond Dogtown's limits. In her book Romances of a Nonagarian (1897), Newbury's Sarah Anna Emory conveys at least some suggestion of the eeriness with which the place was viewed:

"Dogtown was two miles distant from Crane-neck," she wrote. "After passing Dale's Pond, the road ran through thick woods. This, on some dark and stormy nights, was rather bug-a-booish." Dogtown, she goes on, was a place that most people tried to avoid, even during daylight hours, for fear of the raddled hags that dwelt there. In his History of Dogtown (1896), Charles Mann mentions several of them: Judy Rhines (Ryan), a fortune-teller who allegedly met with the Devil in the surrounding woods (she had a queerly deformed mouth—"teeth like a dog"—and went about mumbling to herself); Cornelius Finson or "Black Neil" (who had long teeth protruding from his upper lip); Tammy Younger (with a long beard similar to a man that stretched almost to her waist and a very "choice vocabulary"), and Juliet Hawe or Hawthorne who walked about as if in a daze, cackling and shrieking with laughter (whilst in this state she claimed to see visions of the future). There is also reference to an "Old Mother Pike," a massive, aggressive elderly woman, "filthy in both body and speech," who brewed potions for ailments and to induce love of a discharged soldier, Nathaniel Bourke—"Hellish Natty"—who had part o his face blown away, leaving a side of it little more than a skein of scorched and twisted flesh. He made hooch for a living and seems to have been continually drunk. Dogtown, Mann continues, was "a resort of buccaneers and low men" that only added to its queer and supernatural reputation. There were also stories of connections between some of the settlement's inhabitants and "strange societies" (usually connected to the Freemasons in some way), that had grown up in neighbouring communities such as Wellfleet (originally called Billingsgate) and Ipswich. The village may well have been America's first "witch colony" and its inhabitants were both feared and shunned because of their strange and frequently grotesque appearances and unacceptable ways. They were often linked to the demonic and primeval powers that dwelt deep in the forests and swamps.

Little Piney Fork Country

Similar settlements to Dogtown existed in other parts of America as well. In remote mountainous areas in North Carolina, Tennessee, Kentucky, and West Virginia, isolated communities with equal reputations and equally strange inhabitants might also be found. Some of these areas were very remote and isolated such as what was to become known as the Little Piney Fork Country in Kentucky. This was an area around Rutherford Mountain, near the Tennessee border—a region lying between the valleys of the Bear and Little Piney Fork rivers and which was, until as late as the 1940s, virtually inaccessible. This region formed part of Brake and Trundle Counties but few officials ever made their way up to the remote county seats. One traveller, passing through in the 1930s, described the region as being "nothing short of a wilderness." And yet, this "wilderness" was home to many families who had lived there, pretty much in isolation, since Revolutionary days—the Talbots, Nesbitts, Baylanches, Parrigans, and Panningeses amongst many others. Many such families claimed a direct and unbroken descent from Revolutionary veterans who had settled deep in this relatively inhospitable region. There is no record of many of these people because few census takers ventured into the Piney Fork Country in order to count its inhabitants and few births or deaths were registered at the county seat. In fact for the year 1910, no real census records exist for the families living between Squaw Creek and the Mount Gilead area and there are no accounts of the formal establishment of a school at Coonsfork although one certainly existed "at the end of a dirt road that was too narrow for any vehicle except a horse" in the 1930s.

Waterfall

The main settlement in the area seems to have been Waterfall, a small town, but there were allegedly other villages hidden away in hollows and valleys, which considered themselves to be "self sufficient" and had little dealings with the outside world. These were communities that had "their own ways," where shootings and murders were common but which dispensed their own form of "folk justice." For example, the brutal murder of Jarvis Trunk and his sister Mary Ellen at their remote cabin at Bat Cliff Mountain in Brake County in 1886 was "solved" by the "folk hanging" of Bronston Nesbitt—who was quite probably guilty—without formal recourse to the authorities. This was also a place of intense superstition and supernatural fears. As late as the 1940s, few people would pass near an old hog wallow known as the Devil's Hollow for fear of encountering a "headless" man-bat who lived there. Others avoided certain dirt roads and trails for fear of "boogers and haints" and an area of Rutherford Mountain was widely known as the "Booger Hole" because of something that dwelt deep in a cave. This was said to be a fearsome creature that grabbed passers-by on the lonely mountain tracks and was said to have existed there since earliest times. The more cynical stated that it was no more than an old story, designed to keep folks away from illegal moonshining operations up on the mountain. There were however, also tales of "Indian stones"—great rocks that might have been moved by glaciers or volcanic upheavals but which had a certain mystery and awe about them. These, it was said, had been raised by spirits back in the Indian times and that certain tribes had worshipped there, revering old gods, which had once lived in the forest and mountaintops. Such stones were also places to be avoided.

Nor was the Piney Fork region of Kentucky unique. Other remote and self sufficient communities existed all through various mountain areas. In the Smokies for example, there were many tales of communities which shied away from general contact and which maintained their own laws and ways. This was the country of the granny women—mountain midwifes and healers who served as local doctors but whose powers actually bordered on witchcraft according to the mountain folks. There were a few famous instances of supposed witchcraft amongst them.

Granny Bacon

In 1923, an elderly woman whose name was given as Granny Bacon (a local woman from Black Mountain) was reputedly brought to court in Asheville, North Carolina for poisoning a youngster with "deadly yarbs" (herbs) in an attempt to cure a fever. The judge actually ordered the jury to acquit her, as he was unsure as to whether it would reach an unbiased decision concerning a granny woman on whom so many people depended. This was also a region that tried for many years to resist the Mann Act in 1910 (a piece of legislation—the White Slave Traffic Act, but more commonly known as the Mann Act after James Robert Mann—to standardize a legal age of consent independently of the various Sates because in many mountain communities young girls were often married before they were 14 years of age). Whilst we may stand aghast at this today, such things were considered to be "mountain ways" and not to be interfered with by legislators. This opposition led to rumours and legends (most of them completely unfounded) regarding the mountain people and their societies—the most common one being that such places fostered and encourage inbreeding as the limited numbers of families, locked away in their mountain fastness, bred amongst each other. There were tales too of mental retardation and physically hideous monsters, which resulted in such unions. Whilst most of this might have been untrue, the stories were extremely widespread and in many cases, were accepted as absolute fact.

Yarb Doctors and Conjure Men

In the early 20th century, such areas remained steadfastly superstitious. These were areas where the granny women, the "yarb doctors," and "conjure men" still held sway. In the Dutch and British settlements in places such as Pennsylvania, such people were known by the German term hexmeister. Such practices were a hodgepodge of Indian spells, Biblical or "Hebrew" incantations, and beliefs that had been brought from Europe. Many of these were collected into a single volume by an itinerant preacher who travelled through various mountain regions, speaking with hermits, hexmeisters, and the inhabitants of isolated communities and writing down their charms and spells. His name was John George Hohman and he was active in many mountain areas between the years 1802 and 1857.

Der Lange Verborgne Freund

In 1820 he published the book under the title Der Lange Verborgne Freund (The Long Hidden Friend) which became translated into The Long Lost Friend.) This became one of the main Bibles of "powwowing" and was extremely popular in many parts of New England during the 1920s when Lovecraft was writing. The book was a collection of charms and incantations, which were said to cure and protect against all kinds of ailments and fevers that afflicted the mountain folks. Although The Long Lost Friend is considered to be one of the most important of mountain magic books, there were others. Two others of equal importance were the Sixth and Seventh Books of Moses, which allegedly traced their origins back into Biblical times.

Sixth and Seventh Books of Moses

The Sixth Book was a conglomeration of incantations and spells, calling upon angels and ancient Hebrew powers, whilst the Seventh was a series of drawings and signs, all of them set in both Hebrew and "Egyptian" styles. These were to be used in the preparation of amulets or "himmel briefs" (heaven letters) which would protect against sicknesses and evil spirits. Some argued that the geometric drawings contained in the Seventh Book resembled some of the structures left by the Mound Builders.

The Wondrous Tablets of Zion

Of lesser interest was a work entitled The Wondrous Tablets of Zion that was said to be a fusing of "Egyptian" knowledge with European spells and charms. Like the other books used by the mountain magicians, it was a "secret" book, the contents of which were not for unbelievers and much of it was couched in quasi-Biblical phraseology. And like the others, it dealt with both black and white magics—it contained incantations and rituals for healing as well as for cursing. Other tomes circulated widely—The Book of Enoch, The Book of the Magus, and The Testament of Esau—which, similar to the grimoires of early modern England were usually copies of permutations of other works. The contents of most of them bordered on what we might view today as witchcraft.

The circulation of such dark and eerie materials both deepened and added to the superstitions and beliefs of the remote communities and perhaps made them even more introspective in their ways. However, as urbanization began to erode and change, many of the established mountain communities, although even today certain aspects of the old mountain ways, still flourish in some of the remoter mountain areas.

It is not hard to make a connection between places like Dogtown, areas of the region around Rutherford Mountain and the Great Smokies, and also the remote and reclusive communities, which characterize Lovecraft's fiction. With regard to Dogtown especially, it is easy to conjure up visions of the decaying settlements of Dunwich or Innsmouth. The notion of ancient families, stretching back to Settlement and Revolutionary times, together with the tales of inbreeding amongst the mountain clans, also provided fodder for his dark imagination.

In parts of rural Rhode Island, too, many communities were scattered, particularly around the south of the state. The isolation of such communities had allowed some queer beliefs to proliferate there, too. The area was mainly for apple growing and the communities were largely rural and centred around apple orchards. As well as that, Rhode Island had seen some military action, particularly during the War of 1812, and tiny country cemeteries lay tucked away at the end of some narrow road where the Revolutionary dead lay. Grand old houses, which had been abandoned during wartime, lay tucked away in secluded hollows, full of ghosts and emptiness. Here too, queer stone monoliths, left over from Indian days, bore witness to a prehistoric past, which in the sometimes insular climate of Rhode Island seemed incredibly imminent. It was the perfect place for the growth of strange beliefs and ancient fears. Indeed, between the late 18th and late 19th centuries, the South end of the State had suffered a minor vampire hysteria. There were also tales of phantoms along the lonely roads that stretched between the villages, of headless Revolutionary horsemen, and of things from the forest that lurked close to the overgrown graveyards tucked away in remote hollows. Here, too were stories of spots, which were to be avoided, and that held threats of dire consequences for the unwary. All of these fused together into a rich tapestry that underscored Lovecraft's tales.

The idea of an ancient civilization perhaps based in Rhode Island was given something of a boost when in the late 18th century, a skeleton dressed in armour of a peculiar construction and design was unearthed at Fall River. The dead body had been placed in a sitting position—in the style of the Hopewell and some instances of the Mississippi cultures—and was surrounded by curiously-shaped stones. At first, it was suggested that this might be the grave of some early explorer—possibly Vikings or Normans—but many also asserted that this was evidence of a developed but forgotten civilization that had flourished in Rhode Island in prehistoric times. Later, it was said that the stones (which were subsequently lost) had been inscribed with queer characters, which might have been a forgotten language. Such discoveries might well have excited Lovecaft's imagination and influenced his work.

Edward "John" Dimond

Lovecraft might also have been aware some "characters" who had lived in New England many years before. Two in particular might have greatly interested him. The first was Edward "John" Dimond, the famed "Magician of Marblehead," Massachusetts. A tall, thin, moody man, Dimond, who lived during the 18th century in a large, old Colonial-style house at Little Harbour, Marblehead, could have stepped out of a Lovecraft story. Little about his personal history is known although he is thought to have been born around the time of the Salem Witch Trials in 1692. As a young man, he would enter curious trances during which he would neither eat nor sleep but from which he emerged strangely refreshed and with a foreknowledge of future events. His parents were worried about him and were indeed slightly scared of him and his odd powers. When his father died, Dimond inherited a small amount of money (his father was not a wealthy man) which he used to buy some land which curiously lay on the edge of the town's Old Burying Hill.

Old Burying Hill

This was particularly undesirable property as it had a certain sinister aspect to it and Dimond was suspected of having specifically occult reasons for the purchase—just twenty-eight years after the Salem Witch Trials, people were still superstitious enough to believe this. It was imagined that Dimond was a wizard and that he was practicing Black Magic in the tangled thicket beside the old cemetery. Certain people claimed to have heard him speaking with the Devil along the lonely tracks that ran down the side of the old Burying Hill. However, despite such a fearsome reputation, Dimond's eccentric ways were tolerated by the Marblehead community. New Englanders are nothing if not circumspect and the wizard's alleged "gifts" were proving useful to many of the locals. For example, when things went missing or were stolen, he could—when in a trance—usually identify where they had gone or offer some clues as to who the thief might be. However, he had his darker side as well and this was often experienced by those who crossed him. He would make his way to the centre of the cemetery where his presence would alert his neighbours to the approach of a squall or a storm. There he would call upon the elements to take revenge upon his enemies. Many ships were said to have been lost at sea simply because their captains had fallen out with Dimond. The Magician could also aid mariners as well. Sometimes as he stood there amongst the tombstones, neighbours would hear him call out to the captains of certain vessels as if giving them directions in a storm. "Captain Jasper McClelland of the Elizabeth Anne, do you hear me?" he would roar to the leaden skies above the old cemetery. "Keep four degrees to starboard, run true until you reach the Halfway Rock." He would then look around him. "Captain Benjamin Rowe of the Hetty, hear my words. Move six degrees to port or you will founder on a shoal!" Then his mood would change and a shadow would creep across his face. "Captain William Orne of the Plymouth Lass, hear what I have to say! I curse you from this appointed spot, both you and your brother Jacob, master of the Charlotte Rose. May neither of you ever see port again! May both of you perish with your ships in the storm that is coming! This is my earnest wish and my most fervent prayer." None of those boats whom he had cursed, nor their captains, ever returned to port.

Captain Micah Taylor

A famous row broke out between Dimond and a certain Captain Micah Taylor, master of the Kestrel, during which the seaman called upon the wizard to "do his worst as he had no fear of him." On a clear, calm morning, the Kestrel sailed out of Marblehead harbour. There was not even the slightest hint of bad weather but, all the same, Dimond climbed up to the top of the Old Burial Hill and began his chant amongst the gravestones. Slowly the sky started to blacken and dark clouds began to gather from the west. A gale suddenly blew out of nowhere and lashed the New England coast. The Kestrel never returned to Marblehead harbour—she was lost at sea with all hands including Micah Taylor. This incident made other captains extremely wary of crossing the gaunt, thin man. Besides seeing what was happening at sea, the Marblehead wizard also seemed able to view, from his cemetery vantage point, what was happening on the land. For instance, whilst sitting on top of his Burying Hill, he was apparently able to witness a fire in Concord many miles away, through his alleged powers of telepathy. He was also said to talk directly to the dead as they lay in their coffins beneath the gravestones.

No one actually knows when John Dimond died and no date is given for his demise. He had left a legend behind him but that legend was to be augmented by his granddaughter, Molly.

Molly Pitcher

Molly Pitcher was born at 42 Orne Street, Marblehead in 1738 in a timber-frame house that stood directly opposite an old overgrown path that led up to the summit of the Old Burying Hill. Shortly after her birth, her parents suspected that she had inherited certain "abilities" from her peculiar grandfather. As soon as she could talk, she could repeat almost verbatim, complicated conversations that she had overheard. When she went to school she could, upon returning home, repeat literally word for word conversations which her mother had been having with neighbours even though Molly had not been present. It was believed that she could read the thoughts of her family and of friends who came to visit—thoughts she would often repeat out loud much to the embarrassment of her parents. She is also credited with predicting the War of Independence and the American victory over the British. This made her deeply unpopular in Marblehead where the local traders supported British interests.

Molly grew up to be an extremely plain girl. Her head was large and much too big for her slender body and she had a hooked nose, thin lips, hooded eyes and a neck, which seemed to be permanently crooked or "wry." She had few suitors, many of whom were put off by her unprepossessing looks and her sinister reputation as a clairvoyant and mind reader. At the age of 22, however, she married Robert Pitcher, a tradesman in Marblehead, and, shortly afterwards, the couple moved to nearby Lynn around 1760. By the 1770s, her fame as a clairvoyant had spread throughout New England and people travelled long distances, from far beyond the borders of Massachusetts in order to consult her. Just how accurate her prophesies were is uncertain—some may have been no more than clever and educated guesses—but it is possible that she may have had at least some precognitive powers. Similar to her grandfather, Molly Pitcher could often tell which ships would or would not return to port, she could predict sudden and violent storms, and, in those days, when pirates prowled the New England coast, such knowledge was vital to the success of any enterprise. Moreover, similar to her grandfather again, Molly Pitcher was known to issue curses against those whom she did not like or who had crossed her in some way and many a mariner was said to have paid with his life in violent storms directly attributed by local people to his exchanging hot words with her.

Molly died in 1813, at the age of 75, and by this time her reputation as a "wise woman" or "witch" was well established all over the east coast of America. Her fame prompted the poet John Greenleaf Whittier to write a long poem dedicated to her amazing powers of prediction in 1832.

The idea of the thin, aesthetic "magician" making his way up to the ancient burying-ground to call down elemental powers or his misshapen and ill-proportioned granddaughter making predictions from her small house in Lynn must have appealed to Lovecraft's imagination. Both John Dimond and Molly Pitcher might well be characters from his tales and may indeed have formed the inspiration for some of the strange people who inhabit his fiction.

His imagination may also have been fired by the strange anomalies to be found in New England religious thinking. For many of the early settlers, primal America was an extremely frightening place. It was a land of deep, dark woods in which all manner of evils were waiting for God's people. There were creatures such as the colonists had never seen before and dark hellishly painted devils (as they took the Indians to be) who hid behind every bush, attempting to drag the righteous from the path that the Lord had set out for them. The only thing that these early settlers had to defend themselves with was their faith. And that faith could often take extreme forms, as the perceived evil grew stronger.

New Light Stir

One of the major religious occurrences in early New England life was the New Light Stir. The particularly unsettled time around the American Revolution saw a particularly strong evangelical revival that swept through the New England hill country and along the coast as far as maritime Canada between the years 1774 and 1783. This was described in many ways—a purification of the Faithful in a time of warfare and trouble or to elicit God's aid in the battle against the English. Radical Evangelism grew rapidly amongst the New England communities taking many forms—Shakers, Universalists, and Freewill Baptists as well as the followers of many individual hill preachers who founded their own churches and sects. Many of the colonists believed that the war signalled the end of the world—that it was in fact, the Armageddon of which the Bible had spoken—and formed themselves into "belief groups" to await the Second Coming which must surely follow. This belief was strengthened by the famous Dark Day on 19th May 1780 when the entire New England coastline was plunged into darkness. The entire Hudson Valley was plunged into absolute blackness and the phenomenon extended as far east as Casco Bay. With the darkness came an eerie silence. No one could see even to read, except by candlelight and even the birds flew home to nest in trees, thinking it was night. All New England was affected and lay under a cloud of absolute gloom. The darkness was probably due to a solar eclipse, but occurring as it did roughly about halfway through the Stir, its effect on the hill country was electric. Even in sophisticated Newhaven, people were concerned and panicked that this indeed might mark the end of all things. For the Revivalists of the New Light Stir, however, this was the fulfilment of prophecy and a sure sign that the Lord was coming. Both their tone and worship took on more radical overtones and the hill preachers became much more fervent in their exhortations. Sects began to flourish as never before.

The Universal Friends

One of the more radical of them was the Universal Friends—the followers of the prophetess Jemima Wilkinson, who flourished in Rhode Island between 1776 and 1789. Wilkinson who had been born into a Quaker family in Cumberland, Rhode Island (she was the eighth child), was considered to be "touched by the spirit" which enabled her to see visions and make prophesies. By 1776, she had rejected the plain style of worship pursued by the Quakers and had joined a more "charismatic" Puritan congregation at nearby Abbott Run. In the year of the Revolution, Jemima's elder sister, Patience, bore an illegitimate child and was expelled from the Quaker congregation as were her two brothers who had volunteered for military service in the American army. They joined her and shortly after began to experience ecstatic visions themselves.

Later they would be joined by other members of the family including her father. In the latter half of that same year, Jemima contracted an "illness" during which her visions increased. She claimed to have been visited by two archangels who revealed "wonderful secrets" to her and also announced that the End of the World was fast approaching. She also claimed to have seen her own soul ascending into Heaven. This made her a "seeress" and a "prophet of the Last Days" and gained her a good number of converts. New branches of her sect appeared in South Kensington and New Millford in the early-to-mid 1780s. The prophetess herself urged celibacy and drew up rules for day-to-day living such as the preparation of food, dress, personal hygiene, and demarcation between the sexes in indoor and outdoor labour. Her influence grew steadily, bringing with it a tradition of seeing visions and of hearing voices, extending even beyond the borders of Massachusetts. Her sect drew the "spiritually lost" (a title in which she revelled), people who didn't really fit into any other religion but who gloried in visions and "miracles." Some even claimed to have "esoteric knowledge" granted to them by angels. By the time Jemima Wilkinson died in 1819, her visionary church was well established with congregations operating as far away as Philadelphia. There was even a small settlement of them in the Seneca Lake region of New York State. However, the Universal Friends did not long survive the prophetess's death and split in acrimony and division to be absorbed by other religions. Even the Seneca Lake settlement collapsed and was gone within a decade. The church that she had founded and which had briefly flourished in New England had nevertheless left behind a tradition of mysticism and supernatural experiences that tinged the fundamentals of religion in Rhode Island and many other New England colonies, and it is this aspect of which Lovecraft may well have been aware.

Samuel Sewell

Following in the tradition of Jemima Wilkinson were the followers of Samuel Sewell, a cobbler from Concord, who shared his name with one of the judges in the Salem Witch Trials over fifty years earlier. "The Sewellites," who flourished briefly in the 1780s, also saw visions and claimed to hear voices and sounds in the remote forest areas, which they interpreted as being the work of either angels of the Devil. They made reference to earlier civilizations that had brought down "great evil" upon America that the righteous must cleanse. Again after Sewell's death at the end of the 1700s, the sect seems to have folded and nothing further is heard of it. Even so, it had established a tradition of ancient and malignant powers living in the deep woodlands, an idea which was to give Lovecraft one of his most persistent themes.

The Brethren of the New Light

Possibly the most bizarre of all the New England sects around this time was that headed by a pipe fitter from Charlestown—the Brethren of the New Light. In the days before the Stir, the Brethren had been influenced by the message of an itinerant Freewill Baptist preacher, Isaiah Parker, who would afterward become their minister. In the meantime the pipe fitter, Shadrach Ireland, answered their call and in 1755 organized a congregation in Charlestown, Massachusetts. However, his increasingly eccentric message began to alienate many of his followers who deserted to become Baptists under Parker. In response, Ireland's message and behaviour became more and more bizarre. Around 1770, he abandoned his wife and announced a doctrine of "spiritual wifery" ("as the people of old") by which he could choose "wives" from amongst his female disciples. He made his followers build him a large brick dwelling called The Square House where he lived with several of his "spiritual wives" and a retinue of female disciples. He proclaimed himself to be immortal through a secret knowledge that he had obtained directly from God and assured his followers that they, too could live forever if they scrupulously obeyed his edicts. He declared all his followers "perfect" and stated that those who appeared to die were not dead at all but resting and awaiting the Call on the Last Day when they would wake up, walk out of their tombs, and meet the Lord. To this end, bodies were not to be buried in graves or cemeteries but were to be placed in specially sealed, stone-lined tombs, constructed under the New England hills, where they would lie awaiting the Final Trumpet. Such places (and it is said that some of these chambers were indeed constructed) must have been almost like "dormitories of the dead" where rows of cadavers lay together.

As Ireland's ministry grew more and more peculiar, many of his followers abandoned their own families and went to live with him in the Square House. Here they experienced ecstatic visions and heard the voices of angels and felt the touch of miraculous powers. In 1773, Ireland proclaimed himself blessed and immortal and shifted his church to a more apocalyptic vision, announcing that he was Christ's herald and that the End of All Things was fast approaching.

Ireland's congregation was to last roughly five more years. In 1777, exhausted by his prophetic visions, he began to "sicken" and took to his bed, stating that his earthly ministry was finished but that God had a far more glorious one waiting for him. He urged his disciples not to bury him, for the time was short. God was coming to take the Church. After his death in September 1778, his followers placed his body in a lime filled box where it reposed for six weeks before burial. His followers continued to occupy The Square House until around 1781 when the sect fell apart amid rancour and division. Many members were later absorbed into Mother Ann Lee's Shakers. The concept of uncoffined bodies, however, representing immortals, lying somewhere under the New England hills was the stuff of nightmares and must have added a rather sinister note to the region.

The idea of vanished civilizations that had worshipped monstrous gods; of dark and forbidden books containing ancient mysteries; of reclusive communities who held strange beliefs and might follow even stranger ways and of odd religious sects who carried out questionable practices all drew together in much of Lovecraft's fiction and in the stories of many of his adherents. Whilst charting the themes, which shaped his imagination, it is of course, easy to dismiss them all as mere superstition and as being without any real foundation. And yet the question remains—what if there was at least some grain of truth within them? What if Lovecraft had glimpsed some dark secret during his studies and what if there is something monstrous, lying just beyond the limits of the human mind—whose awful Presence is dimly suggested by various clues scattered across both history and folklore? The prospect is an unsettling one.

Perhaps the idea of Lovecraft and those similar to him is suggested by one of his earlier creations in his story The Music of Erich Zann (written in December 1921). In it the ancient, dumb musician sits alone in his garret room in the Rue d'Ausell, playing ceaselessly upon his viol whilst all around him great and inhuman shapes grow in the shadows and his narrow window reveals glimpses of strange and terrible other worlds. Perhaps this, more than any other is the abiding image of the strange recluse of Rhode Island and of those who would follow him.

Miscellaneous Nightmares

From the shadow by the fireplace and the shape on the heath, from the Devil in the lone bush and the spirit lurking by the head of the bed, O Lord protect us all.

—Ancient prayer

Although we are all familiar with the traditional terrors of the Undead—vampires, werewolves, zombies, and so on, other, perhaps less well-known horrors also lurk in the deepest recesses of our minds. These are not necessarily the unquiet spirits of the departed but are creatures that hold a quality of menace and the supernatural. Arguably, these beings do not strictly qualify as members of the Undead, because they have never been truly alive, and yet they exude an air of fear, that is normally associated with unquiet spirits.

Mara

We often describe such imagined monsters and our deepest fears as nightmares, but where does the word come from? "Nightmare" has its origins in a night creature in Germanic and Scandinavian folklore that was known as the Mara. Such a creature was greatly feared by all sleepers as it had the power to draw energy from the body and to greatly disturb the mind, inducing wild fancies and imaginings. In many ways, the Mara resembled the ancient incubi and succubi that tormented Roman sleepers. It could enter a room through the tiniest aperture—through a keyhole or in the space under a door. It would then settle, astride, on the chest of the sleeper and commence to ride him or her like a horse. He or she would experience foul and exhausting dreams, awaking feeling badly rested and often soaking with sweat.

Nordic Lore

In Nordic lore, the Mara was invariably a female wraith that only attacked sleeping men, disturbing their sleep and interfering with their manhood. She committed lewd and strenuous sexual acts, which left them feeling weak and ill when they eventually woke. She tormented them with awful visions and made them toss and turn as if in the throes of passion. In fact, some of them could die with palpitations of the heart as a result of the Mara attack. There was no real defence against the attack of the Mara except to spend some time in deep and earnest prayer before going to bed. Some of the old Norse sagas from around the 8th or 9th centuries speak of the demon and she is sometimes depicted as having the upper torso of a horse and the lower body of a naked woman. Indeed, it was commonly believed in both Norway and Denmark, that the Mara was the spirit of an actual living woman who had lived a wanton life and was troubled by her memories as she slept. Her spirit therefore roamed the countryside, attacking men where she could find them.

Buddhism

The name also appears, as a dubious force, in the Indo-Aryan dialect and is thought to have come from the East. In fact, Mara appears in Buddhist folklore is the name of a demon who tempted the Gautama Buddha (563–483 B.C.) by assuming the shape of a beautiful woman. The Buddha resisted her temptations but other, lesser, men were not so fortunate. Her name is usually used in Buddhist literature to signify the "death" of the spiritual life. In Buddhist folklore, she is often portrayed as the Lord of Evil, desirous of destroying Mankind in lewd and lustful ways.

Latvia

The Mara is also featured in Latvian mythology. Here she is a goddess—one of the higher deities of Latvian folklore. She sometimes appeared as a beautiful young woman and at other times as an aged crone and, in either guise, not always sympathetic towards Humankind. Once again, she could enter a room through the tiniest crack in order to disturb the sleep of those who were resting within a house or room. She drew energies from them whilst they slept and troubled their minds with strange and frightening dreams. In many ways, she resembled what we would today describe as a vampire. In order to placate this rather wilful deity, a special day was set aside in her honour—August 15th. In Christian Latvia, as the Church grained a firmer hold on the popular mind, this became the Feast of Mary, the Mother of Christ, thus Christianising what was essentially a pagan entity.

Orkney and Shetland

The Mara was greatly feared on the islands of Orkney and Shetland. These islands had been colonized by the Vikings and much of the Old Norse tradition still remain in these parts to this day. In the folklore of Orkneys, the Mara was essentially female and closely resembled a form of vampire. In some cases, she also took the form of a large black horse, threatened the sleeper with its hooves. However, she could be driven away with charms, amulets, and incantations, that would protect the sleeper. A lengthy charm from Shetland had to be repeated in its entirety (and sometimes had to be said twice or three times) before retiring for the night. It said:

De man o' meicht,
He rode o' nicht,
Wi' nedder swird
Nor feard nor licht,

He socht da mare
He fund da mare,
He bund da mare,
Wi' her ain hair,
An' made her swear
By middin; meicht
Dat sho' was never bide a nicht
What he had rod, dat man o' meicht.

The notion of taking hairs from the hide or the tail of a supernatural creature is a very old one and appears in the folklore of a number of Celtic countries. In Ireland, the great hero-king Brian Boru (who was the only man even to ride the Pooka or Phouka a terrible horse-like creature with demonic powers) took three hairs from its tail and extracted a promise from it that it would never attack an Irish person again.

The Shetland Incantation was said over the cribs of newborn babies or over the beds of old people, both of whom were considered to be extremely susceptible to the Mara's attentions. In fact, strands of red thread were also placed amongst the bedclothes because these were protections against the Scottish fairy kind (the Mara was not strictly considered to be a fairy but was believed to have certain fairy attributes about her)—and fairies and fairy creatures feared the colour red.

Gradually, the idea of the Mara—the succubus-like woman, the old hag, and the threatening horse—visiting sleepers during the hours of darkness, became incorporated into psychological terminology and was given as a description of disturbed and troubled sleep (in German the nacht mara or nightmare). Nightmares, of course, have troubled us ever since and who is to say that they are not the work of demons of some sort?

Viking Tales

Amongst the Vikings it was common to bury the revered dead, such as chieftains or great warriors within little "houses" or mounds, surrounded by his wealth and weapons. From time to time, the corporeal body of the dead chieftain or warrior could leave his funeral mound or "house" and roam the countryside. Such creatures were either described as hel-blar (death black) or na-foir (corpse pale) and retained their human shape. They were also very violent and often went about carrying some sort of weapon in their hands, which they would use to assault any humans whom they encountered. The creature would also attack any individual who attempted to break into their tombs or mounds with the intention of stealing its treasure.

Hromunde saga Gropssonar

Draugrs appear in many old Viking folktales and also in the great Northern sagas. The most famous of these is the Hromunde saga Gropssonar (The Saga of Hromond Gripsson), an ancient saga from Iceland. This tells the story of Olaf konugr-lioli (warrior king) who fights (amongst other foes) with the Witch King (or draugr), Brainn, who is an Undead king of Gaul (France) and whom he managed to defeat. The Saga was well known throughout the Nordic world and may well have influenced many other such tales. Some of these come, not from the Scandinavian world but from England where the Vikings held large swathes of the country and serve to show a connection between Norse and Germanic beliefs. One of these was the story of Thorolf Halt-Foot, which was to be found in the Eyrbyggia Saga, written down in a monastery in Iceland, probably around the middle of the 13th century. This records the story of a berserker who rose from his tomb each night and, with several Undead companions, ravaged much of the countryside of Western Iceland, attacking flocks of sheep and, from time to time, people themselves. Indeed, such a menace did he become that his son was forced to erect a wall around his mound or barrow in order to keep him in. Variants of the story were retold in England where his exploits in the countryside were equated with the activities of the Wild Hunt. These creatures were simply violent and wandering corpses that seemed to rise at will from their tombs without any specific aim or purpose. However, with the advance of Christianity, a certain moral element began to creep in. The draugr was now a person who had led a sinful life or who had disobeyed some fundamental law of the Church and this was why he or she (most, of course, tended to be men) could not rest easily in the grave.

Historia Rerum Anglicarum

This is made plain by such English writers as William of Newburgh (1136–1198) in his Historia Rerum Anglicarum—The History of the Events of England—and particularly in his account of a ghost in Berwick. This was the corporeal revenant of a wealthy man who had died in sin and who each night rose from his tomb and wandered about, committing nuisances wherever he went. The country people feared to go out after dark for fear of meeting the lifeless thing on the road and being physically attacked by it. The creature also brought sickness and disease in its wake, which devastated most of the town of Berwick. The connection between draugrs and disease was a very strong and potent one. Similar tales also appear in the works of English writers such as Gervaise of Tilbury and fragmentary stories from the Abbey of Byland in Yorkshire.

There was really only one way to defeat a draugr and that was to cut off its head and consign its body to flames. The Church, however, argued that a Ritual of Absolution was just as effective but there were many who questioned that. Avoidance was probably the best resort and so, as the Nordic night darkened down, many people stayed close to their hearths, refusing to venture out for fear of meeting a draugr—that violent member of the restless dead—upon the road.

Baba Yaga

Whilst the Scandinavians and, to some extent, the English kept close to their houses, terrified by draugrs and the Mara—the Russians feared yet another type of visitor who came most (though not always) at night. This was the deadly Baba Yaga—an eternal Witch. In many respects Baba Yaga, embodied the evil hag or crone who terrified many societies all across the world. There are many descriptions of her—usually as a wizened, black-faced creature, stooped and with a thin, evil countenance. She was also credited with having iron teeth and hooked bird-like, razor-sharp claws. She was also said to have a taste for human flesh, particularly the flesh of young children. Indeed, she may well have been the prototype for the "cannibal hag" who appears in such stories as the Germanic tale of Hansel and Gretel. Although classed as an "undead Witch," she did not travel about on a broomstick as a conventional Witch is said to do. Rather she cruised about the skies in a giant mortar in which she squatted with her bony legs wrapped around her thin body, propelling it through the air with a great pestle. As she travelled, she was accompanied by fierce winds and tempests and by a throng of wailing spirits, which signalled her coming.

Chicken-leg house

As with the Mara, old people and young children were especially susceptible to her attentions and she could descend from the clouds and down the chimney of a cottage in the blink of an eye, to snatch them away. Only prayer warned the Church would keep the Baba Yaga away. She would then carry them away to her hut, deep in the Russian forests from which they would never escape. This, of course, was no ordinary hut but a magic dwelling, balanced on four thin chicken legs. When anyone approached it, it would turn away from them, emitting ear-splitting cries and shrieks. Its windows seemed to act as eyes. Sometimes the place was said to be surrounded by a fence of bone, topped by skulls with blazing eyes, which bit and snapped at those who tried to cross. No matter what sort of entry was sought, the chicken-leg house always managed to avoid it. The inside of the dwelling, however, was filled with horrors—mainly bodiless hands that grabbed, pulled, and pinched those who managed to enter. These were said to be the hands of the evil dead—those who had died without making a final confession. The house was also filled with the emaciated bodies of the dead that attacked those who came through the door.

White, Red, and Black

Baba Yaga was also surrounded by other supernatural beings. There were, for example, three horsemen who rode around the dwelling protecting it from intruders. These were known by their colours—white, red, and black. White represented Bright Morn, Red the colour of Blood and Fire, and Black deepest midnight. All were heavily armed and would slay any trespasser on the Baba Yaga's property.

Koschey the Deathless

Baba Yaga's most terrifying "servant," however, was her huntsman Koschey. He was sometimes known as Koschey the Deathless or Koschey Bassmerty (meaning lean or boneless) and he was well-known throughout the Caucus Mountains. He would gallop, completely naked, on his magical steed, through the frozen mountain wastes, carrying away those whom he encountered to be eaten by the Baba Yaga. Although he was described as "deathless" or immortal, it was possible to slay him but this could only be done by a hero who could find his soul. Koschey's spirit, it must be noted, did not reside with his body and this made him difficult to kill. His soul, or life force, resided within a large egg, which had been placed in a massive chest, bound with iron chains that had been buried amongst the roots of a tree in the middle of a dense forest that grew in the middle of an inaccessible island that lay in the centre of a subterranean ocean. If, after much searching, a hero were to find the egg, he should break it open and inside would be a pin upon which Koschey's soul was speared. The dread huntsman would then be in his power. If he were to destroy the pin then Koschey himself would be destroyed forever.

In some descriptions of the wild huntsman, he was described as wearing the flayed skin of some of his victims, which he cast off him as he rode. When naked, he was at the height of his magical powers and nothing could stand against him. He invariably fought naked because all along his hairy arms were a number of venom glands containing a deadly poison that would snap and bite at his attacker. One bite from them could cause intense pain and eventual death.

Koschey's voice might also be used as a kind of weapon because he could modulate it to imitate any other sound. Thus children, playing on the village edge at twilight might be lured away into the forest by what they assumed to be the voice of their mother or of some relative or friend. They would then be captured by the huntsman and delivered to the Baba Yaga. He was also a master of twisting words in order to gain his way over people, especially women and if necessary, could be particularly charming, However, he secretly despised women and, his favourite "put down" to the female gender ran thus: "Foolish woman, long of hair but short of wit."

His relationship towards the Baba Yaga (who was always considered to be female) was always ambiguous. Although officially described as her "servant," it was believed throughout the Caucuses that Koschy had powers and status in his own right. It is, of course, possible that both of these entities were folkloric remnants of ancient deities—undead and undying gods and goddesses—that were once worshipped in Eastern Europe. There was little formal protection against either of them but they could be repelled by love—particularly the love of a mother. This would strip both the Baba Yaga and Koschey of their powers and protect the person who was loved against their advances. Nevertheless, this did not stop the people of Russia and of the Caucuses from locking their doors late at night against the supernatural terrors that lurked outside in the snowy dark.

Yuki-Onna

Further east in Japan, the snow and gloom brought other terrors to the doors of isolated dwellings. In remote mountain areas, the Yuki-Onna or Snow Woman was greatly feared. The Yuki-Onna has become one of Japan's most famous demons, mainly through the works of the writer Lafacio Hearn (1850–1904) who portrayed her as a kind of ghost who appeared during storms and blizzards. In recent folklore, she was portrayed as a beautiful woman, always deathly pale, who appeared in a snowstorm and who lured travellers to their doom. In order to destroy her victims, the Yuki-Onna acted similar to a vampire, drawing the breath from them and into herself. Her touch was extremely cold, cold enough to freeze the blood in their veins. When she had feasted, the Woman of the Snows melted away like a white mist. Similar to other Japanese ghosts she is portrayed in art, without legs, simply drifting through the shows like a phantom in search of her victims and gliding up to the doors of mountain dwellings seeking to gain admission. Once she did so, she could change the temperature of the house and freeze the inhabitants to death. In fact, the Yuki-Onna became the embodiment of the mountain blizzard. Hearn depicts her as incredibly lovely and tells a story of two woodcutters in Mousashi district—one old and one very young—whom she attacked. She slew the elder of the two but her heart was moved by the handsome younger one and she spared him, making him promise that he would tell nobody of his escape. Later he grew up and married a beautiful girl from another Province and brought her to live with him. He was so comfortable with her that, one night, he broke his promise and told her of his encounter with the Yuki-Onna. To his horror, she became incredibly angry, even furious, and revealed herself as the Woman of the Snows and in her rage, killed him. In this way, she completed the task that she had begun many years before.

Tengu

Although Hearn described her as a type of ghost, the idea of the Snow Woman was probably much older than the folklore that he had heard. In some parts of Japan, the Yuki-Onna was usually described as a form of tengu, very ancient Japanese demons. She was specifically classed as one of the marak-aykas, a type of Japanese minor demon that sometimes preyed on humans. Similar to the Tengu, it had a red (not a pale) face, sharp, rending teeth, and a long nose and could be extremely vicious if provoked. This class of demon sometimes took the form of a yamabushi (hermit) or else as an attractive girl for the purposes of waylaying travellers on the road. Many of these creatures tended to inhabit the lands around Mount Takao, near Hachoiji City. There, they attacked pilgrims on their way to the shrines and prevented individuals from fulfilling their religious obligations.

Whether the Snow Woman was one of these monsters or whether she was an undying ghost as Lafcadio Hearn has suggested, is a matter that is open for debate, as is the question as to whether she is actually a vampire or a demonic monster. Whatever her nature and origins she is still greatly feared in the remoter areas of Japan when the wind starts to blow and the snow begins to fall.

The previous examples are only a few of the undead terrors that have frightened us across the ages and may still hold a certain horror for us all. Many more are lingering in the deepest recesses of our own minds and imaginations. Although it is easy to dismiss them in the full light of day or when we are surrounded by friends and companions; when the light starts to fail and we are alone with the darkness crowding around outside, it is a different matter. Who knows what inhuman things may lurk in the gloom—werewolves, vampires, zombies—a veritable carnival of the Undead. The things that have the power to horrify us may be closer than we imagine. Maybe they're waiting no further away than just beyond the outermost edge of the comforting lamplight, waiting to pounce! You have been warned!

About the Author and Illustrator

Dr. Bob Curran was born in a rural area of County Down, Northern Ireland. After leaving school he worked at many jobs, including journalism, music, truck driving, and grave-digging. He traveled to the United States, North Africa, and Holland before returning to Northern Ireland to settle down and obtain degrees in history and education and also a doctorate in educational psychology. From his early years, he has been interested in folktales and legends and has made a study of these, writing widely in books and magazines. His work has been printed in his native Ireland, Great Britain, France, Germany, and Japan. Still lecturing and teaching, he lives in County Derry with his wife and young family.

The Pledge of Allegiance

The Pledge of Allegiance was written in August 1892 by the socialist minister Francis Bellamy (1855-1931). It was originally published in The Youth's Companion on September 8, 1892. Bellamy had hoped that the pledge would be used by citizens in any country.

In its original form it read:

> "I pledge allegiance to my Flag and the Republic for which it stands, one nation, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all."

In 1923, the words, "the Flag of the United States of America" were added. At this time it read:

> "I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all."

In 1954, in response to the Communist threat of the times, President Eisenhower encouraged Congress to add the words "under God," creating the 31-word pledge we say today. Bellamy's daughter objected to this alteration. Today it reads:

> "I pledge allegiance to the flag of the United States of America, and to the republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all."

Bini Names in Nigeria and Georgia

Summary of a lecture delivered at Central Conecticut State University on April 19, 1995

by Roger Westcott
Professor Emeritus, Drew University
Source: http://www.ccsu.edu/Afstudy/upd2-3.html#Z2

"Bini" is a formerly derogatory name given to the people of Benin City and the surrounding countryside, reportedly by their more numerous neighbors, the Yoruba of Ife and Oyo, Nigeria (the Bini call themselves Edo - a term which scholars now employ more broadly to include closely related ethnic groups such as the Ishan and the Urhobo).

Proper names are a human universal. Originally, all names had a transparent meaning. They were invariably derived from common words or phrases. In English, for example, the surname Smith is derived from the obsolescent noun smith, meaning "metal-worker." Each individual had only one name, which was by definition a forevalue, like Dick or Jane. The practice of giving an individual several names arose only in complex societies, as a result of either or both of two developments. One was increasing population, producing communities in which a number of people received the same name. In Medieval England, for example, a village in which there were two men named John might distinguish them by calling the one who ground grain John Miller and the one who made bread John Baker. The other development was class stratification, yielding elites who wanted their names to proclaim their superior status. In Benin, for example, chiefs and kings were awarded, in addition to their birth-names, praise-names like "The Leopard" or "The Greatest One."

Bini belongs to the most wide-spread of the five great language families of Africa. Variably known as Niger-Congo or Congo-Kordofanian, it contains most of the languages of coastal West Africa as well as all the Bantu languages of eastern and southern Africa, including Swahili.

In Nigeria, few Bini personal names are occupational, as so many European names are. And none are patronymic, like English Wilson ("son of Will"). Instead, most are descriptive, like the female name Evbu, "Misty," or the male name Odayon, "Palm-wine drinker." Some are local, like Ode, "road" (short for Abievbode, "born along the road"). Others are temporal, like Edegbe, "day-break" (meaning "born at dawn"), a name-type that is rare in English. Many Bini descriptive names consist not of single words but of short sentences like Osahon, "god hears (my prayer for a child)" - a name-type which, during the 17th century Puritan period, was common in English but has since then ceased to be popular.

In Nigeria, many Bini names were given not only to people but also to gods, tribes, rivers, and planets (these are technically known as theonyms, ethnonyms, toponyms, and astronyms, respectively, in contradistinction to personal names, technically termed authroponyms). When Bini war-captives were sold to European slavers, many were transported to the coast islands of Georgia and South Carolina. There they lost the conversational use of Bini, learning instead the slightly Africanized English known as Gullah or Geechee. But they retained their African names, which they used among themselves, alongside the Christian names of Eurasian origin by which they were known to whites.

Recent commercial development of the Georgia and South Carolina coast by chains of resort complexes has unfortunately forced many, if not most, Gullah-speakers out of their island homes. Such distinctively African linguistic traits as Bini personal names are now rapidly vanishing in North America.

Edo people

The Edo or Benin people are an Edoid ethnic group primarily found in Edo State, Southern part of Nigeria. They speak the Edo language and are the descendants of Igodomigodo, which evolved to become the Benin Empire. They are closely related to other ethnic groups that speak Edoid languages, such as the Esan, the Afemai, the Isoko,and the Urhobo.[1]

Edo south as a senatorial district did as high as 1.3 million in voters registration in 2019, bigger than the figures from Ekiti and Bayelsa states which gave out nine hundred thousand each. And there is also a large diasporan population, that diaspora voting was thought of in the 2020 Edo state election.

They also have a strong diaspora population Of about 1.5 to two million as they are by far the most travelled minority in Nigeria. It is so easy to spot a Bini outside the country. After the Igbos, and yoruba, the Binis come third as the most travelled Nigerians not far behind the first two despite the population difference between them. There is a sizable

The name "Benin" (and "Bini") is a Portuguese corruption, ultimately from the word "Ubini", which came into use during the reign of Oba (ruler) Ewuare the Great, c. 1440. "Ubini", an ancient Edo word meaning beautiful people, was used to describe the royal administrative centre or city or capital proper of the kingdom, Edo. Ubini was later corrupted to Benin around 1485 when the Portuguese began trade relations with Oba Ewuare.[2]

Administrative region

Edo people can be found in Nigeria's Edo State which got its name from the primary inhabitants of the region's most notable historical conglomeration, Benin City, which is also the central capital homeland of the Edo people. Edo people also have many related groups in their immediate surroundings also encompassed by the political and administrative borders of Edo state.[3] Most of these groups have traced their history back to the historical city center off the Benin people, Benin City. Examples of such adjacent groups include various Afemai sub-groups, the Esan people of Edo state and the Akoko Edo people situated on the state's northern borders.[4]

The Binis are situated in Seven local government of Edo south which happens to be the most populated senatorial district in the state, They have populated towns like Okada, Ekiadolor, Urhonigbe, Abudu, these four of which the population won't be less than hundred thousand each,They also have other lesser large towns like Usen,Iguobazuwa,Ehor, these three communities not less than fifty thousand each and a host of a number of other smaller communities with about 20,000 in population. Edo state was formerly part of the old Bendel state of early post-colonial Nigeria, also known as the Mid-Western Region, Nigeria. This region's influence and culture reflects that of the Edo, Urhobo, Esan and other Edo related peoples.[5]

Edo people have one of the best dress cultures on the African continent. Their fashion accessories holds royalty and typically includes red beads, body marks, bangles, anklets, raffia work and so on.[6]

Traditional beliefs

In the traditional religion of the Edo, there exists, besides the human world, an invisible world of supernatural beings acting as interceders for the human world. Offerings are made to them in their respective shrines. Osanobua is the creator and Supreme God. His son/daughter Olokun is ruler of all bodies of water and is responsible for the prosperity and fertility of his/her human followers. Another son Ogun, is the patron god of metalworkers.[7] The epithet Osanobua Noghodua mean God Almighty. The word Osanobua encompasses a large number of divine principles - including the divine state of being merciful, timeless, goodness, justice, sublimity, and supreme. In the Edo belief system, Osanobua has the divine attributes of omnipresence (orhiole), omniscience (ajoana), and omnipotence (udazi). The Supreme Deity is believed to be present everywhere and at all times.[8][9]

Traditional Edo art consists of widely identifiable sculptures, plaques and masks which reflect various spiritual and historical aspects of their cultural traditions. Some of the notable Edo art pieces include the mask of the Queen Mother Idia and a vast collection of historical Edo art pieces called the Benin Bronzes which can be found not only in Nigeria but further dispersed around the world.[10]

Edo State

Edo State is one of the 36 states of Nigeria, located in the southern region of the country.[4] As of 2006 National population census, the state was ranked as the 24th populated state (3,233,366) in Nigeria.[5] The state's capital and city, Benin City, is the fourth largest city in Nigeria, and the centre of the country's rubber industry.[6][7] Created in 1991 from the former Bendel State, Edo State borders Kogi State to the northeast, Anambra State to the east, Delta State to the southeast, and Ondo State to the west.[8]

The modern borders of Edo State encompass regions that were formerly the site of various empires and kingdoms. Formed in the 11th century AD, the Benin Empire.[9] The ancient city of Edo, the site of modern-day Benin City, was home to some of the earthworks in the world.[10] In 1897, the British Empire conducted a punitive expedition of the region, destroying most of the ancient city of Edo and incorporating the territory into what would become the Southern Nigeria Protectorate.[11][12]

Edo State is a diverse state that is predominantly inhabited by the Edoid peoples, including the Edo (or Bini),[13] Esan, Owan and Afemai peoples.[14] The most common Edoid language spoken is the Edo language, which is commonly spoken in Benin City.[15] First introduced to the region by Portuguese missionaries during the 15th century, Christianity is the dominant religion in Edo State with also a sizable number of Muslims though traditional religions are also practised.[16]

History

The Mid-Western Region was a division of Nigeria from 1963 to 1991, formally known as Bendel state from 1976. It was formed in June 1963 from Benin and Delta provinces of the Western Region, and its capital was Benin City.[17] It was renamed a province in 1966, and in 1967 when the other provinces were split up into several states, it remained territorially intact, becoming a state.[18]

During the Nigerian Civil War, the Biafran forces invaded the new Mid-Western state, en route to Lagos, in an attempt to force a quick end to the war. While under Biafran occupation, the state was declared as the "Republic of Benin" as Nigerian forces were to retake the region.[19] The republic collapsed a day after the declaration as Nigerian troops overtook Benin City. Edo State was established on 27 August 1991 when Bendel State was split into Edo and Delta States.[20]

People

With Benin City as capital, the population of the entire state is approximately 8 million.[21] It is made up of four major ethnic groups; namely Edo (Binis), Owan, Esan and Afemai (Etsako & Akoko Edo). However the State has a high presence of residents from across the country and the world because of its cosmopolitan tendencies. Benin City has a history of being one of the foremost destinations of Europeans during their exploration of Africa continent many centuries ago. Some of these flash points have remained enviable tourists' attraction for the state.[22]

Demographics

The main ethnic groups in Edo State are Binis, Etsako, Esans, Owans and Akoko Edos.[23] Virtually all the groups traced their origin to Benin City hence the dialects of the groups vary with their distance from Benin City. The Bini speaking people who occupy seven out of the 18 Local Government Areas of the state constitute 57.54%; while others are as follow: Esan (17.14%), Etsako (12.19%), Owan (7.43%), and Akoko Edo (5.70%).[24] However, the Igbira speaking communities exist in Akoko Edo, Itsekiri communities in Ikpoba-Okha, as well as Ijaw Izons, Urhobos in Ovia North East and South West Local Government Areas especially in the borderlands. Also, Igbo speaking communities exist in Igbanke(Ika) in Orhionmwon LGA.[25]

Announcement

Packing Up for the First ORGONIZED AFRICA TOUR! The Tour goes to Zimbabwe, Maswingo and Bulawayo. It covers the Great Zimbabwe Ruins, a village between Masvingo and Bulawayo and the Matopos Hills. (Contact: Orgonise Africa info@orgonise-africa.net)

The Baggage:
1 brand new CB, several HHGs, a big supply of Tower Busters (TB's)

Another CB is ready to be delivered for a worthy South African destination.

Remember: The wealthier members of this forum can speed up progress in Africa by donating CBs to remote villages in drought, HAARP-stricken, or otherwise biologically degraded or threatened areas.

500US$ puts a CB into any village or Town in Zambia, Zimbabwe, Botwana, or Namibia. (Your choice or mine)

Mozambique is currently covered up to 15d Latitude(S).

350$ puts it in a circumference of 300km ofJohannesburg.

400$ puts it somewhere in SA in a 300-900 km radius.

450$ puts it anywhere in SA.

A website for this campaign is in preparation. Watch this space and contact me if you want to contribute. Partial sponsorships are welcome. All sponsorships will be accounted for.

Magical Africa

By Don Croft <zapper16@earthlink.net>

September 19, 2001

This is one of the many first hand accounts I got from my friend, Gert Botha, when I visited him in Swakopmund, Namibia last year. I'm offering it as an anecdotal example of what intrigues Carol and I so much about rural African culture. Georg Ritschl will be taking cloudbusters to villages and will be reporting on the progress of their healing work.

During his geology career some years ago, Gert was associated with a doctor who was employed by the same mining company he was doing prospecting for. They had occasion to travel in Southern Africa together often in their jobs and once the doc asked Gert, who was driving, to make a wide detour so he could visit an area where he sometimes treated people pro bono. This fellow was very fond of Africa and the native people he'd known, so it was a labor of love.

The detour involved an entire day of driving. A day of driving in Africa isn't like we're accustomed to here, of course, since most roads are not paved or even maintained regularly.

The reason Gert told me this story was to illustrate the innate psychic abilities of rural-dwelling Africans, and perhaps their beneficial influence on the doctor through association.

The doc had asked Gert to go to that place in an offhand manner, almost an afterthought, but though it took them a day to get there, it took the many Africans who had showed up then to receive treatment many days to get there on foot from various villages.

They simply knew he was going to show up, so they left in plenty of time to get there to meet him. Africans, generally, don't hurry for anyone.

The doc didn't seem at all surprised to see that large group of villagers, serene under the big tree by the road junction.

Does reading this make you want to throw away your wristwatch? Don't do that, but do consider the implications of a village in a country in South Africa, Botswana, Namibia, Zimbabwe or Zambia getting a cloudbuster from you, courtesy of Johannesburg's premier cloudbuster maker, Georg Ritschl.

A noted Persian philosopher once said 'The black race are the pupil of the eye of humanity.' He had also referred to humanity as a garden full of flowers of various hues, fragrances and shapes, and how monotonous a garden made up of one specie of flowers must be.

As I mentioned many times, all we need to do to see what's important in this world right now is to look at the things the regime is trying hardest to destroy. Nobody would deny that Africa has not sustained the most enduring, devastating and aggressive genocide campaigns in modern history.

This isn't a charity appeal. We're going to get some solid, liberating energy from freeing these African nations from the HAARP-imposed drought/famine protocols they're under right now, and subsequent reports from the villagers, through Georg, to us, will greatly increase the already well-established and reputable store of information we've gathered already about healing the atmosphere, our own spirits, and beyond.

For those who consider efforts like this to be more appropriately expended in our own countries, first, consider that the planet is already like a single country, and all of humanity are related by blood.

In case you don't know, a cloudbuster in this part of the world often gets wildly dramatic results. This is probably because there aren't HAARP arrays every 400 square miles or so as there are throughout the North America and Europe, also because there are no chemtrail jets spewing barium salts on rainclouds. The ambient orgone field in Africa is arguably twice as vibrant and strong as in North America and Europe, too, so a little boost in that atmosphere gets multiplied by the atmosphere itself.

That's probably something that has to be experienced to be understood or even believed. It certainly makes it easier for Carol and I to understand how much more magical African society is than our own

Abstract

The failure of conventional medicine to cure the human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) infection compels many people living with the virus to seek alternative therapy. This pilot study determined the effectiveness (clinical and laboratory responses) of α-Zam (defined by the herbal therapist as Nigella sativa and honey), which is used by patients seeking herbal remedies for HIV infection in Nigeria. Six patients taking this herbal concoction as an alternative therapy for HIV infection were recruited into the study and monitored for 4 months. All six patients were infected by HIV, as confirmed by Western blot analysis in the nearest teaching hospital, i.e. LAUTECH teaching hospital or Ahmadu Bello University Teaching Hospital, before commencing preliminary clinical and laboratory examinations using World Health Organization (WHO) and Centres for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) criteria. The patients were contacted daily and visited regularly after commencement of herbal medications to assess the efficacy (disappearance of presenting signs and symptoms associated with HIV infection), side-effects, drug toxicity, and compliance. The symptoms and signs associated with HIV infection disappeared within 20 days of commencement of herbal therapy with significant difference ($p < 0.05$) before treatment and at periodic intervals on α-Zam therapy. Body weight increased from an average of 53 ± 2 kg to 63 ± 2 kg, viral load (HIV-RNA) decreased from 42,300 ± 1500 infection based on a significant improvement in both the clinical features and laboratory results of HIV infection. However, a longer follow-up is suggested to ensure that the observed improvement is sustained. In addition, a large population study is needed to confirm our observation in this cohort of people.

... Nigella sativa was documented to be potent antimicrobial agent on bacteria, fungi, protozoa and viruses (Alijabre et al, 2005; Akhtar and Riffat, 1991; Morsi 2000; Topozada et al, 1965). Previous studies and presentations of a herbal remedy (α-zam) that contained Nigella sativa and honey as the main constituents, other auxiliary constituents were not declared for public use by the herbal therapist (Onifade et al 2011; Onifade et al 2012; Onifade et al 2013). Further studies with other herbal therapists suggested that Nigella sativa and honey alone may be effective in HIV infection. ...

... HIV infection had generated many interests since about 3 decades when it was discovered. The general dogma that HIV infection is not curable had been questioned in recent years with reported cases of 'Missisipi child', 'Berlin patient' and sustained sero-reversion and complete recovery of HIV infected patients (Hutter et al, 2009; Onifade et al, 2012; Onifade et al, 2013; Onifade et al, 2014; Saez-Cirion et al, 2013). The potential effective therapeutic agents documented were associated with problems of cost, availability and reproducibility (Blanco, 2013). ...

... In Nigeria where the agriculture sector contributes more than 30% of the GDP and employs about 70% of the labor force [15], high postharvest losses has continued to be observed in food supply chains of perishable agricultural commodities like fruits and vegetables [16]. Conservatively, 60% of food supply from developing nations like Nigeria is wasted as a result of deterioration [17] . Furthermore, Idah, et al. [18] stated an estimated loss of fruits and vegetables commonly in the tropics occurred between production areas and consumption points to be between 50 -70%. ...

Ala (also known as Ani, Ana, Ale, and Ali in varying Igbo dialects) is the female Alusi (deity) of the earth, morality, fertility, and creativity in Odinani. In Odinani, Ala rules over the underworld and holds the deceased ancestors in her womb. Her name literally translates to "ground" in the Igbo language, denoting her powers over the earth and her status as the ground itself. Ala is considered the highest Alusi in the Igbo pantheon. Ala's husband is Amadioha, the sky deity.[citation needed]

As the goddess of morality, Ala is involved in judging human actions and is in charge of Igbo law and customs known as omenala. Taboos and crimes among Igbo communities that are against the standard of Ala are called nsọ Ala. All ground is considered holy land as it is Ala herself. With human fertility, Ala is credited for the productivity of the land. Ala's messenger and living agent on earth is the python (Igbo: éké), which is especially revered in many Igbo communities. In art, Ala is often represented as a regal figure seated on a throne, surrounded by her family. In the past, such figures took the form of life-size mud sculptures in special festive shrines dedicated to the deity and known as mbari.[citation needed]

Power [edit]

It is said that if a person commits a taboo in a community, that they have also desecrated or insulted Ala as the abomination (called ajo njo or Aru Ala, Alu Ani) was committed on her earth. Ala is also responsible for many aspects of Igbo society and guardianship of women and children in general. She is often depicted with a small child in her arms and her symbol is the crescent moon. It is believed that the souls of the dead reside in her sacred womb. All in the community have to respect Ala as everybody lives on ala, the earth. It was sometimes believed that Ala could swallow people up into the underground.[citation needed]

Ala is still worshiped by the Igbo of Nigeria and is annually paid homage to during the yam festival.[citation needed]

Isa ibn Mazyad al-Aswad

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

Isa ibn Mazyad al-Aswad (died 772) was the first ruler of the oasis town of Sijilmasa, in what is now southeastern Morocco.

According to the traditional account, as narrated by the medieval sources (chiefly the 11th-century geographer al-Bakri), Sijilmasa was founded in 757/58 by a community of 40 Sufri Kharijites, led by the Berber Samgu ibn Wasul al-Miknasi.[1] The establishment of the town was part of a larger westward movement of Sufri Kharijites in the Maghreb, fleeing the westward expansion of Abbasid power in Ifriqiya, and the establishment of the rival Ibadi Kharijite Rustamid emirate of Tahert.[2]

Somewhat surprisingly, as Charles Pellat comments, the community chose Isa, who was reportedly the son of a black African convert to Islam, as their leader.[1] Due to unspecified offensive actions, he was deposed by his subjects in 772, who left him to die, tied to a tree and exposed to the mosquitoes.[1][3] He was succeeded by Samgu.[1] Modern historians have suggested this episode as the result of ethnic or tribal rivalries, namely, that the election of Isa was due to an initial predominance of black Africans in the region, and his deposition and replacement as the result of the growth of the Kharijite Berber population over time.[4]

Maugris

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

Maugris or Maugis was one of the heroes of the chansons de geste and romances of chivalry and the Matter of France that tell of the legendary court of King Charlemagne. Maugis was cousin to Renaud de Montauban and his brothers, son of Beuves of Aygremont and brother to Vivien de Monbranc. He was brought up by Oriande the fairy, and became a great enchanter. He won the magical horse Bayard and the sword Froberge which he later gave to Renaud.[1]

Maugis on his horse Bayard, fighting against the Infidels, in Renaud de Montaubant. Loyset Liédet, Bruges, 1462-1470

Maugis fighting the Saracen wizard Noiron in Aigremont, in Renaud de Montaubant. David Aubert, Bruges, 1462-1470

French texts [edit]

Main articles: The Four Sons of Aymon and Renaud de Montauban

The oldest extant version of the story of Maugris was the anonymous Old French chanson de geste Quatre Fils Aymon dating from the late 12th century. It tells the tale of the four sons of Duke Aymon (Renaud de Montauban, Guichard, Allard and Richardet), their magical horse Bayard, and their adventures and revolt against the emperor Charlemagne.

From the 13th century on, other texts concerning Maugris were created; together with the original, these are grouped as the "Renaud de Montauban cycle". These poems are: Maugis d'Aigremont (story of the youth of Maugis), Mort de Maugis (story of the death of Maugis), Vivien de Monbranc (story of the brother of Maugis), Bueve d'Aigremont (story of the father of Maugis, Bueve d'Aigremont, brother to Girart de Roussillon and Doon de Nanteuil).[2]

Italian texts [edit]

Along with Renaud (as Rinaldo), Maugris, as Malagi or Malagigi, is an important character in Italian Renaissance epics, including Morgante by Luigi Pulci, Orlando Innamorato by Matteo Maria Boiardo and Orlando Furioso by Ludovico Ariosto.

Esclavage au Maroc : La véritable histoire

La traite des noirs n'est pas la seule représentation de l'esclavage. Il y en a d'autres, bien sûr, qui se sont glissées dans la vie quotidienne et se sont perpétuées jusqu'à nos jours. L'esclavage moderne emprunte certaines formes à l'ancien. Il y est question de racisme, de suprématie des races ou des classes sociales. Et d'un homme dominant, exploitant, et asservissant un autre homme ou groupe d'hommes. Zamane a enquêté sur l'origine de ce fléau social, qui fait partie aujourd'hui de l'héritage, parfois très lourd, de l'humanité. Que signifie l'esclavage ? Comment a-t-il pénétré nos sociétés ? Jusqu'à quel point s'y est-il perpétué et quelles autres formes a-t-il pu épouser au fil des siècles et des décennies? Surtout, quelle est la place de ce phénomène, comparé à d'autres régions du globe, à d'autres sociétés et d'autres cultures ?

INTERVIEW

CHOUKI EL HAMEL

PROFESSEUR À L'UNIVERSITÉ D'ARIZONA AUX ETATS-UNIS

L'HISTOIRE DE L'ESCLAVAGE AU MAROC DEMEURE MAL CONNUE. CHOUKI EL HAMEL, PROFESSEUR À L'UNIVERSITÉ D'ARIZONA AUX ETATS-UNIS, FAIT PARTIE DE LA NOUVELLE GÉNÉRATION DE CHERCHEURS QUI REVISITENT L'HISTOIRE DE L'ESCLAVAGE AU MAROC. SES THÉORIES SONT AUJOURD'HUI INCONTOURNABLES.

PROPOS RECUEILLIS PAR SAMI LAKMAHRI

«LE CORAN RECOMMANDE EXPLICITEMENT DE LIBÉRER LES ESCLAVES»

Le terme d'esclavagisme revient avec force dans l'actualité, y compris en Afrique du Nord. Quelle définition scientifique donnez-vous à l'esclavage ? La résurgence et l'utilisation de ce terme, est-elle, selon vous légitime ?

Selon la déclaration universelle des droits de l'homme, la situation d'esclavage concerne les personnes qui sont forcées à être la possession d'autres personnes qui les exploitent. Les victimes ne bénéficient d'aucun droit et sont à la merci de ceux qui les possèdent. Les « maîtres » contrôlent même leurs vies. L'esclavage est un système coercitif d'abus et de domination. Malgré ce qu'a accompli l'humanité dans le domaine des droits de l'homme, l'impact pratique demeure limité dans le monde réel. Des formes diverses de servitude continuent d'exister dans de nombreux pays africains comme la Mauritanie, le Mali, le Niger, le Nigéria, le Burkina Faso, le Tchad, le Soudan, l'Egypte ou encore la Libye. Ces pays sont régulièrement pointés du doigt par les organisations anti-esclavagistes les plus influentes. Les migrants subsahariens sont aussi confrontés au racisme et à la discrimination en Afrique du Nord. L'actualité que vous évoquez concerne la situation en Libye, où des réfugiés et migrants ont été vendus comme des esclaves. Ce dogme moyenâgeux sévit également au Moyen-Orient à travers les autoproclamés jihadistes de Daech. Non seulement ces groupes continuent à pratiquer l'esclavage, mais ils n'hésitent pas à asservir des musulmans appartenant à d'autres sensibilités religieuses. Face à cette problématique, il devient crucial que les intellectuels fassent entendre leur voix afin de dénoncer ces atrocités. C'est grâce à cela que nous pouvons trouver une lueur d'espoir. Jusqu'à il y a récemment, l'esclavage en Afrique et spécialement au Maghreb était mal connu et peu étudié d'une manière académique. Les approches esclavagistes et raciales de cette partie du monde étaient en général traitées d'une manière bien trop simpliste. En ce sens, les tendances commencent à s'inverser et je pense que nous allons enfin dans la bonne direction.

Que considérez-vous aujourd'hui comme esclavage moderne au Maroc ? L'exemple des «petites bonnes», ou celui des «trafics de migrants» s'inscrivent-il dans ce phénomène ? Peut-on considérer ces pratiques comme un héritage de l'histoire de l'esclavage au Maroc ?

Le traitement réservé aux servantes et aux domestiques est pour moi le fruit d'un héritage. C'est une forme de servitude qui contraint de jeunes filles à vivre dans des conditions des plus précaires. Les anciennes formes d'esclavage n'ont en réalité pas disparu, elles se sont simplement transformées. Nous sommes en effet passés d'un mode social quasi féodal au colonialisme capitaliste qui promeut une production réalisée grâce à de maigres salaires. Les « petites bonnes » sont virtuellement esclaves de leurs employeurs car elles demeurent en position de faiblesse et sont obligées de travailler pour survivre. Un autre exemple de cet héritage esclavagiste est la situation des Haratine, qui ont été spoliés de leurs terres et auxquels a été dénié tout droit humain dans le sud du Maroc. Dans un récent article paru dans la presse arabophone, un « Hartani » de la ville de Laâyoune déclarait que le meilleur statut auquel pouvait accéder un membre de son ethnie était chamelier. Il existe également des villages bannis où les habitants sont marginalisés et ne peuvent jouir des droits les plus élémentaires. Il en est de même dans d'autres régions, près de Chefchaouen ou de Zagora. Le gouvernement semble poursuivre les codes makhzéniens d'avant-Protectorat en continuant à dénier aux Haratine leur droit à la propriété de leurs terres ancestrales. De plus, les manquements de l'Etat dans la protection des droits humains de ces individus, l'application de la Charia et des lois discriminatoires inhibent l'émancipation de l'identité des Haratine. C'est le point essentiel que j'ai voulu illustrer dans mon ouvrage « Black Morocco: A History of Slavery, Race, and Islam – 2012 ndlr ». Il n'y est pas question que d'histoire mais aussi et surtout du présent, car l'esclavage au Maroc est une problématique contemporaine.

Comment pouvons-nous lutter contre ce phénomène ?

Grâce aux efforts conjugués des ONG et des médias, l'opinion publique est désormais alertée sur la marginalisation des Marocains noirs victimes d'un héritage de crime racial qui demeure impuni. Aujourd'hui, le fait de débattre de ce sujet n'est plus tabou. Il est vrai également que certains migrants subsahariens parviennent à décrocher un emploi stable qui leur permet d'envoyer de l'argent dans leurs contrées d'origine, comme le ferait un migrant en Occident. Mais la majorité d'entre eux restent en marge de la société.

Vous liez racisme et histoire de l'esclavage au Maroc. Expliquez-nous.

Ce paradigme racial, spécifique au Maroc, est significatif. Pas seulement parce qu'il nous renseigne sur le processus de discrimination et les limites de l'assimilation dans le royaume, mais aussi parce qu'il nous permet de repenser la définition traditionnelle de l'esclavage. Nous avons besoin de plus de recherches sur les histoires silencieuses de l'esclavage dans toute l'Afrique du Nord. La mise en esclavage des musulmans noirs par leurs coreligionnaires à la peau plus blanche, à savoir les Arabes et les Berbères, est un problème historique qui mérite une profonde investigation. Au Maroc, il existe un débat concernant l'interprétation des textes sacrés qui concernent cette question. L'islam, à l'instar des autres religions monothéistes, a été politiquement manipulé pour servir des intérêts matériels spécifiques. En d'autres termes, le pouvoir politique et socio-économique passe outre les préceptes et les idéaux défendus par le Coran.

Ainsi, tous les groupes subalternes et en servitude sont victimes de cette hiérarchisation idéologique et sociologique. La culture des Arabes, ou des arabisés d'Afrique du Nord, est raciste et perçoit les populations noires comme inférieures. Ces dernières sont prisonnières d'une mobilité sociale extrêmement réduite. L'une des théories que j'expose dans mon livre est celle d'un système marocain « racialiste » qui est, curieusement, l'inverse du système raciste occidental. Lorsque dans le modèle occidental, une goutte de sang «noir » vous enferme dans la catégorie des « noirs», dans le modèle marocain une goutte de sang « arabe » vous donne accès aux privilèges d'une caste «supérieure ». C'est ce processus qui a aidé à créer une majorité de nationalistes arabes et subjugué dans le même temps les individus aux ancêtres noirs. Aujourd'hui, il est important de noter que les associations locales des droits de l'homme organisent des campagnes pour dénoncer le racisme à l'encontre des migrants subsahariens. Mais les Marocains noirs sont moins visibles dans leurs revendications, certainement à cause de la culture du silence qui règne depuis longtemps. Cette population paye également l'inconstance du mouvement abolitionniste, censé être l'instrument indispensable à l'émancipation politique.

L'ISLAM, COMME D'AUTRES RELIGIONS, A ÉTÉ MANIPULÉ POLITIQUEMENT POUR SERVIR DES INTÉRÊTS MATÉRIELS SPÉCIFIQUES

Cela est dû au contexte social bâti lui-même sur un système qui renie à la population noire un statut social digne. Pourtant, le message religieux est basé sur l'égalité politique, économique et sociale de tous les musulmans, quelle que soit leur ethnie. Mais ce message ne semble pas être entendu par les codes culturels établis par les dynasties successives. Un système qui a finalement créé et répandu des termes à connotation péjorative tels que 'abd' (esclave), 'akhal', 'asuqi', 'azzi' ou 'hartani' (noir).

Existe-t-il des documents ou études historiques qui remontent au-delà ?
Nous ne connaissons pas encore exactement l'importance et la nature de l'esclavage préislamique au Maroc. Les études menées par Rodney et Susan McIntosh (anthropologues américains, ndlr) suggèrent un modèle d'interactions sociales basé sur un système de castes, nourri probablement par une activité limitée d'esclavagisme. Il paraît plus évident que les Romains possédaient des esclaves provenant de Nubie, d'Ethiopie et de l'Ouest du Soudan. Cette réalité a été rendue possible par l'introduction du dromadaire dans cette région d'Afrique au cours du premier siècle après J.C. Plus tard, de nombreux documents précisent en revanche que le commerce d'esclaves transsaharien s'est fortement développé au moment de la conquête arabe au VIIIème siècle. Ce réseau de commerce a été bâti sur des routes déjà empruntées par les populations berbères. Ibn Khaldoun, notamment, nous apprend que les Berbères ont également été esclavagisés. Dans ce cas, l'islam a été utilisé pour justifier ces raids. À cette époque, l'hostilité aux frontières des terres islamisées permettait aux esclavagistes de profiter de la capture de leurs ennemis pour en faire des esclaves. Les sources mentionnent surtout le cas des femmes esclaves revendues comme domestiques ou concubines. Les hommes quant à eux devenaient principalement des soldats esclaves.

Quel était le circuit de la traite des humais au Maroc ? Ce « marché » était-il plus réservé à un usage interne ou plutôt tourné vers l'étranger ?
Depuis le Xème siècle, les musulmans arabo-berbères établirent de fructueuses routes commerciales avec le puissant royaume du Ghana, ponctuées d'importants comptoirs, tels que Sijilmassa ou encore Awdaghust. L'esclavage était une activité majeure de ce circuit économique. Selon Ibn Battouta, la ville berbère de Takadda était le point de jonction des deux grandes voies de la transsaharienne, à savoir celle de l'ouest qui traverse le Maroc jusqu'à la Méditerranée et celle de l'est qui se termine en Egypte. Certains experts de l'histoire de l'esclavage estiment qu'en moyenne 1000 esclaves étaient transportés à travers le Maroc en une seule caravane entre le Moyen-âge et les temps modernes. La plupart d'entre eux étaient destinés aux travaux domestiques à l'intérieur des foyers marocains. Néanmoins, il est important de remarquer que les Portugais achetaient des esclaves appartenant aux Marocains, surtout lors des périodes de famines et d'épidémies. Le chroniqueur portugais du XVIème siècle, Bernardo Rodrigues, livre un précieux témoignage sur les pratiques de son époque. Il explique comment il a lui-même acheté cinq esclaves à Azzemour. Selon lui, cette ville était un important marché d'esclaves. Il décrit des centaines de bateaux amarrés sur le quai pour prendre part à ce commerce d'êtres humains. Il rapporte que l'offre était si abondante que les acheteurs se contentaient d'acheter seulement des femmes et de jeunes hommes à des prix dérisoires. Le chroniqueur précise qu'à cette époque, vers 1520, jusqu'à 1000 esclaves étaient vendus par jour dans la région d'Azemmour et de Safi. Les Espagnols n'étaient pas en reste puisqu'ils pratiquaient le même commerce dans leurs fiefs atlantiques, surtout à Agadir. Un document comptable de la ville de Jerez de la Frontera, près de Cadix, dénombre 60.000 esclaves marocains vendus à des marchands espagnols pour la seule année 1523. Ce mouvement important peut s'expliquer par leurs besoins en main-d'œuvre suite à l'expulsion des populations juives et musulmanes de la péninsule ibérique suite à la chute de Grenade en 1492.

Diverses interprétations de l'esclavage en islam existent encore aujourd'hui. Que dit réellement la religion à ce propos ?
Les courants wahhabite et salafiste continuent de fermer les yeux sur la pratique de l'esclavage. Il y a cependant quelques penseurs comme l'Egyptien Nasr Hamid Abou Zayd (décédé en 2010, ndlr) ou l'écrivain anglo-pakistanais Ziauddin Sardar qui bousculent la lecture traditionnelle en proposant une analyse revisitée. Dans mon livre, je propose également une lecture alternative de l'esclavage dans l'islam. J'y affirme qu'il n'y a aucun verset du Coran qui considère l'esclavage comme une norme sociale. De même, il n'existe aucun mot dans le texte sacré qui tolère ou encourage cette pratique. En réalité, le Coran ne se projette jamais dans le futur à l'évocation de la question de l'esclavage. En clair, il ne donne pas de recommandations du genre « que faire à l'acquisition d'un esclave ? ». En revanche, le texte livre des directives lorsque vous êtes déjà en possession d'un esclave et recommande explicitement de le libérer. L'expression consacrée en arabe est « ma malakat aymanoukoum », littéralement « ce que vos mains droites possèdent ». Elle a souvent été interprétée par les théologiens comme une métonymie du concubinage. En somme, que le Coran tolère l'esclavage à des fins de concubinage. Une interprétation érigée par la loi islamique et qui conforte les intérêts des hommes dans la préservation de la pratique culturelle et ancestrale du concubinage, « tassari », héritée de l'ère préislamique. La lecture de l'expression « ma malakat aymanoukoum » devrait plutôt se comprendre comme une option à l'intérieur même de l'institution du mariage et non pas comme une référence au concubinage. Il faut savoir que cette pratique était un moyen de contraindre une esclave à satisfaire les désirs sexuels de son maître, mais proscrite par le Coran. Il me paraît donc évident que le message du Coran et celui du Prophète n'ont pas été compris et appliqués. Cette situation profite à la société patriarcale qui a pu perpétuer ainsi la pratique du concubinage et de l'esclavage.

IL N'EXISTE AUCUN MOT DANS LE TEXTE SACRÉ QUI TOLÈRE OU ENCOURAGE LA PRATIQUE DE L'ESCLAVAGE

Dans vos travaux, vous évoquez les polémiques qui ont existé dans l'histoire du Maroc à propos de la codification de l'esclavage. Comment le Makhzen a-t-il pu faire fructifier cette rente ? Le cas de Moulay Ismaïl est-il le plus emblématique ?
D'une part, l'esclavage au Maroc était organisé selon les règles de la loi islamique. D'autre part, les musulmans marocains asservissaient parfois les musulmans noirs sous la fausse accusation de paganisme. Des textes juridiques, tel que « Daftar Mamalik as-Sultan Moulay Ismaïl » (le registre des esclaves appartenant à Moulay Ismaïl), fournissent un témoignage critique cohérent de la pratique de l'esclavage au Maroc au début du XVIII[ème] siècle. Ce registre légal a homogénéisé les différents statuts et origines des Noirs dans la catégorie unique des esclaves. À ce stade, le message égalitaire de l'islam est devenu étranger à de nombreux musulmans au Maroc. Les principes moraux suggérés par le Coran et les Hadiths concernant l'émancipation des esclaves et la promotion des droits de l'homme et de la dignité sont en fait entrés en contradiction avec l'intérêt de la classe dominante et de la culture esclavagiste. L'exemple de Moulay Ismaïl est loin d'être unique. Il existe de nombreux précédents. Des documents historiques, tel que « Mi'raj as-Soud » d'Ahmad Baba, de Tombouctou au début du XVIIème siècle, sont des exemples de textes juridiques qui illustrent comment les identités et altérités ont été construites et violées au nom de l'islam. Ce qui est particulier finalement, ce n'est pas tant la pratique des préjugés raciaux et de l'esclavage, mais plutôt que de telles attitudes et pratiques existaient partout en Afrique du Nord. Les Arabes et les Berbères au Maroc ont perçu la haute mobilité ascendante des Abid al-Bukhari, la Garde noire de Moulay Ismaïl, comme une transgression contre l'ordre social, quitte à leur rappeler leurs origines, leur condition d'esclaves et leur couleur de peau. Le cas de Moulay Ismaïl est emblématique car il a réussi à rassembler, humilier et violer les droits légaux de plus de 221.320 personnes noires, à savoir leur droit naturel à la liberté, garanti par leur conversion à l'islam et leur statut de résidents de longue durée, et protégés par l'autorité et la jurisprudence islamiques. Alors que la décision de Moulay Ismaïl d'enrôler de force tous les Noirs dans son armée était politique, il a invoqué des distinctions raciales confondues avec le paganisme pour justifier l'asservissement des Noirs marocains. Son intention était de convaincre les érudits influents que les besoins de l'Etat, comme celui de créer une armée formidable pour défendre la terre de l'islam, fournissaient les mandats pour asservir les musulmans noirs libres qu'il croyait avoir tous été esclaves. En conséquence de cette conscription forcée de masse, la perception des noirs a été radicalement modifiée. Cela a renforcé les préjugés et déterminé l'image future des Noirs au Maroc.

Pourquoi le colonialisme français a-t-il aussi été laxiste sur la question de l'esclavage ? Existe-t-il une législation officielle interdisant l'esclavage ?
Le mouvement abolitionniste est un concept moderne, mais le rejet moral de l'esclavagisme a toujours accompagné l'histoire de l'islam. Toutefois, cette position ne devient efficace qu'à partir du XIX[ème] siècle et le contact avec les Occidentaux et leur mouvement abolitionniste déjà entamé. Les Tunisiens, par exemple, n'ont pas attendu l'occupation par la France pour abolir l'esclavage en 1846 alors même que Paris ne l'avait pas encore aboli. Au Maroc, le courant conservateur dominant n'a pas fait de même. Aucun décret royal n'est venu mettre fin à cette pratique. Les autorités coloniales françaises ont été en effet réticentes à prendre des mesures à l'encontre du Maroc et de son système d'esclavage. Ils ont donné un consentement tacite pour que les esclaves, essentiellement des domestiques, demeurent dans les foyers de leurs employés. Il faut attendre 1950 pour signaler le premier document administratif officiel concernant l'arrêt de l'esclavage. Auparavant, en 1935, le Protectorat, en coopération avec le Palais, s'engage enfin à combattre les marchés d'esclaves clandestins. Il est surprenant de constater que le régime colonial, qui clame des idéaux au service de la civilisation et qui constitue son principal justificatif dans son entreprise coloniale, n'ait pas fermement condamné et aboli l'esclavage au Maroc. En réalité, la France n'a fait qu'œuvrer pour ses intérêts économiques. En conséquence, les Français ont permis la régulation des domestiques et des concubines selon les lois de la Charia en vigueur.

Estevanico

Mustafa Azemmouri (c. 1500–1539), better known by his slave name Estevanico ("Little Stephen"), was an Moroccan explorer from Azemmour, Morocco, servant in Spain, who became the first African explorer of North America. He has been referred to as "the first great black man in America".[1][2][3] He is known as Esteban de Dorantes, Estebanico, and Esteban the Moor. He was sold to a Spanish nobleman in Spain in about 1521, and taken in 1527 on the Spanish Narváez expedition to establish a colony in "La Florida", which at the time was composed of present-day Florida, and all unexplored lands to the north and west, including Northern Mexico.

Names

Estevanico is recorded by different names, in the Portuguese, Spanish, Arabic and English languages, in a variety of historic works. Among the most common are Arabic: إستيفانيكو; "Mustafa Zemmouri" (مصطفى زموري), "Black Stephen"; "Esteban"; "Esteban the Moor"; "Estevan", "Estebanico", "Stephen the Black", "Stephen the Moor"; "Stephen Dorantes" and "Esteban de Dorantes," after his owner Andres Dorantes;[4] and "Little Stephen". The names "Estevanico" and "Estebanico" are the diminutive of his actual Spanish name of "Esteban"—the diminutive being how Spaniards referred to a child affectionately or to a servant condescendingly.

Early life

Estevanico was sold into slavery in 1522 in the Portuguese-controlled Amazigh town of Azemmour, on Morocco's Atlantic coast. Some contemporary accounts referred to him as an "Arabized black";[5] or "Moor", a generic term often used for anyone from North Africa.

He was acquired as a servant by a Spanish nobleman, Andrés Dorantes de Carranza. He had undoubtedly been raised as a Muslim, but because Spain did not allow non-Catholics to travel to the New World, most historians believe that he was required to convert to Roman Catholicism in order to join the expedition. His Christian name, Esteban, suggests that he may have been baptized. Whether he remained secretly a Muslim cannot be known from historical records.

The Narváez Expedition

The expedition, led by the newly-appointed adelantado (governor) of La Florida, Pánfilo de Narváez, left Cuba in February 1528 intending to go to Isla de las Palmas near present-day Tampico, Mexico, to establish two settlements. Storms and strong winds forced the fleet to the western coast of Florida. The Narváez expedition landed in present-day St. Petersburg, FL on the shores of Boca Ciega Bay. Narváez ordered that his ships and 100 men and 10 women sail north in search of a large harbor that his pilots assured them was nearby. He led 300 men, with 42 horses, north along the coast, intending to rejoin his ships at the large harbor. There is no large harbor north of Boca Ciega Bay and Narváez never saw his ships again.

After marching 300 miles north, they built boats to sail westward along the Gulf Coast shoreline hoping to reach Pánuco and the Rio de las Palmas. A storm struck them when they were near Galveston Island, Texas. Approximately 80 men survived the storm, being washed ashore at Galveston Island. After 1529, three survivors from one boat, including Estebanico, became enslaved by Coahuiltecan Indians; in 1532, they were reunited with a survivor from a different boat, Álvar Núñez Cabeza de Vaca.[6]

The four men, Cabeza de Vaca, Andrés Dorantes de Carranza, Alonso del Castillo Maldonado and Estevanico, escaped captivity in 1534 and traveled west into Texas and Northern Mexico. They were the first Europeans and the first African to enter the American west. Having walked nearly 2,000 miles since their initial landing in Florida, they reached an area near Sinaloa, Mexico where they encountered Spanish slavers, then travelled to Mexico City, 1,000 miles to the south.

Little would be known about Estevanico were it not for the fact that Cabeza de Vaca published a book about their 8-year survival journey, the Relación in 1542 and again in 1555. It became the first book ever published describing the peoples, wildlife, flora and fauna of inland North America, and the first to describe the American bison. In the Relación, Cabeza de Vaca often referred to Estevanico as "the black" and described him as the one who went in advance of the other three survivors, as he was the most able to communicate with the native Indians that they encountered. In the last sentence of the Relación Cabeza de Vaca identifies "the black" who had been on the survival journey. In a translation done by Sterling Professor Rolena Adorn (Yale University) and researcher Charles Patrick Pautz, it is translated as, "The fourth is named Estevanico; he is an Arabic-speaking black man, a native of Azamor".[7] Another translation, done by Professors Martin A Favata (University of Tampa) and José B. Fernández (University of Central Florida) translated the last sentence as "The fourth is named Estebanico, he is a black Arab and a native of Azamor"[8]

Three years after his 8 year survival journey from Florida to Mexico City, Estevanico was chosen by the Viceroy of New Spain (Mexico) in 1539 to serve as the main guide for a return expedition to the Southwest led by Fray Marcos de Niza seeking "the Seven Cities of Cibola". Marcos de Niza reported in his own Relacíon that Estevanico was killed in the Zuni city of Hawikuh in 1539.[9] The idea that Estevanico was killed at that time is speculative, as the Indians who reported Estevanico's death to Friar Marcos de Niza did not see him killed but only assumed he had been killed.[10] Estevanico was the first non-Native to visit Pueblo lands.[11][12]

North American explorer

Reconstructed route of the Narváez-Cabeza de Vaca expedition.

Dorantes took Estevanico as his slave on Pánfilo de Narváez's expedition of 1527 to colonize Florida and the Gulf Coast. They left Cuba in February 1528, intending to establish two settlements in present-day Mexico at the Isla de las Palmas near today's Tampico. The Narváez fleet was forced by strong winds to sail to Florida. They landed in Boca Ciega Bay in April 1528. After failed efforts to locate villages with gold near present-day Tampa Bay and after enduring numerous attacks by Native Americans, Narváez split his forces, hoping to find a better place for settlement at a large bay to the north. He ordered the ships to sail north along the coast, with Narváez and 300 men traveling overland, planning to rejoin the land force with the ships at the large harbor. There is no large harbor north of their landing site, and the ships and the land expedition did not meet again. After traveling 300 miles north to the St. Marks River, Narváez determined they could reach Panuco by sailing westward along the coast. The estimated 250 survivors slaughtered their horses, melted down metals from bridles and stirrups, and made five boats to try to sail along the coast Gulf of Mexico to reach the main Spanish settlement at Pánuco. The boats wrecked off the coast of Texas, and most of men aboard the boats were lost at sea. About 80 surviving men washed ashore, and most were killed or died in the ensuing six years of captivity by native Indians. Eventually only Estevanico, Dorantes, Cabeza de Vaca and Castillo remained alive.[13] The four spent years enslaved on the Texas barrier islands.[6]

In 1534 the four survivors escaped into the American interior and became medicine men. As medicine men they were treated with great respect and offered food, shelter, and gifts, and villages held celebrations in their honor. When they decided they wanted to leave, the host village would guide them to the next village.[14] Sometimes as many as 3,000 people would follow them to the next village.[15] The party traversed the continent as far as western Mexico, into the Sonoran Desert to the region of Sonora in New Spain (present-day Mexico), where they encountered a slave-hunting group of Spaniards. The slave hunters told them that the main Spanish settlement was in Mexico City, 1,000 miles to the south. The four survivors traveled to Mexico City, arriving in July 1536.

Expedition to New Mexico and Death

In Mexico City, the four survivors told stories of wealthy indigenous tribes to the north in the "Seven Cities of Cibola", which created a stir among Spaniards in Mexico.[16] When the three Spaniards declined to lead an expedition to the north, Estevanico was sold or given to Antonio de Mendoza, the Viceroy of New Spain. He appointed Estevanico as the guide in expeditions to the North.

In 1539, Estevanico left Mexico City, travelled to Sinaloa, and accompanied Friar Marcos de Niza as the guide in search of the fabled Seven Cities of Cibola, preceding Coronado by a year. Estevanico traveled ahead of the main party with a group of Sonoran Indians. He was instructed to communicate by sending back crosses to the main party, with the size of the cross equal to the wealth discovered. One day, a cross arrived that was as tall as a person, causing de Niza to step up his pace to join the scouts.[17] Estevanico had apparently reached the A:shiwi village of Hawikuh (in present-day New Mexico). The local natives prefer the spelling Hawikku. (The Spanish later referred to the A:shiwi as Zuñi, and a corruption of that name, Zuni, is still used today). Stories concerning Estevanico's encounters with the A:shiwi are all based on legend. There is no first-person account of exactly what happened at Hawikuh. According to the Marcos de Niza account, the Zuni reportedly killed him and a large number of Northern Mexican Indians that had accompanied him. After hearing this, De Niza quickly returned to New Spain.

There is no certainty as to the cause or manner of Estevanico's death, and likely never will be. Virtually all stories of his death are based on legend or speculation. Some historians suggest that Estevanico was killed because the Zuni did not believe Estevanico's story that he represented a party of whites that was to follow him. Others speculate that he was killed for demanding turquoise and women.[18] Roberts and Roberts wrote that others suggest that since Estevan, who was black and wore owl feathers and carried a medicine-man's gourd", the Zuni may have determined that he was pretending to be a medicine man, which was punishable by death. Others opine that may have looked like an evil sorcerer that existed in the Zuni religion, the "Chaikwana", usually represented by a black kachina."[19] Juan Francisco Maura suggested in 2002 that the Zunis did not kill Estevanico, and that he and friends among the Indians faked his death so he could gain freedom from slavery.[20] Some folklore legends say that the Kachina figure, Chakwaina, is based on Estevanico.[21]

TED Speaker TED Attendee

Website: Ron Eglash's homepage Website: Creating designs with African fractals Book: African Fractals

Ron Eglash is an ethno-mathematician: he studies the way math and cultures intersect. He has shown that many aspects of African design — in architecture, art, even hair braiding — are based on perfect fractal patterns.

Why you should listen

"Ethno-mathematician" Ron Eglash is the author of African Fractals, a book that examines the fractal patterns underpinning architecture, art and design in many parts of Africa. By looking at aerial-view photos -- and then following up with detailed research on the ground -- Eglash discovered that many African villages are purposely laid out to form perfect fractals, with self-similar shapes repeated in the rooms of the house, and the house itself, and the clusters of houses in the village, in mathematically predictable patterns.

As he puts it: "When Europeans first came to Africa, they considered the architecture very disorganized and thus primitive. It never occurred to them that the Africans might have been using a form of mathematics that they hadn't even discovered yet."

His other areas of study are equally fascinating, including research into African and Native American cybernetics, teaching kids math through culturally specific design tools (such as the Virtual Breakdancer applet, which explores rotation and sine functions), and race and ethnicity issues in science and technology. Eglash teaches in the Department of Science and Technology Studies at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute in New York, and he recently co-edited the book Appropriating Technology, about how we reinvent consumer tech for our own uses.

What others say

“Next time you bump into one of those idiots who starts asking you questions like, 'where is the African Mozart, or where is the African Brunel?' -- implying that Africans do not think -- send them a copy of Ron Eglash’s study of fractals in African architecture and watch their heads explode.” — mentalacrobatics.com

October 25, 2013

If you look closely at the Lideta Mercato — a shopping mall in Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, designed by TED Fellow Xavier Vilalta — you will notice a unique pattern on its skin, inspired by the beautiful, bold patterns found on Ethiopian women's dresses. But if you look closer, you will also notice something else: that [...]

Как на самом деле выглядел Шекспир?

11.04.2021 от RandomV

Исследователи считают, что они наконец-то определили наиболее точное изображение всемирно известного драматурга.

Хотя литературные таланты Шекспира хорошо известны, один аспект его жизни, который с годами оставался туманным – это как же он все-таки выглядел?

Существуют многочисленные изображения Шекспира. От картин и рисунков до скульптур и статуй, но все они не похожи друг на друга, и историки долгое время пытались определить, какое из них наиболее точно описывает самого гения.

Известно, что два портрета, которые считаются наиболее похожими на оригинал, были созданы уже после его смерти.

Однако теперь выясняется, что изображение, найденное над его могилой в церкви Святой Троицы в Стратфорде-на-Эйвоне, на самом деле могло быть истинным и “окончательным” подобием покойного барда.

Первоначально считалось, что это неточный посмертный памятник, скульптура – когда-то прозванная как “самодовольный мясник”. Но теперь выяснилось, что она была заказана самим поэтом и была сделана кем-то, кто знал его лично.

Позже исследователи узнали, что скульптором был некий Николас Джонсон, известный создатель гробниц и надгробных памятников в то время.

Human meat – Wesker and Son butchers at Smithfield Market

Posted on September 30, 2013 by The Picky Glutton | 41 Comments

But for the squeamish or vegetarians...

I don't have much love for restaurants such as The Cinnamon Club but I do love Wesker and Son (also known as Wesker's) in Smithfield Market (named for its interior). Organised by the publishers of the upcoming Nordoc's 6 mini-zine parties, Wesker and Son opened its doors to us for a night of food, drink and entertainment. Now I'm not a big fan of entertainment but I'm a big fan of free food and drink, and the food was exactly as promised. As we were shown around the building, we were treated to Cocktail Number 1 \(Gin, Lillet Blanc, Cocchi Americano, Orange Bitters\) and Cocktail Number 2 \(Gin, Cocchi Americano, Lemon Juice, Orange Bitters\) by Wesker and Son's mixologist, Jonny Raglan.

Once everyone had their cocktails in hand, we were led to the first course of the evening, Cornish Crab, Avocado, Pickled Cucumber and Dulse.

Cornish Crab, Avocado, Pickled Cucumber and Dulse

Next was Slow Roasted Pork Belly, Pickled Apple and Fennel.

Slow Roasted Pork Belly, Pickled Apple and Fennel

Then came Roasted Cauliflower, Pickled Raisins and Hazelnuts.

Roasted Cauliflower, Pickled Raisins and Hazelnuts

Venison and Red Cabbage was the penultimate course.

Venison and Red Cabbage

Finally, we were treated to Chocolate Mousse, Salted Caramel and Hazelnuts.

Chocolate Mousse, Salted Caramel and Hazelnuts

Unfortunately, I was unable to take photographs of the next course, Pig's Head, Pickled Vegetables and Mustard Dressing, as I was too busy eating it. I'm not squeamish when it comes to eating animal parts, I'll eat anything, but I'm not a fan of pig's head. I'm not sure why, I've had it before and I've had it since, but I just don't like it. I'm not sure if it's the texture or the taste, but I'm not a fan. I'm not sure if I'll ever be a fan. I'm not sure if I'll ever try it again. I'm not sure if I'll ever eat it again. Satan Castle History and Legend

31/07/2020 75 Ardahan, Eastern Anatolia Region, GENERAL, TURKEY

Şeytan Castle is an old castle located in Yıldırımtepe village of Çıldır district of Ardahan province. This fortress in the historical Erusheti region is referred to as "Kacistsiba" (Devil's Castle) in Georgian sources and it is believed that the na[illegible]fter the Ottomans took Mari, written in the 12th century, that "Kacta Tsihe" is not the Alamut Castle but the Devil Castle.

Location

Şeytan Castle is located on a rocky hill on the right bank of a stream, 1,3 km north of the center of Yıldırımtepe village, formerly known as Rabat. It is possible to reach this hill, which has a cliff on three sides, from only one direction. It is believed to be called Şeytan Castle due to its difficult access and capture due to this location. However, as the fortress could not be captured, the invincibility of the fortress was associated with evil spirits and the devil, as well as a legend among the public.

The castle, which is 1910 meters above sea level, has reached the present day quite solidly. The castle has an unsymmetrical plan and its dimensions are 161 × 93 meters and the castle has three towers. One of them has survived to the present day.

Today, the Devil's Castle, which is illuminated at night, is reached by a paved vehicle right up to the viewing hill, and after this point, it is reached by a pathway.

History

There are suggestions that the Devil's Castle was built during the Urartu period. However, these views are not based on any historical sources. According to the information given by later sources, it is understood that the castle should have been an early medieval castle. However, due to its location, it is very likely that such a place was a fortress in earlier dates. However, resources to prove this are not yet available.

According to the case of Meshuri Matiane, which describes the Georgian principality Samtshe-Saatabago and the history of neighboring states between 1561-1587, the ruler of Satan Castle Samtshe-Saatabago II. While under the leadership of Manuçar, Manuçar agreed with Lala Mustafa Pasha and gave six castles, including the Devil's Castle, to the Ottomans. The Devil's Castle was used during the Ottoman period from the 16th century as well as the Georgian Kingdom and Samtshe-Saatabago periods. It is known that there is a commercial area near the castle. This place, known as Rabat, later turned into ordinary settlement.

Structures in the castle

The Devil's Castle has a single nave church built in the 14th century. Only four walls remain from this church, which is at the bottom of the castle and dedicated to St. Stefan. In the castle, the remains of the stair steps descending to the cistern and the stream have survived to the present day.

L'effacement du corps de l'ouvrier. La santé au travail lors de la première industrialisation de Paris (1770-1840)

par Thomas Le Roux*

« Enivrons-nous amis sans souci ni remords
Demain dans le travail nous puiserons la mort »
Charles Gille, Chant des cérusiens, vers 1840.

De la fin du XVIII[e] au début du XIX[e] siècle, un grand nombre de secteurs artisanaux et industriels commencent à être bouleversés par l'adoption de procédés innovants, de nouvelles organisations du travail et de rythmes inédits, avec d'importantes conséquences pour la santé des artisans et des ouvriers [1]. Or cette question de la santé au travail a été relativement peu abordée par les historiens pour la période préindustrielle ou celle de la première industrialisation [2]. Il est pourtant fondamental de connaître la façon dont la société s'est emparée de ce problème durant cette phase de transformation économique, sociale et culturelle. Comment les changements des conditions de travail et l'adaptation des corps des travailleurs ont-ils été perçus par les acteurs du monde économique, les observateurs sociaux, les médecins ? Leurs réactions, leurs diagnostics et leurs réponses permettent de mettre en lumière l'un des aspects les plus essentiels de l'acculturation industrielle de nos sociétés occidentales.

On sait, depuis les travaux de Michel Foucault, que le grand basculement entre les deux siècles réside dans la structuration de la discipline des corps [3]. Mais, si dans le monde pénal ce contrôle est une contrepartie à l'abaissement des violences physiques infligées aux criminels, il semble que discipline et meurtrissures aillent de pair dans le monde du travail. Que le débat historique porte sur l'usure au travail ou sur les maladies professionnelles, il est indéniable que l'industrialisation donne naissance aux « douleurs, souffrances et misères du corps » [4] et que le discours médical porté à ce sujet n'est pas exempt d'ambiguïté. Il y a vingt-cinq ans, en s'appuyant sur les articles des Annales d'hygiène publique et de médecine légale, Bernard-Pierre Lécuyer expliquait que les hygiénistes avaient – paradoxalement – favorisé l'émergence d'un discours de dénégation des dangers du travail sur la santé, parce que leur rôle s'intégrait dans les mécanismes de l'économie politique et in fine de l'ordre social[5]. Cette thèse stimulante a été peu approfondie depuis et mérite d'être reformulée à l'aide de nouvelles sources, d'un recours à une périodisation qui remonte jusqu'aux tous premiers pas de l'industrialisation, et enfin d'un terrain d'analyse particulièrement fécond : Paris.

Entre 1770 et 1830, la capitale subit une mutation morphologique qui lui permet d'ajouter à ses anciennes fonctions de métropole politique, administrative, financière, commerciale, culturelle et religieuse une dimension industrielle qui lui donne une certaine prépondérance en France dans bon nombre de secteurs. Si le textile et l'industrie chimique font naître la nouvelle ville industrielle, quantité d'unités de taille intermédiaire, souvent de dimension artisanale, procurent une activité intense qui n'est pas sans revers : la question des maladies des artisans est ainsi régulièrement soulevée. Celle-ci concerne une partie seulement des travailleurs, ceux qui manipulent des produits toxiques comme les composés de plomb ou de mercure. Sans être représentatifs de toutes les productions, ces métiers (chapellerie, dorure sur métal, étamage, etc.) ont connu une grande évolution dans leur processus productif au cours du XVIII[e] siècle. Ils reposent sur une grande variété de savoir-faire et sur la vigueur de leur corporation[6]. Concernant l'artisanat du luxe, ils ont une forte visibilité qui rend les pathologies de leurs ouvriers d'autant plus propices au débat public.

L'étude de la relation santé-travail durant la première industrialisation de Paris permet de mettre en perspective la naissance de l'étrange discours de minimisation des risques de la part des hygiénistes du XIX[e] siècle. Ce processus n'est pas linéaire. À la fin de l'Ancien Régime, un débat sur la question de la santé au travail émerge au contraire, au point que les ouvriers et les artisans commencent à être reconnus par beaucoup comme des victimes de l'activité économique. Avec la Révolution française, le problème est temporairement occulté, jusqu'à la fin de la période impériale. Enfin, après un regain d'intérêt pour cette question, la théorisation de l'effacement du corps de l'ouvrier est progressivement réalisée et se parachève en 1840.

Dans les années 1770, le problème des maladies des artisans fait subitement l'objet d'un débat dans les sphères médicales parisiennes, dans les académies, enfin dans l'opinion publique. Cette nouvelle préoccupation s'intègre dans la naissance du mouvement hygiéniste[7]. Elle s'explique aussi par l'aggravation des conditions de travail de quelques secteurs artisanaux parisiens [8]. Le nouveau regard médical concorde enfin avec des facteurs institutionnels. La création de la Gazette de santé en 1773, puis de la Société royale de médecine en 1776, enfin la traduction par Fourcroy en 1777 de l'Essai sur les maladies des artisans écrit par Ramazzini en 1700, créent un contexte favorable à la description et l'interprétation des principales affections sanitaires subies dans le monde du travail.

Revue initialement proche de la faculté de médecine de Paris, la Gazette de santé indique en 1773, dans la préface de son premier numéro, qu'elle n'oubliera pas « les malheureux ouvriers, dont la santé est si souvent altérée », ce qu'elle rappelle à nouveau en juin 1775. L'année suivante, la Gazette affirme qu'il faut « fréquenter les ateliers, pour sentir combien il est difficile, dans la plupart des arts, de conserver la santé des ouvriers » [9]. De fait, entre 1774 et 1776, elle relate successivement les souffrances physiques et les maladies des carriers, des tailleurs de grès, des peintres qui broient eux-mêmes leurs pigments, des doreurs sur métaux, des chapeliers, enfin des fossoyeurs [10]. Si, dans le même temps, l'autre revue médicale, le Journal de médecine, est beaucoup plus discrète, plusieurs ouvrages paraissent à ce sujet. Ainsi, en 1776, Gardane, doyen de la Faculté de médecine et déjà auteur des Recherches sur la colique métallique, traduit le Traité des mauvais effets de la fumée de la litharge, écrit en latin en 1656, l'enrichit de notes et décrit des métallurgistes victimes des coliques du peintre, dues aux émanations de ce dérivé du plomb. En 1761, un autre médecin de la Faculté de médecine avait écrit un livre détaillé sur ces maladies des ouvriers maniant des composés de plomb [11]. Ces publications s'ajoutent à des enquêtes de médecins parisiens non publiées, comme celle de Tenon sur les ouvriers de la chapellerie parisienne (1757) ou encore de Leroux des Tillets, futur doyen de la faculté, sur une maladie des ouvriers de la manufacture royale de porcelaine de Sèvres (1780) [12].

La création de la Société royale de médecine à la fin de 1776 constitue un accélérateur de la prise de conscience. Dès le départ, elle se donne pour tâche d'étudier les maladies des artisans par un recensement des professions pouvant être nuisibles et par la recherche de moyens de prévention [13]. La liste des questions envoyée à son réseau de correspondants annonce un champ de recherche novateur qui se veut exhaustif :

> quelle est la situation et l'étendue des ateliers ; quelle est la nature des eaux dont on y fait usage ; de quels instruments les ouvriers se servent ; quelles > sont les matières qu'ils emploient ; suivant quels procédés on les traite ; quelles vapeurs s'en élèvent ; si les ouvriers sont en grand nombre dans la même salle ; quelle est leur attitude ; quels sont leurs mouvements ; quelle est leur nourriture et leur manière de se vêtir ; quels sont, chez eux, les organes les plus fatigués ; enfin si ces procédés ont quelquefois influé sur les épidémies régnantes [14].

À la suite de cet appel, elle reçoit entre 1778 et 1790 de nombreux mémoires sur les maladies des ouvriers, dans lesquels des médecins de Nantes, Montpellier, Marseille, Paris ou même de l'étranger dépeignent des pathologies ouvrières et la souffrance des corps. L'inspecteur des manufactures Pajot des Charmes envoie lui aussi cinq mémoires, entre 1787 et 1790, portant sur les maladies des verriers, des drapiers, des imprimeurs, des fondeurs en poterie, enfin des teinturiers [15]. Dans ses publications, la Société donne une part non négligeable aux maladies professionnelles, dont la description s'intègre dans les diverses topographies locales [16]. C'est aussi dans ce cadre qu'elle commande à Fourcroy, alors étudiant en médecine, la traduction de l'œuvre majeure de Ramazzini, écrite en 1700 ; Fourcroy y ajoute une introduction importante et des notes très documentées, actualisant ainsi les connaissances sur les maux des artisans et ouvriers, et offrant un regard plus parisien. Dès sa publication en 1777, l'ouvrage connaît un retentissement considérable [17].

Ces différents jalons marquent une prise de conscience de l'élite médicale. Sous l'impulsion d'un généreux donateur, Montyon, l'Académie des sciences s'empare elle aussi du problème et propose à partir de 1782 plusieurs prix extraordinaires récompensant l'auteur qui trouverait les moyens de préserver les ouvriers des dangers auxquels les exposent leurs différents travaux. Ancien intendant, Montyon est alors conseiller d'État, administrateur philanthrope [18]. Il vient de participer à la publication des Recherches et considérations sur la population (1778), ouvrage écrit par son secrétaire Moheau et dont un chapitre est consacré aux « métiers destructeurs de l'espèce humaine ». Ce livre important, qui ouvre des perspectives statistiques préfiguratrices, suggère une politique publique financée par un impôt taxant le « luxe homicide » et conclut son chapitre sur la nécessité d'une intervention de l'État pour « s'occuper, dans la partie des Arts mécaniques, d'un objet auquel personne ne fait attention, parce qu'il est étranger à tout intérêt particulier : la conservation des hommes », avant de préciser avec optimisme la nouveauté du propos : « Le champ est vaste, le sujet presque neuf, l'objet est noble, et peut-être les succès ne sont pas très difficiles » [19].

Pour convaincre l'Académie de consacrer un prix aux arts insalubres, Montyon avait rédigé un argumentaire particulièrement éloquent et évocateur sur les accidents et les maladies des travailleurs, assimilés à des victimes :

> Tandis que l'on applaudit au succès des Arts, on oublie que presque toutes leurs opérations sont malsaines ou meurtrières. Il s'en faut de peu que le dénombrement des différentes classes d'ouvriers ne soit une liste de victimes. […] Dans toutes ces professions la matière extraite ou fabriquée s'atténue ou se volatilise, s'insinue dans le corps humain, et y porte des particules arsenicales, sulfureuses, métalliques, vénéneuses, ou des molécules incisives, ou une poussière qui attaque les poumons, ou un air corrompu, espèce de mouffette artificielle. Lorsque la décomposition de la matière n'est pas pernicieuse, les ouvriers périssent par l'action excessive du feu ou par une situation forcée et continue. […] Souvent la nature des travaux occasionne des morts violentes ou des accidents funestes […]. Quel triste résultat de l'industrie ! Nos bâtiments sont cimentés avec du sang, nos vêtements en sont teints, nos plaisirs en sont infectés ; il n'est point de jour où la richesse n'ordonne des meurtres : et la vie humaine est mise à prix comme un effet commerçable [20].

Les quatre prix proposés par l'Académie des sciences entre 1783 et 1789 [21] ne recouvrent évidemment pas toutes les maladies artisanales, ni même n'énumèrent la totalité des nuisances des activités de production au sein des ateliers. Néanmoins le choix des métiers (doreurs, chapeliers, étameurs, broyeurs de couleurs) est révélateur à la fois d'une situation parisienne et du constat d'une dégradation de la condition ouvrière dans la deuxième moitié du XVIII[e] siècle. Ces professions appartiennent à une économie du luxe en plein essor à Paris (objets dorés, chapeaux fins et feutrés, miroirs, papiers peints, etc.) qui provoque une hausse de la production et des impératifs techniques moins favorables à l'ouvrier. La nocivité de ces travaux réside notamment dans l'usage du mercure, commun à la dorure, la chapellerie et l'étamage, dissout avec de l'acide nitrique dans les deux premiers cas (nitrate de mercure). Il provoque des tremblements aboutissant à une paralysie parfois mortelle [22]. Quant au broyage des couleurs, il met en suspension des poussières d'oxydes métalliques (de plomb, de cuivre ou de mercure) et de sulfure d'arsenic, et provoque chez le peintre des paralysies, des tremblements, des coliques mortelles [23]. En 1775, un médecin de l'hôpital de la Charité s'alarme de la quantité de peintres ou de broyeurs de couleur, victimes de coliques de plomb dues à la céruse et au minium. L'année suivante, la Gazette de santé dénonce les procédés « inutiles, bizarres et abusifs » du secrétage des peaux au mercure, qui est censé faciliter le feutrage des poils[24]. Ce procédé, introduit en France vers 1735, venait d'être généralisé après la rupture de l'approvisionnement en peaux de castors en 1763 à la suite de la perte du Canada. En effet, les peaux de lapins, qui y furent substituées, se secrétaient plus difficilement, ce qui semblait justifier l'usage du mercure[25].

La dénonciation des conditions de travail dépasse le cercle des médecins et des académiciens, et émerge plus largement dans la conscience collective et politique. Des observateurs sociaux font le lien entre les espaces de travail resserrés, bas et humides, les positions artificielles imposées par les opérations, et certaines malformations constatées chez les ouvriers. Appliquées aux espaces de travail, les théories urbaines du siècle des Lumières recommandent de rassembler les ouvriers dans des lieux spacieux et aérés[26]. Mais même dans les grandes manufactures, aux ateliers vastes et bien ordonnancés, les conditions de travail semblent insupportables. Dans celle des glaces de la rue de Reuilly, où travaillent plusieurs centaines d'ouvriers, Louis-Sébastien Mercier décrit l'air suffocant, les convulsions des corps des ouvriers durant leur travail, et s'indigne presque des « efforts violents, [des] contractions effrayantes de tous les membres de l'ouvrier qui halète, souffle, sue, s'excède pour donner de l'éclat et de la transparence à une masse de sable vitrifiée ». Il dénonce également l'usage du mercure dans l'opération de l'étamage : « Tous leurs membres sont dans un continuel tremblement. Les carreaux de l'atelier du tain sont rongés et déchaussés par le mercure. Jugez de l'impression qu'il fait sur les corps ! […] Un homme très robuste peut gagner trois livres par jour dès son entrée à la manufacture ; mais aussi cet homme perd en moins de six mois la moitié de ses forces, et puis sa santé dépérit par degré, tant par la fatigue d'un travail qui absorbe et qui tue, que par l'insalubrité de l'air »[27]. Dans l'hôtel des Monnaies du quai Conti, où sont affinés les métaux précieux, derrière les façades majestueuses, il entrevoit « un pauvre diable à moitié nu, l'air have, et le visage décharné », occupé à battre monnaie[28]. Que la compassion empreigne les témoignages de Mercier ou ceux des médecins philanthropes et moraux (comme l'a montré Arlette Farge) ne nous surprendra pas, car tel est l'esprit de l'époque. Dans ce regard porté sur les souffrances physiques du travail, la parole ouvrière n'est guère prise en compte. Pour autant, certains artisans et ouvriers proposent des solutions. En 1765 puis 1775, les peintres parisiens Bachelier puis Chevalier inventent des moulins à broyer les couleurs qui protègent l'ouvrier des poussières[29]. Dans la chapellerie, Troussier prétend en 1784 avoir trouvé une manière moins dangereuse pour feutrer les chapeaux, tandis que Châtelain est connu pour faire usage d'une dissolution de nitrate de mercure plus étendue[30]. À Marseille, à partir de 1764, les « garçons » employés dans la chapellerie mènent également un combat de longue haleine pour réduire la concentration du mercure de nitrate, et obtiennent une victoire partielle en 1777, face à la résistance de la corporation, quand la proportion de mercure dans la composition de secrétage est diminuée et fixée par le parlement d'Aix [31].

Enfin, cette prise de conscience commence à s'immiscer dans les pratiques de la police. Autorité tutélaire des arts et métiers sous l'Ancien Régime, incarnée à Paris par le lieutenant général de police, elle avait pourtant un rôle traditionnellement dévolu à la discipline propre à chaque profession, au respect des règles de fabrication et la qualité des produits, ou encore aux nuisances provoquées par la production, mais à l'extérieur des ateliers seulement. Publié entre 1786 et 1790, le Dictionnaire universel de police de Des Essarts est le premier du genre à mentionner les dangers du travail artisanal pour les ouvriers [32]. En 1778, le lieutenant général de police Lenoir tente, sans succès néanmoins, de convaincre l'intendant du commerce et le secrétaire d'État à la maison du roi d'attribuer au peintre Chevalier un encouragement pour l'invention de son moulin à moudre les couleurs [33]. L'année précédente, il était intervenu énergiquement pour enrayer la propagation de la maladie du charbon (ou anthrax) survenue dans un atelier de cardeurs de crin situé rue du Fer-à-Moulin, au faubourg Saint-Marcel. Il avait été à cette occasion vivement félicité par le secrétaire d'État [34]. Ces interventions, ponctuelles et de faible portée, n'en demeurent pas moins remarquables. Elles ont été suscitées par l'émergence d'un problème qui alerte l'élite éclairée et interpelle les autorités politiques. Elles ressortent par ailleurs de la comparaison avec la période ultérieure.

L'occultation des problèmes de santé au travail (1789-1815)

À partir de 1789, s'opère un revirement spectaculaire : l'absence d'écrits médicaux, la multiplication d'accidents du travail, enfin le durcissement de la réglementation envers les ouvriers aboutissent à l'effacement du corps de l'ouvrier, qui n'est plus qu'un rouage d'une première industrialisation encouragée par les pouvoirs publics.

En 1791, les grandes institutions de contrôle et d'encadrement de l'économie (communautés d'arts et métiers, inspection des manufactures, enquêtes de commodo et incommodo) sont abolies, libérant les industriels de diverses contraintes, dont celles qui les lient à leurs ouvriers, sans contrepartie législative relative à la santé publique [35]. Un éphémère Comité de salubrité, en 1790 et 1791, sous la direction du médecin parisien Guillotin, et piloté par la Société royale de médecine et son secrétaire perpétuel, Vicq d'Azyr, tente de poursuivre l'important travail réalisé par cette dernière durant les quinze années précédentes. Il propose en septembre 1791 de voter un décret portant création d'agences de secours et de salubrité dans les départements, dont l'une des missions aurait été de définir « les précautions à introduire dans ces métiers en général, et dans tous les autres, pour la conservation des ouvriers »[36]. Mais la proposition est court-circuitée par le Comité de mendicité dirigé par le philanthrope La Rochefoucauld-Liancourt, rival de Guillotin. L'échec est lourd de conséquences. Ni la Législative ni la Convention ne s'occupent ensuite de police sanitaire de manière globale et cohérente.

La guerre, les problèmes d'approvisionnement et la mobilisation révolutionnaire laissent en effet au second plan toute préoccupation relative à la santé et à la sécurité des ouvriers et des artisans. Les accidents se multiplient dans les ateliers, et il s'avère que ce sont à chaque fois des défauts de précaution ou des procédés de fabrication plus expéditifs qui en sont la cause. Le plus grave, l'explosion de la poudrerie de Grenelle, le 1er septembre 1794, tue plusieurs centaines d'ouvriers, sans doute un millier. Face à cette situation, la politique sanitaire envers le monde de travail relève de l'assistance ou de l'urgence. Le Comité de salut public indemnise parcimonieusement les blessés de la manufacture des armes de Paris et ceux de la poudrerie de Grenelle[37], tandis qu'en messidor an II, il nomme un médecin pour soigner les ouvriers des fonderies de cuivre de Paris réquisitionnées pour les productions militaires de la nation. En effet, dans la plus grande d'entre elles, sur l'île de la Cité, les opérations nécessitaient une grande quantité d'acides forts ainsi qu'un feu ardent continuel, et provoquaient des hécatombes parmi les ouvriers[38]. Ces différents accidents sont désincarnés par le pouvoir. Ainsi, à Grenelle, tandis que les services sanitaires, aidés de nombreux volontaires, s'occupent de transporter les centaines de blessés dans les hôpitaux, le directeur de la poudrerie, Chaptal, relate un champ de bataille sans cadavres[39].

C'est d'ailleurs ce même Chaptal qui est au fondement de la nouvelle impulsion économique du Directoire, en tant qu'entrepreneur d'une nouvelle fabrique de produits chimiques à Neuilly, commune limitrophe de Paris, puis du Consulat, en tant que ministre de l'Intérieur[40]. Dès 1799, dans son Essai sur le perfectionnement des arts chimiques, il amorce un programme de gouvernement économique qui fonde un régime de biopouvoir. Les ouvriers n'ont pas leur mot à dire. Ainsi, écrit-il, le contrat d'apprentissage est nécessaire parce que les « divers travaux d'un atelier ne sont pas tous également faciles et agréables ; et comme le jeune homme n'est que trop souvent disposé à se refuser aux opérations difficiles ou dégoûtantes, il faut une force coactive pour l'y contraindre : or cette force n'existe que dans les liens qui le retiennent dans l'atelier et le mettent à la disposition du chef »[41].

Avec le Consulat, ce biopouvoir s'établit sur des bases solides et l'attention aux conditions de travail ne réapparaît pas. L'heure est plutôt à la statistique comme mode de gouvernement et au contrôle disciplinaire, et le livret ouvrier en est le symbole. Les relations entre le patron et ses ouvriers sont devenues une affaire privée dans laquelle les pouvoirs publics ne doivent pas s'immiscer. Ainsi, dans leur rapport sur les établissements industriels insalubres présenté à l'Institut en 1804, Chaptal et Guyton de Morveau sont indifférents à la souffrance ouvrière. Selon eux, l'odeur qui se dégage des ateliers de l'industrie chimique « ne présente aucun danger pour les ouvriers qui la respirent journellement ». Par ailleurs, et « heureusement », précisent-ils, les effets pernicieux des usines les plus insalubres « n'affectent que les ouvriers qui travaillent dans l'atelier ». Et ce problème est d'ordre privé car « tout y est, pour ainsi dire, aux risques et périls des entrepreneurs et fabricants ». Pour eux, la santé du travailleur concerne donc avant tout l'entrepreneur, qui a intérêt à conserver son personnel en bonne santé. En 1809, un second rapport de l'Institut sur ce thème reprend le même type d'arguments et insiste sur l'habitude des ouvriers à supporter les émanations dans les ateliers[42].

La réapparition du thème des mauvaises conditions de travail, sous l'Empire, est balbutiante. En 1804, Tenon lit et publie enfin à l'Institut son étude d'Ancien Régime sur les maladies des chapeliers. Entre 1806 et 1809, la Société d'encouragement pour l'industrie nationale étudie les inconvénients de l'usage du nitrate de mercure dans la chapellerie, et en 1810, lance un prix pour trouver un procédé de préparation des poils sans usage de mercure[43]. Quant à la Préfecture de police, elle n'est pas entièrement indifférente à la question de la santé au travail. Elle crée en 1802 un Conseil de salubrité, composé de savants prestigieux (Parmentier en est le premier président) et dont le rôle est de s'occuper de l'hygiène publique de la capitale. S'il n'a pas vocation à s'occuper des maladies des ouvriers, il émet rapidement des recommandations visant à préserver les hongroyeurs du risque d'asphyxie[44] et remarque aussi des problèmes sanitaires lors d'opérations effectuées par les décapeurs de boutons en cuivre à l'acide nitrique, les chandeliers, les épurateurs d'huile, les vernisseurs, la plupart du temps à l'initiative de son membre fondateur, le pharmacien Cadet de Gassicourt[45]. Nous sommes pourtant loin des descriptions sensibles des corps de la fin de l'Ancien Régime, et ces prémices d'action publique en faveur des affections dues aux conditions de travail sont loin d'être jugées suffisantes par certains médecins. L'un des plus réputés, Fodéré, s'insurge en 1813 contre l'attitude bienveillante des hygiénistes parisiens envers l'industrie, presque tous des chimistes et qui, considérant que le soufre est administré de façon curative dans certains traitements, pensent qu'on peut étendre ce principe à l'acide sulfureux. Auteur en 1798 du premier ouvrage d'hygiène publique publié en France[46], réédité et complété en six tomes encyclopédiques en 1813, Fodéré est alors titulaire de la chaire d'hygiène de l'École de santé de Strasbourg, la deuxième de France après celle de Paris. Il a alors un certain prestige et selon lui, « la plupart des arts mécaniques et des manufactures sont malsains, non seulement pour ceux qui s'en occupent, mais encore pour les voisins qui n'ont rien à voir ». À l'inverse des hygiénistes parisiens qui se contentent de visites ponctuelles d'ateliers et de fabriques, Fodéré préconise, pour se forger une opinion, de suivre l'ouvrier à la trace, dans les hôpitaux, les dispensaires des bureaux de bienfaisance : « c'est là qu'on peut sonder dans toute sa profondeur la plaie que portent à la santé et à la population certains arts et certaines manufactures »[47]. Son ouvrage, dans lequel il tente d'avertir les pouvoirs publics, coïncide avec la réapparition de la question à la fin de l'Empire.

Des mauvaises conditions de travail à nouveau dénoncées (1815-1821)

Dans un cycle réitératif des préoccupations de la fin de l'Ancien Régime, les problèmes de santé au travail redeviennent d'actualité au début de la Restauration, avec toutefois moins de description et plus de classification. Cadet de Gassicourt est chargé par le préfet de visiter toutes les fabriques pour faire un état des maladies des professions. Il en donne un aperçu et dresse une nomenclature des métiers insalubres qui a surtout valeur de note d'intention et d'appel aux médecins[48]. Après plus de vingt-cinq ans de silence, des propositions d'atténuation des maux du travail sont énoncées. Entre 1815 et 1817, Gosse, fils du lauréat des deux premiers prix sur les arts insalubres de l'Académie des sciences en 1785 et 1786, améliore la situation sanitaire des ateliers de doreurs, puis élargit ses recherches à toutes les professions insalubres. Il fabrique des tissus, éponges et masques pour éviter aux ouvriers chapeliers de respirer les gaz insalubres, et applique ses préconisations dans un atelier de la rue Copeau à Paris, où les manutentions provoquent une quantité importante de poussières[49]. En 1816, l'un des chapeliers parisiens les plus importants, Guichardière, indique avoir réussi à feutrer les poils sans mercure. L'Institut, enfin, récompense en 1814 Guédin pour ses travaux sur la construction d'un appareil qui préserve les doreurs des émanations du mercure. Puis il accepte le don du doreur Ravrio pour un prix sur le même sujet[50].

Le lauréat de ce dernier prix, Darcet, donne une impulsion à l'action publique contre les maux du travail. Membre du Conseil de salubrité de Paris depuis 1813, industriel parisien important, essayeur à la Monnaie de Paris (donc bon connaisseur des opérations métalliques et de leurs inconvénients), Darcet se montre alors extrêmement soucieux de la santé ouvrière. À la fin de 1817, il parcourt les ateliers parisiens de doreurs, y étudie les opérations, et fait appliquer ses principes de ventilation forcée [51]. Fort de ses premiers résultats, il répond au concours de l'Institut, qu'il remporte en 1818. Dans la note d'intention qui accompagne son mémoire, il se place d'emblée dans la perspective de l'assainissement philanthropique et de la recherche appliquée [52]. Il déploie un grand zèle pour introduire ses procédés de ventilation dans les ateliers parisiens. Il exhorte les autorités à intervenir énergiquement sur cette question sanitaire, dénonce aussi l'insouciance ou le cynisme des patrons [53]. La critique sociale point, mais ne perce toutefois pas. En effet, jamais Darcet ne remet en question l'usage du nitrate de mercure, parce qu'il est persuadé que son système de ventilation résout les problèmes de santé des doreurs. Son action incite le Conseil de salubrité à agir pour prévenir d'autres maladies du travail, par exemple celle des polisseuses [54]. Entre 1817 et 1821, Cadet de Gassicourt, le membre du Conseil le plus préoccupé par la condition ouvrière, réclame successivement des mesures pour atténuer les souffrances et les accidents des vidangeurs, des blanchisseuses, des affineurs de métaux précieux et des savonniers [55]. Mais leur action ne fonde pas une doctrine au sein de l'instance, car ses autres membres sont beaucoup moins intéressés par cette question et commencent même à dénier l'influence des professions sur la santé.

En dehors du Conseil de salubrité, l'intérêt pour la santé des ouvriers se renouvelle également chez les médecins et les savants. À son décès en 1820, Montyon, fondateur du prix sur les arts insalubres sous l'Ancien Régime, lègue sa fortune pour des œuvres de bienfaisance, dont un prix pour l'assainissement des métiers insalubres. Ce legs encourage la Société philanthropique à réaliser une « constitution médicale » de Paris et l'étude des maladies professionnelles. Les premiers travaux aboutissent en 1822 à la rédaction par le médecin Patissier d'un ouvrage sur les maladies des artisans, qui actualise celui de Ramazzini. La même année, dans sa topographie médicale de Paris, Lachaise insiste aussi beaucoup sur la santé des ouvriers [56].

Les années 1821-1822 apparaissent pourtant comme un terme à ce regard porté sur les souffrances physiques des ouvriers. Après cette date, la compassion n'est plus de mise au Conseil de salubrité. La mort de Cadet de Gassicourt en 1821 y contribue, car les autres membres n'y évoquent plus que rarement ce sujet. Par ailleurs, après son action pour l'assainissement des ateliers entre 1817 et 1821, Darcet, pourtant très actif au Conseil, n'intervient pratiquement plus pour remédier aux maux du travail. Après ses visites d'ateliers systématiques à la fin des années 1810, la dynamique s'essouffle et la diffusion de ses préconisations reste limitée[57]. À son image, le Conseil de salubrité abandonne cette politique volontariste au début des années 1820.

Le renouveau de la question des conditions de travail est donc bref. Il provoque toutefois la nécessité d'établir un discours cohérent sur leurs influences supposées dans les maladies et l'usure du corps. Paradoxalement, ce discours aboutit à un second effacement du corps de l'ouvrier. Il est théorisé par les hygiénistes du Conseil de salubrité, chargés par les autorités de faire coexister l'habitat urbain et l'industrie et d'accompagner l'industrialisation[58]. À l'intérieur des ateliers, cela ne pouvait passer que par une réfutation de la souffrance des travailleurs.

Le premier acte de la réfutation hygiéniste se joue à Clichy, commune suburbaine de Paris, entre 1821 et 1825, dans l'usine de céruse et de minium de Roard, où la production de ces deux poudres utilisées dans la peinture peut être mortelle pour les ouvriers, à cause des poussières à base de plomb[59]. La céruse, surtout, est un produit stratégique dans la concurrence économique avec l'Angleterre et la Hollande. Directeur des teintures de la manufacture des Gobelins, membre du Comité consultatif des arts et manufactures (organe de conseil économique du ministre), du Comité des arts chimiques de la Société d'encouragement pour l'industrie nationale, enfin du Conseil général des manufactures, Roard est, comme Darcet, un industriel et un homme de réseau. Son usine, fondée en 1809, s'accroît à partir des années 1813-1816 lorsqu'elle reçoit la protection du ministère de l'Intérieur et les éloges de la Société d'encouragement et de la préfecture de la Seine, qui mettent en valeur les procédés innovants de l'usine, propres à balayer les produits étrangers[60].

En 1821, puis 1822, les médecins de l'hôpital Beaujon alertent les autorités sur la progression rapide et le nombre important d'ouvriers de l'usine de Clichy (plus de cent) atteints de saturnisme[61]. L'inspection de l'usine, ordonnée par le préfet de Police, est confiée à Marc et Darcet, ce dernier étant, rappelons-le, un collègue de Roard à la Société d'encouragement, au Conseil général des manufactures et au Comité consultatif, les trois organismes de promotion industrielle en France à cette époque. C'est aussi lui qui avait rapporté en 1813 sur l'excellence des produits de l'usine. Admiratifs, Marc et Darcet dénient au broyage de la céruse son caractère nocif et pensent que seule l'opération de conditionnement de la poudre de céruse en pain dans du papier est dangereuse. Ils préconisent donc la suppression de cette opération finale. Les corps sont absents : Darcet et Marc ne poursuivent pas leur enquête dans les hôpitaux, n'examinent pas les ouvriers, ne décrivent pas les pathologies, n'interrogent pas les médecins. Surtout, ils tiennent un argument de nature économique : puisqu'en prenant cette mesure, la céruse française serait vendue en poudre, il faudrait aussi interdire l'importation de céruse venant de Hollande (qui est conditionnée en pain), car les préjugés amèneraient les peintres à continuer à l'acheter en pain, ce qui ruinerait la fabrique de Clichy[62]. La préconisation sanitaire arrive opportunément, du point de vue de la politique économique… En effet, contrairement aux assertions antérieures de Darcet, le pouvoir couvrant de la peinture à la céruse de Clichy est inférieur à celle de Hollande, et l'entreprise de Clichy ne parvient pas alors à percer sur le marché français[63].

Consulté par le ministre, le Comité consultatif des arts et manufactures émet le même avis. Mais son rapport, remis en février 1822, est signé par Thenard (proche ami de Roard et initiateur de l'usine), Gay-Lussac et… Roard ! Après un peu plus d'un an d'hésitations au sein des ministères de l'Intérieur et des Finances, une ordonnance royale du 5 novembre 1823 avalise ces conseils et interdit la fabrication et la vente de la céruse en pain[64].

Cette victoire de l'argumentaire hygiéniste fondé sur des principes économiques est de courte durée. En effet, l'application de l'ordonnance royale s'avère délicate, les peintres préférant continuer à utiliser la céruse en pain. En mai 1824, le Comité consultatif insiste pour qu'une instruction soit publiée afin qu'elle soit appliquée plus rigoureusement. Mais, en novembre 1824, le ministre constate que l'état de santé des ouvriers ne s'est pas amélioré, et projette de suspendre l'ordonnance royale. Les hygiénistes s'y opposent énergiquement. Dans un très long rapport de novembre 1824, le Conseil de salubrité réitère ses conclusions de 1821. C'est toutefois contre cet avis que, finalement, l'ordonnance est abrogée le 10 août 1825, laissant le choix dans les méthodes de fabrication. Le ministre préférait reconnaître l'évidence de l'échec de l'amélioration du sort des ouvriers[65].

L'affaire de la céruse illustre toute l'ambiguïté d'une action d'hygiène industrielle qui adopte des considérations économiques pouvant se révéler être antagonistes avec la santé. Si la position industrialiste du Comité consultatif est attendue, elle surprend au premier abord de la part du Conseil de salubrité. Elle s'explique par les liens entre les hygiénistes et les industriels, dont Darcet est l'archétype. Non seulement les hygiénistes n'ont pas identifié l'atmosphère surchargée de poussière de plomb régnant dans l'usine comme dangereuse, mais ils n'ont pas désigné non plus la production de minium, qui commence à être produit en grande quantité après 1819. Personne, pourtant, n'est dupe. Dans le journal ouvrier L'Atelier ou à travers d'autres témoignages, on connaît la morbidité de l'usine de Clichy, qualifiée d'abattoir humain, vers laquelle sont racolés bagnards, nécessiteux affamés et vieillards dépourvus de ressources et à l'approche desquels on pousse le cri "plomb !"[66]. Ainsi, après 1825, l'usine de Clichy continue de fonctionner et reste la première de la région parisienne, envoyant ses ouvriers saturniens mourir dans les hôpitaux. Entre 1833 et 1836, 385 malades de l'usine y sont accueillis, alors qu'elle n'emploie que quelques dizaines d'ouvriers par jour. Tout ceci malgré plusieurs visites du Conseil de salubrité, qui se contente de rédiger deux instructions prescrivant à la fois une ventilation des ateliers et une meilleure hygiène ouvrière, mais sans jamais remettre en cause la fabrication du produit[67]. À l'inverse, lorsque la parole ouvrière peut se faire entendre, il se dégage une vision de mutilation et de dégénérescence des corps par le travail, corps qui fatalement n'arrivent pas à « dompter […] le poison qui sommeille »[68].

Le deuxième acte du processus de dénégation de l'influence du travail sur la santé, à partir de 1829, a été mis en lumière par Bernard-Pierre Lécuyer et l'historienne américaine Ann Fowler La Berge[69]. Il est utile d'en résumer les principaux éléments, qui ne sont ici que reformulés. La démarche des hygiénistes consiste tout d'abord à mettre en doute la réalité des maladies du travail. Le rôle de Darcet, philanthrope respecté, hygiéniste influent et industriel reconnu, semble primordial et a été jusqu'ici sous-estimé. C'est pourtant lui, en 1829, qui signe avec Parent-Duchâtelet l'article devenu célèbre sur la santé des ouvriers des manufactures de tabac. Proche de Parent-Duchâtelet avec qui il a travaillé sur d'autres questions d'hygiène industrielle au Conseil de salubrité à partir de 1825, il est aussi membre fondateur des Annales d'hygiène publique et de médecine légale, créées en 1829, et qui se veulent autant une revue d'expertise sanitaire que de conseil en économie politique. L'article de 1829 sur les ouvriers des manufactures de tabac, qui paraît dans le premier volume, fonde véritablement la théorie de dénégation des effets du travail sur la santé ouvrière. Les anciennes observations médicales issues des travaux de Ramazzini sont dénigrées pour leur manque de preuves[70]. Plus largement, les deux auteurs entendent asseoir le phénomène industriel et légitimer sa présence, ce qui n'est possible qu'en désamorçant les critiques et les oppositions. Ils affirment ainsi vouloir aller à rebours de l'évidence pour éviter les réflexes d'hostilité contre les entrepreneurs :

> Nous le répétons, quelque importante que soit la connaissance de l'influence fâcheuse d'une profession, peut-être sommes-nous obligés de faire plus de recherches et d'accumuler plus de faits pour démontrer l'innocuité d'une fabrique que pour prouver ses inconvénients, qui se présentent toujours d'eux-mêmes, et qu'il n'est pas difficile de trouver ; c'est par ce moyen, nous en sommes assurés, que nous rendrons les plus grands services à beaucoup de fabricants qui exercent leur industrie à l'intérieur de Paris[71].

Ce faisant, ils mettent en doute le lien entre le travail et les maladies, noyé dans une argumentation complexe mêlant de nombreuses autres causes, telles que l'âge, le sexe ou la situation sociale. Cette réfutation est reprise par Parent-Duchâtelet jusqu'à sa mort (1836) avec ses études sur les débardeurs, les ulcères des artisans de Paris et les batteurs de tapis[72]. En 1835, il critique même l'utilité du prix Montyon sur les arts insalubres[73]. Villermé apporte quant à lui une dimension supplémentaire à cette dénégation de l'usure au travail[74]. En 1824, il écrit un mémoire (publié en 1830 par les Annales d'hygiène), qui établit une corrélation entre la pauvreté et la mortalité, renvoyant au second plan l'influence des métiers sur la santé et rompant ainsi définitivement avec la tradition médicale environnementaliste néo-hippocratique encore présente dans le livre de Patissier[75]. Avec d'autres hygiénistes, comme Benoiston de Neufchâteau ou Chevallier (membre du Conseil de salubrité), Villermé focalise son attention sur des critères sociologiques ; il désincarne le travail et l'ordonne dans les cases lisses de la statistique. En 1834, l'Académie des sciences lui demande de réaliser une enquête sur la santé des ouvriers en France. Alors qu'il est devenu à son tour membre du Conseil de salubrité, son enquête possède une visée politique : fournir une réponse à la question sociale qui agite la Monarchie de Juillet. Des médecins (non membres du Conseil de salubrité de Paris) comme Fodéré ou Pointe, à Lyon, commençaient à critiquer fortement les effets néfastes de l'industrie sur la santé ouvrière, sans même parler de l'action du préfet Villeneuve-Bargemont à Nantes puis à Lille, qui y crée des Conseils de salubrité[76]. Les résultats de l'étude de Villermé sur la santé des ouvriers de l'industrie textile sont publiés en 1840[77]. Renouvelant son diagnostic, il attribue les maladies à la situation sociale, aux mauvaises conditions de logements, à la malnutrition, à l'âge, etc. Ce faisant, il

> Je n'insisterai pas davantage pour prouver que les ateliers ne sont point exposés à ces prétendues causes d'insalubrité. On s'est singulièrement mépris en leur attribuant des maladies que produisent principalement le travail forcé, le manque de repos, le défaut de soins, l'insuffisance de la nourriture et sa mauvaise qualité, les habitudes d'imprévoyance, d'ivrognerie, de débauches, et pour tout dire, en un mot, des salaires au-dessous des besoins réels […]. C'est d'une manière indirecte, médiate, ou par les conditions de nourriture, de vêtement, de logement, de fatigue, de durée du travail, de mœurs, etc. dans lesquelles se trouvent les ouvriers, que les professions agissent le plus souvent en bien ou en mal sur leur santé ou sur celle de leur famille. Cette règle doit être regardée comme générale[78].

Afin de limiter l'usure au travail, les hygiénistes prônent plutôt l'amélioration des conditions de vie à l'extérieur des ateliers et militent pour la hausse des salaires ainsi que pour la réduction du temps de travail, notamment pour les enfants et les femmes. En suivant l'argumentaire villermien, ils se positionnent donc en tant qu'acteurs de l'économie politique. Leurs réflexions laissent ainsi libre cours à la possibilité théorique de minimiser les nuisances au travail et permettent aux autorités publiques de conserver un ordre économique dans lequel le corps de l'ouvrier est désincarné, s'est effacé derrière les chiffres, ce qui légitime la poursuite de l'industrialisation. Les travaux de Villermé sont cités très tôt pour défendre le bouleversement de société. Ainsi, dès 1826, F.-J. Bérard, fils de l'ancien associé de Chaptal dans son usine d'acide sulfurique de Montpellier, et titulaire de la chaire d'hygiène de la faculté de médecine de la même ville, invoque ses travaux sur la mortalité et la pauvreté pour glorifier l'avènement de la société industrielle et dénier l'influence néfaste des professions, entérinant ainsi la relation féconde entretenue entre l'hygiénisme et l'industrialisme :

> La salubrité des villes augmente tous les jours, et c'est d'ailleurs dans les villes seules que se forment les sciences, les arts manufacturiers, les lumières et les libertés publiques, toutes circonstances si favorables à la santé ! En exagérant tant qu'on voudra l'insalubrité des grandes villes, on ne donnera pas plus de force à l'argument ; il en est de cette circonstance, comme des professions insalubres que l'on voudrait à tort proscrire, et qui sont propres à augmenter la vie générale d'une population, dès qu'elles sont utiles ou indispensables à la société[79].

En 1840, les analyses de Parent-Duchâtelet et Villermé font référence et s'imposent avec la publication de l'enquête ouvrière de ce dernier. Elles fondent les politiques publiques d'hygiène industrielle et retardent de plusieurs décennies la création d'un corps d'inspection du travail[80]. Elles ouvrent la voie à l'expérimentation des corps en milieu manufacturier, c'est-à-dire leur adaptation au nouvel ordre économique[81]. Faisant confiance à l'industrie pour apporter les réponses aux maux qu'elle provoque, elles sont par ailleurs en cohérence avec la défense de l'innocuité des activités industrielles sur l'espace public défendue par le Conseil de salubrité à partir de la fin des années 1810.

Conclusion

Avec Darcet, Parent-Duchâtelet ou Villermé, la réfutation hygiéniste des dangers de l'industrie se théorise, et connaît son apogée en 1840. L'argumentaire tour à tour industriel, technique, psychologique et social renvoie les observations médicales à leurs insuffisances. Sa radicalité sera ensuite contestée. Ainsi, dans les deux décennies suivantes, des hygiénistes ou des médecins tels que Mélier, Tardieu ou Raspail critiqueront l'optimisme de Parent-Duchâtelet. Même Chevallier reviendra sur ses positions clémentes envers les effets néfastes des opérations industrielles, les maladies et l'usure des corps[82].

Il est particulièrement remarquable de constater un processus qui s'articule avec les changements de régime politique. Les liens qui relient la sphère politique et la perception des corps ouvriers ne sont pas faciles à rétablir, mais la coïncidence mérite d'être notée. Quand la Révolution française, dans son projet libéral, assimile l'ouvrier à la mécanique productive, quand l'Empire emploie des méthodes coercitives, les premières années de la Restauration sont traversées par la réaction Ultra contre la modernité dont l'industrialisation est un élément, avant que finalement, la Monarchie et l'Église n'acceptent la société industrielle et technologique[83], pour même l'encourager sous la Monarchie de Juillet.

Malgré ces ruptures de rythme, cette première phase d'industrialisation est traversée par une réfutation hygiéniste globale qui apporte une justification idéologique au développement économique, en minimisant les souffrances physiques du travail. Dans un monde où la statistique étend son emprise sur les moyens de la connaissance, les métiers les plus insalubres et ceux qui les occupent disparaissent à nos yeux. C'est un véritable changement de paradigme qui aboutit à l'effacement du corps des ouvriers. La société est prête à fonctionner avec des « ouvriers fantômes »[84]. À la fin du XVIII^{e} siècle, pourtant, rien n'était acquis. Les observateurs éclairés commençaient au contraire à être choqués des conséquences du travail sur la santé. Il aura fallu deux étapes pour enrayer cette préoccupation. La première est celle des réformes institutionnelles et libérales de la Révolution française. La seconde concerne l'économie politique et constitue la réponse des hygiénistes membres du Conseil de salubrité et des Annales d'hygiène face aux nouveaux dégâts d'une industrialisation en cours d'intensification. Au service des autorités, ces influentes instances de conseil et de diffusion accompagnent le processus de développement économique et aident l'acculturation de l'industrie dans les sociétés occidentales.

In German the word “Mohr” [Moor] is associated with people today referred to as sub-Saharan African, the historical usage aims contrast to people from North-West African regions, especially from East Africa (Ethiopia, Eritrea, Aksum, Nubia) and North West Africa (Mauritania, Western Sahara, Mali, Morocco, Algeria, see Bidhan).

In German, the word “Mohr” [Moor] apparently historically has a stronger affinity to the ancient Greek word ethiopos (for “burnt face”). The identification of Moors with Moors comes from the underlying likeness and the Spanish influence where moro for historical reasons, the word for the Arab-Islamic Moors.

MURAKUSH RESEARCH

This section of our website is dedicated informing interested parties of the findings concluded by Murakush derived from research and analysis of several topics and points of interest as it relates to the heritage, history and culture of the Moors.

The Moor's head is a heraldic charge associated with Wörth, Upper Bavaria, Germany.This is the ancient emblem of the Diocese of Freising, founded in the 8th century, which became a Metropolitan Archdiocese with the name of München und Freising in 1818, subsequent to the Concordat between Pius VII and King Maximilian Joseph of Bavaria (5 June 1817).

If in the Middle Ages, for example in connection with the "Moor of Freising", Latinized from caput aethiop (i) s or caput ethiopicum is mentioned, this has therefore not directly something to do in that time context with Ethiopia, but is already generally with "marshmallow" translating.

Luther was ordained to the priesthood in 1507. He came to reject several teachings and practices of the Roman Catholic Church

In this sense also translated Martin Luther the country Kush , the south of Egypt joined (to Ez 29,10 www.bibleserver.com“>LUT) and Greco-Roman language area was given the name Ethiopia (as also in the Septuagint), consistent with “Ethiopia”.

Here are (Jer 13:23 www.bibleserver.com“>LUT) may be crucial, which states: “*Can such Kuschite [Kushite] change his skin or the leopard his spots?” Here too Luther “the Moor”.

The prophet Isaiah contrast with his description of Kush does not allude to the skin color, but rather on their height (“tall”) and Unbehaartheit (“blank”). (Isa 18 www.bibleserver.com”>EU)

In view of the Ethiopian eunuch Luther also seems the terms “Orient” to identify with each other” and “Ethiopia”.

1670 wrote Jerónimo Lobo about the "true nature of Ethiopia, particularly the abbysinischen Kayserthums".

On the other hand Giovanni Cavazzi da Montecuccolo understood in 1694 at its historical description of "occidentalischen Mohr country" including, among other areas, the three kingdoms of Congo, Matamba and Angola .

Il Regno de Goti nella Spagna Abbattuto, e Risorto; overo La Perdita, e Racquisto della Spagna occupata da Mori by Rogatis, Bartolomeo de

In 1728 first appeared in German the report by Bartolomeo de Rogatis from the loss of the Kingdom of Spain and the re-conquest of those lands of the Moors , which turn the Moors are meant.

BISHOP SAMUEL ADJAI CROWTHER (1809-1891)

In 1894 the book Dr. Adschai Samuel Crowt der , the first Protestant Negro bishop, or Ethiopia shall stretch out her hands unto God released. Here, then, is also Nigeria in Ethiopia. It Appeared even in the early 1930s still titles such as Ethiopia was still Christian … (G. von Massenbach, 1933), the debut of Ethiopia (Biographical Samuel Ali Hussein, 1932) or old and new from Ethiopia (Church and Mission History of Christoph Schomerus, 1934), in which case both “black” and “Negro” interchangeably and increasingly throughout Africa for “Mohren-” or “negro country”.

"As the only people of this region familiar to the Greeks were the Nubians of what is now northern and central Sudan, "Ethiopia" often functioned as a synonym for the Nubian kingdom of Kush (or Meroë). The country now called Ethiopia vaguely fit under the same designation, but knowledge of it was scanty at best. The ancient Greeks also used "Ethiopia" to signal other unknown or quasi-mythical lands located to the south or east of the Mediterranean. As a result, even parts of India came to be regarded as "Ethiopia" in some accounts."

"In the early modern period, European geographers generally located Ethiopia in the unknown (to them) African interior, as can be seen on the map posted above. In certain circumstances, however, they applied the name to sub-Saharan Africa as a whole. As a result, the eastern South Atlantic was commonly dubbed the "Ethiopian Ocean" (or Sea) through the 1700s. In many maps of the time, the Ethiopian Ocean was depicted as extending from the South Atlantic into the western Indian Ocean. The modern concept of discrete oceanic basins dates only to the 1800s; previously, named oceans and seas were often conceptualized as strips of water wrapping around landmasses."

"In European usage, "Ethiopia" did not refer to the modern country of that name until the second half of the twentieth century. Previously, the Ethiopian kingdom (or empire) was generally called "Abyssinia," a term derived from the Arabic ethnic designation "Habesh." Yet in both Ge'ez, the sacred language of Ethiopian Christianity, and the modern Ethiopian Semitic languages (Amharic and Tigrinya), the country has long been called Ītyōṗṗyā. Ītyōṗṗyā is generally thought to be derived from the Greek "Ethiopia." Some experts reject the connection, however, arguing that the "Book of Aksum, a Ge'ez chronicle first composed in the 15th century, states that the name is derived from 'Ityopp'is,' a son (unmentioned in the Bible) of Cush, son of Ham who according to legend founded the city of Axum." Regardless of its ultimate origin, "Ītyōṗṗyā" certainly sounds as if it were a cognate of "Ethiopia." Yet even in Ethiopia itself, the Arabic-derived word "Habesha" still denotes the core Semitic-speaking ethnic groups, and is sometimes applied more broadly to all peoples of the country."

The mastaba tomb of Mereruka also known as Meri

The mastaba of Mereruka is situated in the north-east sector of the necropolis of Saqqara, not far from the edge of the plateau, just to the north of the pyramid of Teti, the first pharaoh of 6th Dynasty. During this period power of the pharaohs was declining as can be seen in the comparatively small size and poor construction of their pyramids. However, increasing power attained by the large aristocratic families became apparent in the size and quality of the decoration of their mastabas. Two mastabas, located next to each other, are of special importance, that of the vizier Mereruka and that of Kagemni (his predecessor). Mereruka's is by far the more complex and is located to the west of the other. It is not given over totally to Mereruka; his chambers will be given the prefix "A" (see plan). The south west quarter was designed as being a separate set of chambers for his wife, Watetkhethor; her chambers will have the prefix "B". The main structure was later extended at the north for his son, Meryteti; his chambers are prefixed "C". Both of these areas have their entrance from within the part of the complex devoted to Mereruka.

General plan of the area

Related Mastabas

Even though the mastaba of Kagemni was known from the mid-1800s, that of Mereruka remained unknown until it was discovered by J. de Morgan, the then director general of the Services of Antiquities, in July 1893. The Service built up its walls, roofed it, and opened it to the public. However, by 1912 it had once more to be freed from encroaching sand.
The first serious publication of the mastaba, by Prentice Duell, did not appear until 1936, although a rather brief summary had been produced some 40 years earlier by Georges Daressy. It is on these publications that the following information is based. The accompanying photographs come from a variety of friends of this Osirisnet site. Many of the drawings used throughout are based on those of Duell's publication.
Any measurements given in the following are my estimates, derived from Duell's plan of the mastaba. Duell did not provide any accurate ones. Curiously, no general survey has been published since that, even though incomplete, of Duell, which relates back to 1936. This presentation will thus try to propose, besides the classic approach, some new data.

MERERUKA AND HIS FAMILY

• Mereruka, his "beautiful" (or chosen) name Meri , as with all high officials, he was attributed with dozens of titles (see full list), some of which were purely honorific, but some were of functions which he actually performed. He would have held many of these before taking on the high office of vizier. Nowhere within the mastaba is there a comprehensive list.
Out of these many titles, it is particularly worth noting that Mereruka succeeded Kagemni as " Vizier of the King (Teti) of Upper and Lower Egypt", an office which made him the second most powerful person in the state, as both Prime Minister and Chief Justice.
Among his other titles are the following :

- Inspector of the priests attached to the pyramid of Teti
- Governor of the palace
- Scribe of the divine books
- Overseer of the royal record scribes
- Chief lector-priest

• Director of the scribes of the archives
• Director of all the works of the king (i.e. minister of public works and possibly architect)

● Nedjetempet, her "beautiful" name Tiyet  , mother of Mereruka. She is designated as "relation" or "acquaintance" of the king. Her mastaba is to the north-west of the Mereruka/Kagemni group (see the Teti cemetery plan). Her name appears three times in Mereruka's mastaba; twice on the north wall of chamber A13, either side of his statue (see A13-nw-4b and see A13-nw-6a) and once at the southern end of the east wall of the same chamber.

● Watet-khet-hor her "beautiful" name Seshseshet  is the wife of Mereruka (see A13-nw-4a). She held no administrative offices, but did hold religious titles. She was "eldest daughter of the king, of his body", which made Mereruka the son-in-law of a king, very likely of his master, Teti. See the Watetkhethor pages.

● Meryteti, his "beautiful" name Meri (like his father)  (see A13-nw-4a). He is designated as both "eldest son of Mereruka and of Watetkhethor" and, in a somewhat contradictory way, "eldest son of the king, of his body". His name, Meryteti, means "beloved of Teti", referring to the reigning sovereign. By inheritance, he held many of his father's titles, but in addition he held the titles of "lector-priest of his father" and "inspector of the priests attached to the pyramid of Pepi" (successor to king Teti, after the short reign of Userkare). His wife, Nebet, is named in Meryteti's own portion of the complex. For everything about Meryteti, and his part of the total mastaba, see the Meryteti pages.

● Pepyankh  , another son. He usurped Meryteti's extension to his father's mastaba and removed the "Mery" from the Meryteti on the inscriptions of both Meryteti's and his father's mastaba (but not from those in the section belonging to Watetkhethor). The chambers were eventually restored to Meryteti.

● Five other sons, whose names are Memi  , Khenti  , Apref  , Khenu  and Nefer  , are among the other people depicted or mentioned on the walls of different chambers. Memi, is designated like Meryteti as "eldest son" (doubtless by a previous wife). It has been suggested that Memi and Pepyankh may have been the same person; having changed his name to Pepyankh.

● There is also a daughter, Ibnebu  , her mother being Watetkhethor, thus she was the sister of Meryteti. She is depicted only once in the total mastaba, in chamber B01 of Watetkhethor's section of the structure and is named here as "Her daughter, her beloved, of her body". Although she is shown as a fully developed woman, she is obviously young because she has her hair in a plait adorned with a disc.

● Ihy  , Mereruka's brother, is depicted several times, but most memorably in well-rounded form, seated in a papyrus boat on the east wall of chamber A4.

● The brothers of Mereruka, including Ihy, are named on the south wall of chamber A10 and the north wall of chamber A13. Seven of the nine named in A13 held the position of "guard" (or "one who precedes"), a position probably held by Mereruka in his early career.

No less than a hundred other people, priests, minor officials and servants, are also depicted on the walls, most of whom have no identifying text.

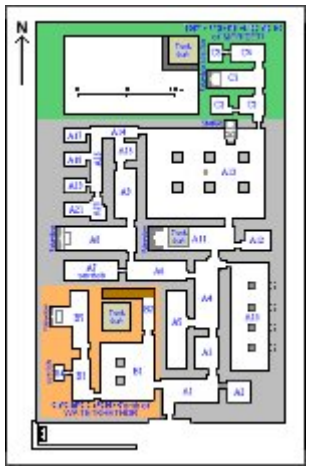
Mereruka, Kagemni and Merefnebef

It is interesting to compare the mastaba of Mereruka with that of his predecessor Kagemni, as well as with that of the vizier Merefnebef, who, if he didn't follow him directly, certainly followed soon after (Mysliewiec).
There are many similarities, but also variations, often subtle but nevertheless meaningful.

THE TOTAL MASTABA COMPLEX

Since its appearance at the very start of pharaonic civilisation, the funerary superstructure known by its Arab name of "mastaba" (English "bench") basically consists of a solid mound, usually made of stone rubble covered with a facing of limestone blocks, carefully levelled and smoothed. It generally adopts the form of a truncated pyramid, a symbolic evocation of the original mound, the first land to emerge from the primordial swamp (the Nun) at the dawn of creation. Dynasty VI marks the height of the sumptuous development of the family funerary chapel, the magic interface between the world of the living and that of the dead.
Even though the external form of the mastaba did not radically change during the Old Kingdom, this was not the case with the interior spaces. Despite individual necropolis variations, a common global process of increasing size and diversification became apparent, no doubt affected by the sociological and historical reasons given above.

General description



After its restoration in the late 1800's and early 1900's, the overall external dimensions of the mastaba are : 23 metres east-west, 30 metres north-south extending to 41 metres when including Meryteti's addition and 4.5 metres high. The internal height of the ceiling is currently just over 4 metres.

The entrance to the mastaba faces south, not east as was customary.
This was probably due to an agreement between Kagemni and Mereruka. There is evidence in chamber A10 to indicate that this was in fact the eastern pillared portico, the originally intended entrance. What is now the east wall of this chamber, shows the signs of four pillars matching the four which now stand down the middle of the current chamber. This east wall was built as infill between the pillars, then decorated. The agreement was probably due to the fact that Kagemni wanted to extend his mastaba westward to provide additional storerooms. This is further discussed when dealing with chamber A10, later.

A low temenos wall, decorated with repeated figures, names and titles of the owner, formed a forecourt in front of the facade. The mastaba is faced inside and out with limestone, that used inside being of a finer texture than the rest, but it is likely that the core consists of inferior blocks or rubble. The exterior walls have the usual slope to aid stability. Throughout the structure the upper parts of the walls and pillars are lost; except for a fragment of the south wall of chamber A8 and two from the south wall of chamber A13, and two parts of the north, east and south walls of chamber A10, which have survived to practically to their full height. The scenes on each wall were topped by a kheker pattern, which still exists in places. (See line drawing).

The chamber walls and pillars were covered with fine reliefs cut into the limestone surface and, painted. The decoration is a combination of painting and sculpture, yet at the same time being an integral part of the architecture.
The tomb was probably lit and ventilated by shallow horizontal openings cut at intervals along the tops of the walls just under the ceilings, the shafts leading to the outside then being cut diagonally through the roof slabs. Though some sunlight would penetrate into the chambers, the interior of the mastaba must at best have been in semi-darkness.

Internal description

Total Mastaba Complex

● Mereruka's mastaba complex is the largest, by chamber count, in Egypt; containing no less than 31 upper chambers (which include both actual rooms and large passageways, but not the small interconnecting sections between chambers). From these, 21 are devoted to Mereruka himself (chambers prefixed A), 5 are designated to his wife Watetkhethor (chambers B) and 5 added for his son Meryteti (chambers C). In addition to these, there are 3 well shafts and their associated burial chambers. Mereruka's access shaft is located with chamber A11; those for both his wife and his son, are not accessed from within one of their chambers, but from the roof. Chamber B2 in his wife's section is actually a flight of stairs. Of Mereruka's 21 chambers, 10 were fully decorated from floor to ceiling. Although these walls have not survived to their full height, what remains is usually well preserved.
The combined mastaba is a highly complex spatial and iconographic structure and is of considerable interest. Certainly, the complex layout of the internal chambers could be considered as a maze; on entering with only a small lamp and no map, it would be very easy to become lost, were it not for the occasional sky-light.
[Perhaps, time permitting and availability of full photographic coverage, I will be able to create a 3D tour (with minimal lighting). JJH]

● With the tomb of Mereruka, the concept of a solid mound with "excavated" chambers is forgotten. His mastaba complex, though maintaining the normal outward appearance, internally contains more space than solid material. The numerous chambers are separated by solid walls, though of variable thickness. His internal design has moved to the far extreme from the original designs.

● An examination of the plan also shows quite clearly that the main area (chambers A), devoted to Mereruka himself, forms a rotated L-shape enclosing the suite of chambers devoted to his wife WatetKhethor (area of chambers B). At a later date the mastaba was enlarged at the northern end to accommodate the chapel complex for his son Meryteti (area of chambers C). This was accomplished after the reliefs in the pillared hall (A13) had been completed, with the entrance to Meryteti's first chamber cutting through the established reliefs.

● Thus the great Mereruka embraces his wife to the south west and is accompanied by his son to the north; a symbolic family group.

The following pages will only cover that part of the mastaba belonging to Mereruka himself. From here on these chambers will always be referred to with their "A" prefix, so as to differentiate them from any possible reference to the other two areas. At some future date, separate pages will be produced dealing with these other two sections.

● The decorated areas of Mereruka's personal section of mastaba, as already stated, consisted of 10 chambers (A1, A3, A4, A6, A8-A13). To these can be added the majority of doorway thicknesses at the entry to the decorated chambers. Inscriptions can be found above the doorways to chambers A14 and A16.

● Chambers A1, A3, A4, and A6, may be regarded as corridors leading to the offering-tables in chapels A8 and A11, and also to the large statue of Mereruka enshrined above an alabaster altar in the large, six-pillared ceremonial or cult chapel A13. The storerooms are grouped along a corridor in the north-west corner of his tomb, well out of the way. Storeroom A15 has the remains of a stone shelf along its east side. Chapels A8 and A11, along with the serdab (A7) and its approach (A6), centre about the tomb shaft, contained in chapel A11, thus forming the nucleus of the structure. Since there was no exterior stela, a false door was provided in the west wall of Chapel A8 to allow the entrance of Mereruka's ka into the mastaba; hence it could continue in a direct line through the second false door, at the end of chapel A11, and enter the tomb shaft and the tomb chamber itself. The serdab (A7) once contained statues of Mereruka. A small opening for ceremonial purposes connects the serdab with chamber A6.
The small doorway leading to chamber A2 was cut through the wall of chamber A1 after the decoration of the latter had been completed. Possibly as an afterthought, the chamber was cut out of what had been a corner of solid masonry. Although its entrance was cut through an important relief, there seems to be no reason for this chamber unless it was intended as antechamber for the adjoining the vestibule.

In the decorated chambers, the imagery of the walls is placed above a metre high dado, from which they are separated by a broad red (above) and yellow bands edged with black lines. In many cases these colours have been worn away by time or have faded to various shades of blue. It also appears, without much question, that the dado area of all the chambers was originally painted black.
Apart from the blue backgrounds of the marsh scenes, the paint on the walls and pillars in chamber A13 and traces on the walls in the other chambers would indicate that the backgrounds of all the imagery was dark-grey. The exception being in chamber A10, where the backgrounds are blue-grey; this was probably also true for chamber A12, which was decorated at the same time and by the same artists.

The colours are best preserved on the north wall of chamber A1, the west wall of chamber A10 and sections of the north and east walls of chamber A13. Decoration of the walls of all the other chambers are almost totally without colour, the reds of the male skin tones and dark backgrounds being predominant. The most extensive remains of the dados and colour bands can be found on the west wall of chamber A10 and north wall of A13.

SEQUENCE OF BUILD AND DECORATION

Originally the mastaba of Mereruka consisted of only two sections, the larger part being for himself, with the south east corner being that of his wife, Watetkhethor. Later the mastaba was extended at its northern end, for their son Meryteti, an entrance for which was cut through the already fully decorated north wall of chamber A13, at its eastern end.
It should be noted that Meryteti was not the eldest son of Mereruka, His eldest son was named Memi, later to be called Pepyankh; the son of a previous marriage.

Because Watetkhethor is depicted with Mereruka throughout his chapel (A chambers) and that Meryteti appears in only three scenes in the last decorated chambers, it can thus be reasonably assumed that he was born after the decoration of his father's chapel was well advanced. He appears regularly in the chambers of his mother's chapel, consistently as "Her eldest son", thus it seems reasonable to assume that her chambers (or at least the decoration of them) were started after his birth.

The chambers of chapel "C" was presumably prepared for Meryteti by his father. Nims (see bibliography) suggests that 'Meryteti bore the high titles of Mereruka as his hereditary right and that he was shown as an adult in anticipation of his attaining manhood. That Memi (the real eldest son of Mereruka by a previous marriage) was passed over and that Meryteti becoming heir of Mereruka was probably due to the position of Meryteti as grandson of the King, Teti'.
Meryteti's good fortune appears to have changed with the death of Teti (and probably the death of his father), and the succession of Pepy I. At this point Mereruka's eldest son changed his name to Pepyankh and claimed his right to section C of the mastaba complex. Minimal changes to the inscriptions were made in favour of the new owner, but no changes were made to the scenes. The frequently repeated title "king's eldest son, of his body" was changed to "Mery, his eldest son, of his body" which could also apply to Pepyankh. The name "Meryteti" was replaced by "Pepyankh"; no other titles were erased. Some changes were made with respect to Meryteti in Mereruka's chapel, but none in the chapel of Watetkhethor.

Possibly after the appointment of Pepyankh to an important provincial position, the chapel reverted back to Meryteti. The restored owner then changed the "ankh" of "Pepyankh", which like all such names, occurs at the end of a set of titles. The Pepy cartouche was incorporated into a new title for Meryteti, that of "Inspector of priests of the pyramid of Pepy"; thus  became  . Three more titles were added after this. When the changes and additional titles were required at the end of the text above horizontal registers, enough space was not always available; the text was thus extended downwards into the image area, frequently eliminating the end of the scene in order to make room.
The figures and inscriptions of Meryteti's wife and sons and also the names of servants are later additions to the original scenes. These probably relate to the re-ownership of the chapel by Meryteti.
It was at this time that Meryteti (it is assumed that it was he) hammered out the figures and names of his elder brother, from chamber A13.

However, the asumption that Pepyankh was able to usurp (even temporarily) the tomb of his younger half-brother might not be justified. Not only was Meryteti a nephew of Pepy I, but the change of ownership may have been mutually acceptable.

Meryteti's chapel was almost certainly started towards the end of the reign of Teti and was most probably completed towards the middle of the reign of Pepy I.

racines ethiopiennes de l'egypte

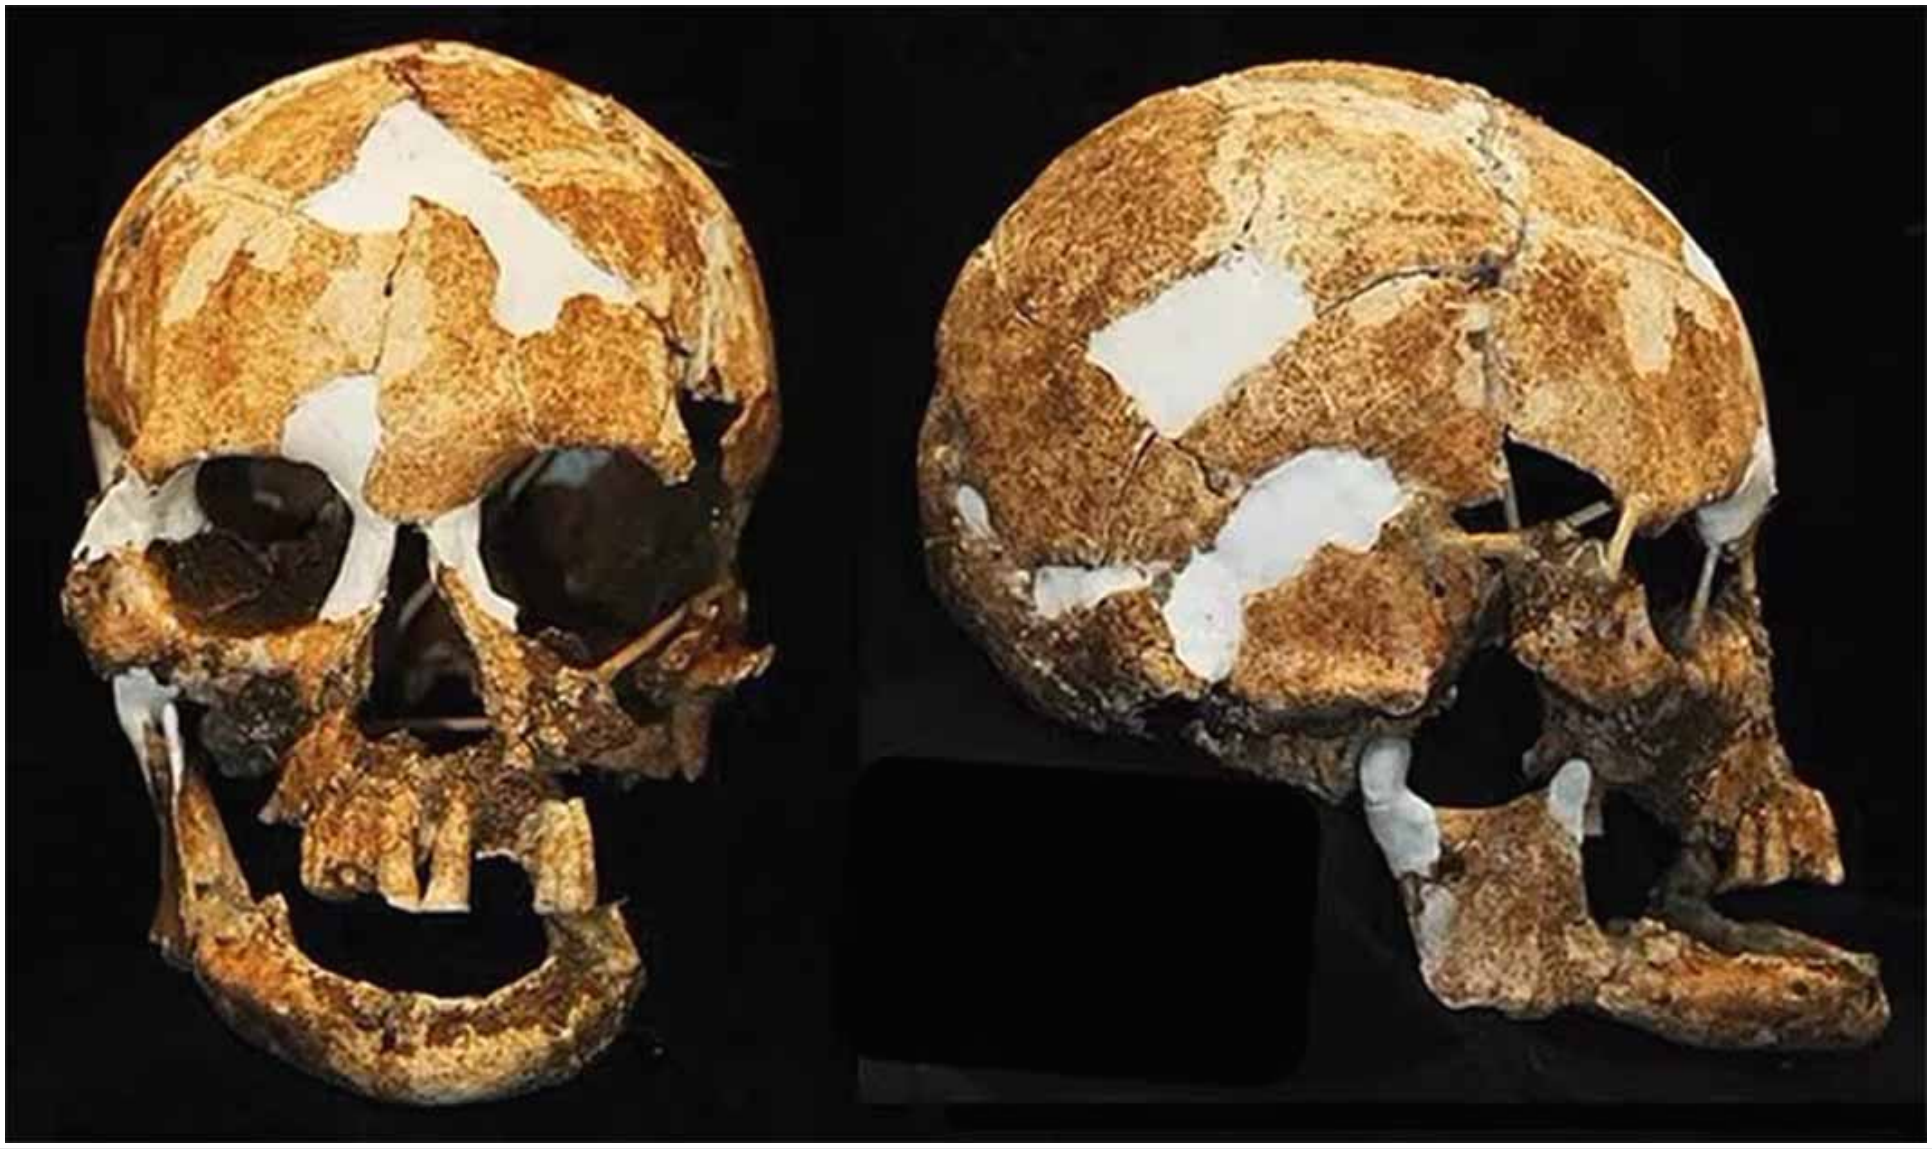
ChatGPT

Les racines ethiopiennes de l'Egypte remontent a l'Antiquite. Les deux civilisations ont entretenu des relations etroites et des echanges culturels et commerciaux pendant des millenaires. Voici quelques elements importants a considerer :

Les liens historiques : Les anciennes civilisations egyptienne et ethiopienne ont prospere simultanement et ont souvent ete en contact. Il y a des preuves d'echanges diplomatiques, de mariages royaux et de collaborations militaires entre les deux empires.

La Dynastie ethiopienne en Egypte : Au VIIIe siecle av. J.-C., l'Egypte a ete brievement gouvernee par des pharaons d'origine ethiopienne de la dynastie koushite (aussi connue sous le nom de la XXVe dynastie). Cette periode a vu un melange des cultures egyptienne et ethiopienne.

Le commerce le long du Nil : Le Nil a ete un important axe commercial reliant l'Egypte et l'Ethiopie. Les echanges de biens tels que l'or, l'encens, l'ivoire et les produits agricoles se faisaient par le biais de ce fleuve, renforcant les liens economiques et culturels entre les deux regions.



La religion : L'Ethiopie et l'Egypte ont tous deux developpe des systemes religieux complexes. Les croyances egyptiennes antiques ont eu une influence significative sur la religion ethiopienne, en particulier dans le culte d'Amon et d'autres divinites egyptiennes qui ont ete adoptees en Ethiopie.

Le christianisme ethiopien : A partir du IVe siecle, le christianisme s'est repandu en Ethiopie, influence par les traditions coptes egyptiennes. Les relations entre les Eglises coptes d'Egypte et ethiopiennes ont ete etroites au fil des siecles, avec des echanges religieux et culturels frequents.

Il convient de noter que les relations entre l'Egypte et l'Ethiopie ont connu des periodes de tensions et de conflits, notamment en ce qui concerne l'utilisation des eaux du Nil, mais ces liens historiques et culturels profonds continuent d'exister et de jouer un role important dans la relation entre les deux pays.

Scientists Prove Legends of “Negritos” on Taiwan

READ LATER PRINT

Archaeologists in Taiwan recently discovered an unusual female skeleton buried in a remote cave, which proves centuries-old legends about so-called “short, dark-skinned Negrito people” living in the mountains.

Between 20,000 to 30,000 years ago, sea levels were much lower, and the Taiwan Strait was exposed. This offered a land bridge for the first hunter-gatherers to explore the island of Taiwan. Mainstream archaeology currently maintains that in the Neolithic period (5,000 years ago), Austronesian-speaking farmers from the southeast coast of China began settling on Taiwan. According to history books, the ancient lineage of hunter-gatherers died out 5,000 years ago when they were absorbed into the Neolithic farming cultures, from which modern Taiwanese aborigines descended.

However, a new study suggests the legendary “Negritos” reputed to live in the remote mountains of Taiwan until the 1800s were, in fact, surviving descendants of the first hunter-gatherers on the island.

Measuring Up the Semi-Mythological Ancient Negrito Woman

Archaeologists recently discovered a female human skeleton in the Xiaoma Caves, about 400 meters north of Donghe on the eastern coastline of Taiwan. The woman's remains were carefully laid in a squatting position approximately 6,000 years ago. The new paper said this matches the position of hunter-gatherer bodies unearthed from other graves in southern China and Southeast Asia dating from the Paleolithic (50,000 to 12,000 years ago), the Mesolithic (10,000 to 20,000 years ago) and the Preceramic periods (4,000 years ago).

Photo of Philippine Negrito women, circa 1900. The Negrito skeleton found on Taiwan had cranial similarities to those from Luzon, Philippines (Public Domain)

The new study presented “cranial morphometric analysis” on the ancient woman’s skull. This scientific discipline quantifies changes in bone shape revealing evolutionary significance and relationships. The skull revealed what the scientists called “cranial affinities with the Negritos in northern Luzon,” in the northern portion of the Philippines archipelago. The team of archaeologists also analyzed the woman’s femur bones and concluded that she was about 1.37 meters (4 feet 6 inches) tall.

Little Black People Living in the Mountains

So-called ‘Negrito’ (black) groups are shorter in stature, with dark skin and frizzy hair. According to the latest article, this human phenotype is observed “in the Mani (Maniq) in southern Thailand, the Semang groups in peninsular Malaysia, and the Andamanese in the Andaman Islands are often labeled together as the ‘Negritos’.”

A report in the Daily Mail said scientists have proven the existence of a 6,000-year-old, short, black-skinned hunter-gatherer from the pre-ceramic phase in Taiwan “for the first time”. Furthermore, the discovery has finally substantiated a several centuries-old legend told in Formosan Austronesian tribes about ‘little black people’ hiding in the mountains.

When Reality Is Misinterpreted As Mythology

Several Chinese Qing Dynasty (1683-1895 AD) records, and later Japanese period records, detailed “small-statured and dark-skinned people” living on what is today Taiwan. These accounts said they spoke their own language and only intermarried. Furthermore, legends about 'Negritos' are shared by all but one of the 16 recognized Austronesian groups in Taiwan. According to the Daily Mail report, the Saisiyat tribe claim to have learned “medicine, singing, dancing and other rituals” from the people who they called Ta'ai.

The scientists conclude that the Negrito population descended from the first waves of anatomically modern humans to arrive on Taiwan. These hunter-gatherers resembled Africans more than Eurasians, the latter of which represent the ‘second-layer’ of people on the island. While the researchers are unclear as to what happened to this newly-identified ancient group, the study speculated that the arrival of the Austronesian peoples “could have led to the decline and disappearance of the Negritos” in Taiwan.

OUR MISSION

At Ancient Origins, we believe that one of the most important fields of knowledge we can pursue as human beings is our beginnings. And while some people may seem content with the story as it stands, our view is that there exist countless mysteries, scientific anomalies and surprising artifacts that have yet to be discovered and explained.

The goal of Ancient Origins is to highlight recent archaeological discoveries, peer-reviewed academic research and evidence, as well as offering alternative viewpoints and explanations of science, archaeology, mythology, religion and history around the globe.

ANCIENT IMAGE GALLERIES

We’re the only Pop Archaeology site combining scientific research with out-of-the-box perspectives.

By bringing together top experts and authors, this archaeology website explores lost civilizations, examines sacred writings, tours ancient places, investigates ancient discoveries and questions mysterious happenings. Was ist Adrenochrom?
Adrenochrom ist ein Stoffwechselprodukt von Adrenalin. Um dieses zu produzieren, muss der Mensch in schreckliche Angst versetzt werden, gefoltert und gequält werden.
Auch wenn man diesen Stoff mittlerweile synthetisch herstellen kann, wird er noch immer "auf natürlichem Wege" gewonnen. Dazu findet man, wenn man suchen möchte, mehr als genug Hinweise im Netz.
Allerdings nicht bei den gut bezahlt (folge dem Geld) Faktencheckern.

Selbst wenn die Gewinnung von Adrenocheom.durch das brutale Foltern und Misshandeln von Kindern eine Verschwörungstheorie wäre, Frage ich mich, wie man auf diese abstruse Idee kommt, ein solches Mittel als Jungbrunnen zu nutzen und, wie hier, als chicken oder hippe Cocktailzutat anzupreisen.
Das ist widerwärtig und menschenverachtend!

Что такое адренохром?
Адренохром - это продукт метаболизма адреналина. Для его выработки человека нужно запугать, подвергнуть пыткам и истязаниям.
Несмотря на то, что сейчас это вещество можно производить синтетическим путем, его по-прежнему получают "естественным" путем.
Если поискать, то в сети можно найти более чем достаточно ссылок на это.
Но только не у хорошо оплачиваемых (следуйте за деньгами) проверяющих факты.

Даже если добыча адренохеома с помощью жестоких пыток и насилия над детьми - это теория заговора, мне интересно, как можно прийти к этой заумной идее использовать такой препарат в качестве фонтана молодости и, как здесь, продвигать его в качестве ингредиента коктейля из курицы или бедра.
Это отвратительно и бесчеловечно!

Таинственные захоронения в Италии могут объясняться страхом перед “ревенантами”

10.02.2023 от RandomV

В фольклоре ревенант — это оживший труп, который, как полагают, воскрес из мертвых, чтобы преследовать живых. Слово revenant происходит от старофранцузского слова revenant, “возвращение”.

Археологи пролили новый свет на природу некоторых загадочных захоронений, найденных на руинах римской виллы.

Сегодня вампиры считаются вымыслом, но в прошлом страх перед этой нежитью был вполне реальным – настолько реальным, что некоторые общины принимали дополнительные меры, чтобы трупы предполагаемых вампиров не восставали из могилы и не начинали охоту на живых.

В 2018 году на археологическом участке Поджио Граминьяно в Италии археологи раскопали то, что считалось одним из таких захоронений – маленького ребенка с деревянным блоком во рту.

В то время находку стали называть “вампиром из Лугнано”.

Останки 10-летнего ребенка, похороненного в пятом веке на древнеримском кладбище в итальянском регионе Умбрия. Исследователи полагают, что ребенок умер от малярии, и после смерти ему в рот намеренно вставили камень, чтобы ребенок не воскрес из мертвых.

Однако теперь археологи ставят под сомнение идею о том, что ребенок когда-либо считался вампиром. Вместо этого, по их мнению, блок был помещен в рот, чтобы предотвратить возвращение ребенка в качестве “ревенанта” – формы нежити, которую сейчас можно

La CIA era collegata ai dirottatori dell'aereo saudita dell'11 settembre, fornendo ulteriori prove che l'11 settembre è stato un lavoro interno, ma quando guardo i media mainstream trovo un silenzio quasi mortale.

Immagina di non segnalarlo.

È quasi come se il MSM trincerato della CIA non uscisse da solo.

La CIA è una piaga per la nostra società e i suoi padroni sono il deep state. Ma chi controllava la CIA? Erano Bush e il deep state? Chi era a capo della CIA e aveva anche un figlio che ammetteva apertamente di essere membro di una società segreta? BUSH.

Qualcuno può darmi una spiegazione razionale del motivo per cui i nostri leader politici sono membri di società segrete. Le stesse persone che hanno permesso e persino insabbiato l'11 settembre fanno tutte parte di una qualche società segreta. Sembra quasi che guardino noi contadini con disprezzo.

Bush faceva parte di una società segreta a Yale dove si incontravano sulle tombe e facevano rituali segreti. Non me lo sto inventando. "Il video offre uno sguardo sgranato su quelli che sembrano essere i rituali di iniziazione di una società segreta. Tra i famosi alunni c'è John Kerry..George Bush"

Se credi ancora che la famiglia Bush sia normale e non cultista, ascolta questa clip in cui Bush parla di come sua madre teneva un feto in un barattolo che mostrava solo alle persone di cui si fidava. WTF.

Peter Nygard, che molti chiamano il canadese Jeffrey Epstein, l'ospite preferito nel suo resort sull'isola non era altro che il boss della mafia della CIA George Bush Senior. Quali sono le probabilità? Non ci sono coincidenze.

George Bush Senior parla apertamente di un Nuovo Ordine Mondiale che viene forgiato mentre la sua CIA rovescia i governi stranieri e provoca il caos in tutto il mondo.

Sono sicuro che non è niente.

Questo è solo inquietante e volevo inserirlo qui perché sembrava che Barbara Bush stesse davvero tentando di intimidire suo nipote mentre indossava un vestito da strega, ma me lo dici? Questa è la stessa donna che teneva apertamente un feto in un barattolo.

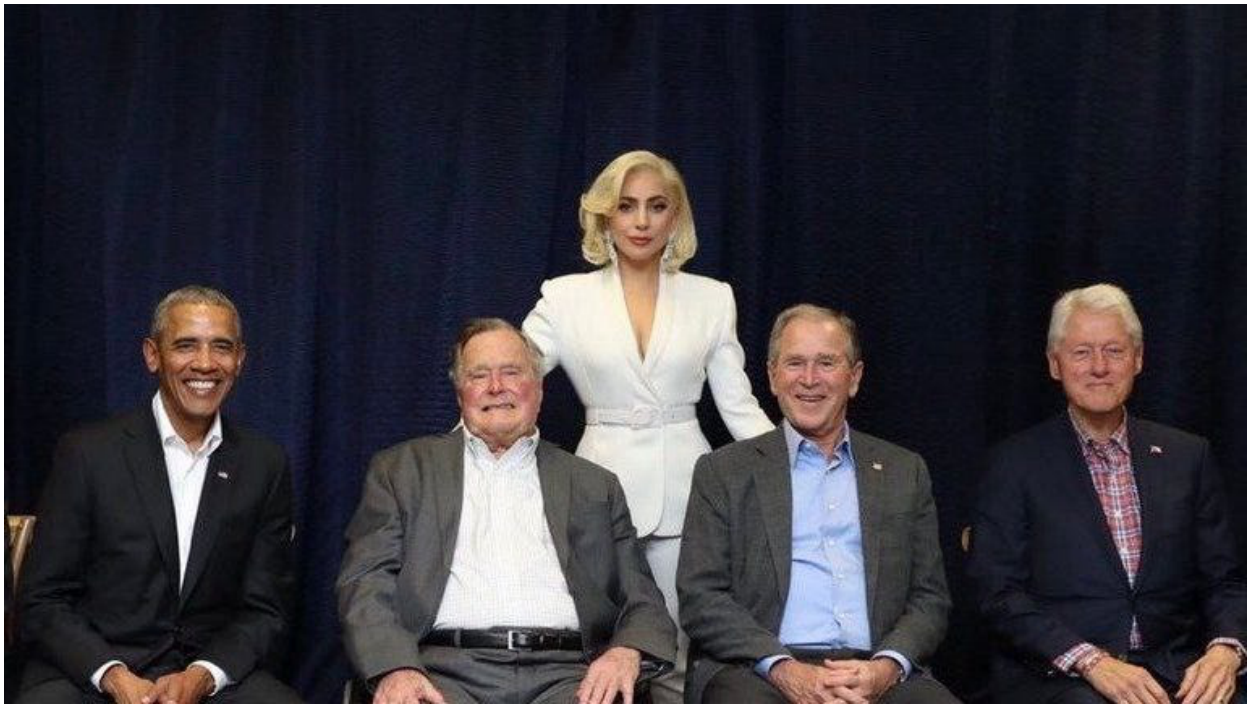
Lascia che affondi.



Sono sicuro che è solo una coincidenza che Epstein tenesse un dipinto di Bill Clinton con un vestito nella sua casa di città e quello stesso artista ha anche dipinto un'immagine di ciò che può essere descritto solo come implicante Bush come perpetratore dietro l'11 settembre.

https://nypost.com/2019/08/14/epstein-had-bizarre-painting-of-bill-clinton-in-dress-heels-in-townhouse/

E già che siamo in tema di Epstein. Qualcuno può ragionevolmente spiegarmi perché Epstein Island è stato autorizzato a correre in segreto in tandem con le agenzie di intelligence da ogni singolo presidente, ma quando Trump sale al potere all'improvviso viene chiuso ed esposto?

Perché lo spirito che cucina Lady Gaga si presenta come una figura di potere dietro ogni presidente guerrafondaio come questo? È simbolico di qualcosa?

Cerca tu stesso lo spirito di cucina e Lady Gaga se non mi credi.

JFK ci ha tenuto un discorso sulla ripugnanza della segretezza e sulla necessità del libero flusso di informazioni. Voleva fare a pezzi la CIA in mille pezzi.

Non c'è da stupirsi che lo abbiano ucciso con un cosiddetto uomo armato solitario.

A proposito di uomini armati solitari: sapevi che l'ex consulente della CIA Milton Kline, uno psicologo di New York ed esperto ipnotizzatore che una volta disse che poteva "creare un pasticcio in tre mesi", ma ci sarebbero voluti sei mesi per trasformare qualcuno in un assassino. Ma la chiamano teoria del complotto?

L'ex consulente della CIA ammette che potrebbe creare un pasticcio in tre mesi e gli ci vorrebbero sei mesi per creare un uomo armato solitario.

Ora pensa a tutti i personaggi politici assassinati da presunti uomini armati solitari.

Robert Kennedy JR ha ammesso apertamente al pubblico che suo padre avrebbe rimosso i servizi clandestini dalla CIA una settimana prima di essere ucciso. Quali sono le possibilità che JFK abbia voluto frantumare la CIA in mille pezzi e poi sia finito morto proprio come Robert Kennedy Quando verrà fuori che la CIA ha ucciso Robert Kennedy perché è difficile credere a qualsiasi storia ufficiale che ci hanno fornito nel corso degli anni?

Perché coloro che parlano apertamente di smantellare la CIA o di fermare le guerre finiscono subito dopo uccisi da uomini armati solitari?

La CIA ha ammesso nel 1975 di avere agenti incorporati nei nostri media mainstream. Non pensi che questo spieghi perché gli esperti si rifiutano di riferire sulle reclute saudite della CIA sull'11 settembre? Non ne usciranno uno di loro?

Deve essere una coincidenza che l'FBI abbia scritto una lettera di suicidio anonima tentando di ricattare/costringere Martin Luther King prima che gli sparassero.

Assolutamente niente da vedere qui...

Questo è lo stato profondo: la guerra perpetua fornisce loro tutti gli obiettivi desiderati. Svegliati.

La CIA è la mano di quello stato profondo. I suoi tentacoli si sono diffusi in tutto il mondo.

Nel maggio 2022, Bush ha accidentalmente ammesso che l'invasione dell'Iraq da parte dello stato profondo è stata brutale e ingiustificata. Immagina cos'altro potrebbe dire se gli venisse dato un siero della verità? Ecco chi sono queste persone. E indovina cosa? Sono tutti contrari a Trump.

Patriot chiama Bush per aver mentito sulla guerra e aver effettivamente ucciso milioni di persone. Non c'erano armi di distruzione di massa.

"Quando ti scuserai? Hai mentito sulle armi di distruzione di massa. Hai mentito sui collegamenti con l'11 settembre... I miei amici sono morti. Un milione di iracheni sono morti."

Trump sulle guerre senza fine:

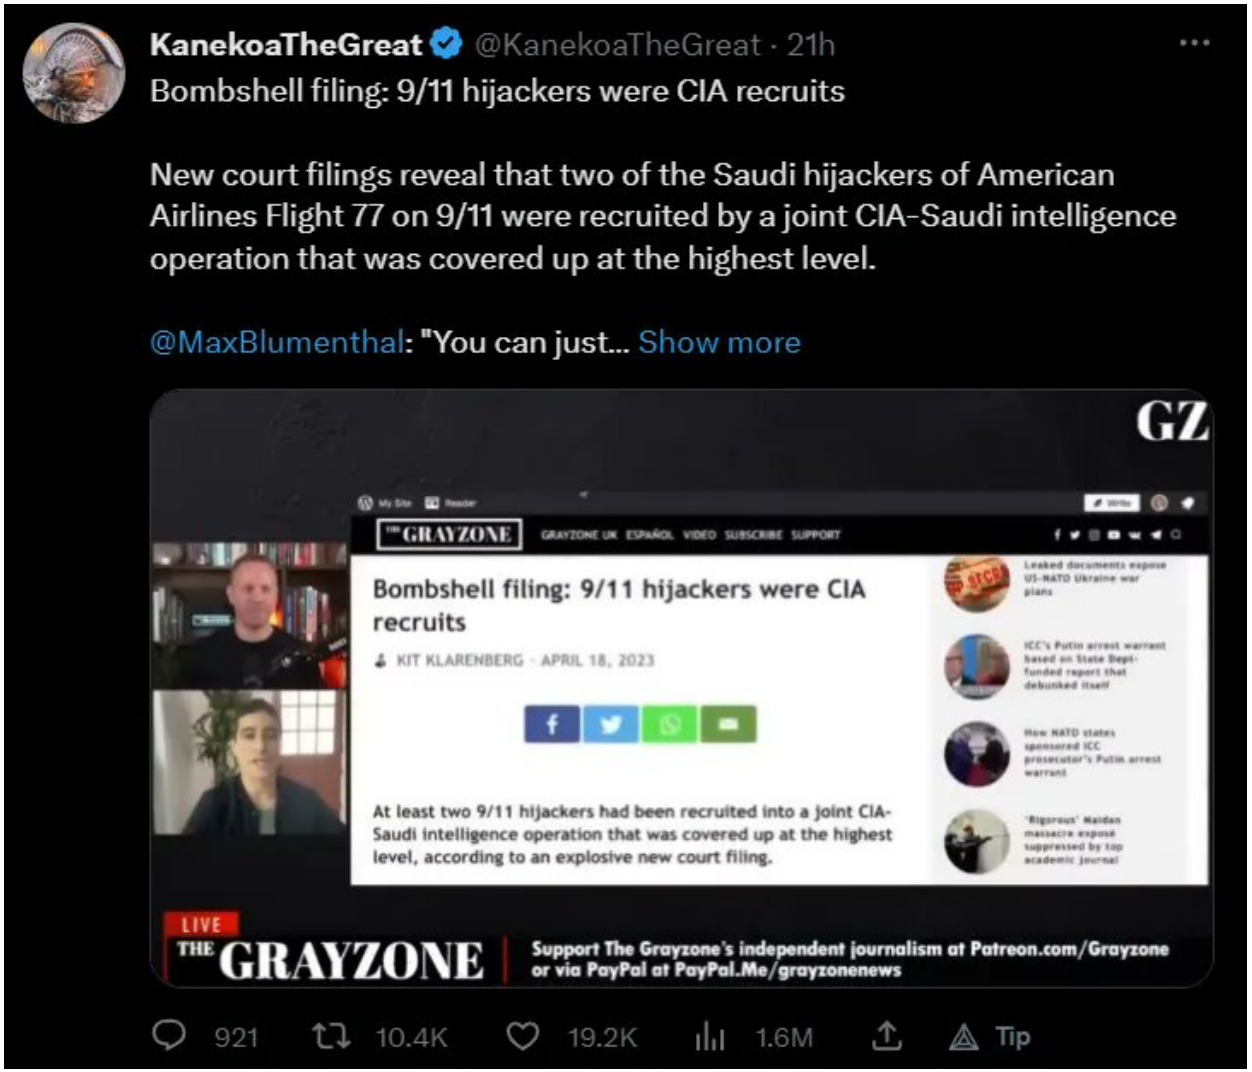
2,3 trilioni di dollari scomparsi dal Pentagono il giorno prima dell'11 settembre.

Non deve essere niente.

L'11 settembre l'edificio 7 ha ammesso la demolizione controllata da parte del proprietario dell'edificio, Larry Silverstein. Non devi essere un teorico della cospirazione per chiederti che diavolo è successo qui?

Trump lo sapeva. Perché dire che non siamo arrivati alla fine dell'11 settembre in un torneo di golf sostenuto dai sauditi?



Questo è dopo l'epurazione avvenuta con la sua approvazione.

C'è molto di più che accade dietro le quinte se hai gli occhi per vedere.

Il tappeto rosso è stato steso per Trump mentre visita l'Arabia Saudita nel suo primo viaggio mondiale come presidente.

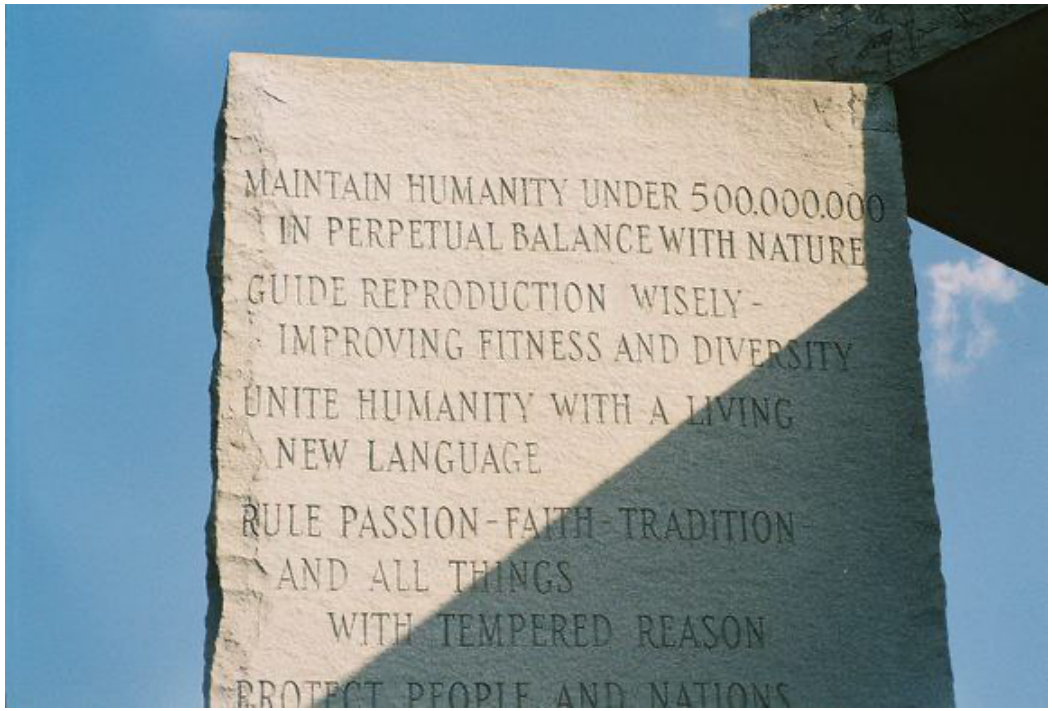
L'ISIS viene successivamente sconfitto e in SA avviene una massiccia epurazione che Trump approva.

Quali sono le probabilità?

Ora pensa al fatto che i dirottatori sauditi sono stati scoperti come reclute della CIA. Perché qui Bush ringrazia l'Arabia Saudita?

È tutto collegato.

Ricordi quando Bill Cooper ha essenzialmente predetto l'11 settembre e ha visto attraverso la falsa bandiera prima ancora che accadesse e successivamente è stato ucciso dal governo non molto tempo dopo?



"La CIA ha creato Osama Bin Laden... Ora lo stanno usando per aiutare a realizzare il governo mondiale facendo di lui il grande uomo nero perché non possono più usare Saddam Hussein...

Qualunque cosa accadrà, daranno la colpa a Osama Bin Laden, non crederci nemmeno".

Eppure, nonostante tutte queste verità, per ora concluderò questo thread su questo: le Georgia Guidestones, che mostravano il piano globalista per limitare la popolazione a soli 500 milioni di persone, sono state distrutte nel giorno del compleanno di George W. Bush.

Dio vince.

the Ekub and Debtera secret societies

Ethiopia has a rich cultural and historical heritage, including various traditional practices, religious beliefs, and secret societies. Secret societies in Ethiopia have existed for centuries and continue to play significant roles in the social, political, and religious fabric of the country. While it's important to note that the term "secret society" can have different meanings and interpretations, I'll provide information on two prominent Ethiopian secret societies: the Ekub and the Debtera.

Ekub: The Ekub (also known as Ekuba or Ikub) is a secret society that originated among the Oromo people of Ethiopia. The society has both religious and social functions and is primarily focused on maintaining moral order within the community. The Ekub enforces cultural norms, resolves conflicts, and ensures the observance of traditional rituals and ceremonies. Members of the Ekub are typically chosen based on their reputation, wisdom, and integrity.

Debtera: The Debtera is a secretive and influential group in Ethiopian society. The term "debtera" translates to "scribe" or "learned one" in Ge'ez, the ancient liturgical language of Ethiopia. Traditionally, Debteras were responsible for preserving and transmitting religious texts, providing religious services, and performing various rituals. They were considered intermediaries between the spiritual and human realms. Over time, the role of Debteras has evolved, and they now have broader responsibilities, including performing exorcisms and healing rituals.

It's worth mentioning that while these secret societies exist, their activities and inner workings are often shrouded in secrecy and not widely known or discussed outside of their respective communities. Additionally, Ethiopia is a diverse country with numerous ethnic groups, each having its own unique cultural practices and secret societies, so the Ekub and Debtera are just examples among many others that may exist.

Certainly! While information specifically focused on the Ekub and Debtera secret societies may be limited, I can suggest some books that explore Ethiopian culture, history, and traditional practices, which may touch upon these topics. Here are a few recommendations:

"Cultural Sociology of the Middle East, Asia, and Africa: An Encyclopedia" edited by Andrea L. Stanton, Edward Ramsamy, and Peter J. Seybolt - This comprehensive encyclopedia covers various aspects of culture, including secret societies, in the Middle East, Asia, and Africa, providing valuable insights into Ethiopian society.

"Ethiopia: Power and Protest: Peasant Revolts in the Twentieth Century" by Gebru Tareke - While not specifically about secret societies, this book examines the history of Ethiopia and discusses aspects of its social and political fabric, which may offer some context for understanding traditional practices.

"Hidden Secrets of the Ethiopian Plateau" by Bob Gulden - This book delves into the hidden cultural traditions, myths, and legends of the Ethiopian highlands. While it may not focus solely on secret societies, it provides a broader perspective on the cultural richness of Ethiopia.

"Ethiopian Religious Practices: A Brief Introduction" by Kessate Berhanu - Although this book may not extensively cover secret societies, it offers an introduction to Ethiopian religious practices, which may touch upon the roles of traditional religious figures like the Debteras.

Please note that the availability of these books may vary, and it's a good idea to check with your local library or online retailers for their availability. Additionally, as research and publications on specific secret societies in Ethiopia may be limited, you may also want to explore scholarly articles, research papers, or documentary films that focus on Ethiopian culture and history.

I hope these recommendations provide you with valuable insights into Ethiopian culture and history!

This London butcher is selling fake human meat, and it is INCREDIBLY TRAUMATIC

Just keep telling yourself "it's only animal meat that someone has lovingly sculpted into the shape of human meat." On second thought, that won't help at all.

Have you ever wanted to live the life of an Argentinean soccer player? Is your main complaint about Sweeney Todd the fact that you can't find reviews for that restaurant on Yelp? Did you find that one horrifying episode of Mythbusters intriguing, but in the end, insufficiently delicious?

Then get your rump roast to Wesker and Son butchers at London's Smithfield Market, where they're selling everything you need to host a Donner party. Human hands for the equivalent of $8? So cheap! Kids, we're having ladyfingers tonight!

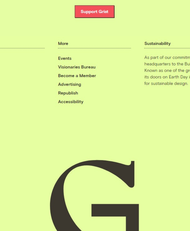
Of course, this is actually just animal meat dressed up to look like human meat, but some of it is ... pretty convincing. Photos below this point are a bit more graphic, fair warning. I'd tell you to just keep repeating to yourself "it's only normal meat that someone has lovingly sculpted into the shape of human body parts," but I could see how that wouldn't help much. Also, there are penises.



I think we should all be eating less meat anyway, and come to think of it, this is probably a good way to achieve that. But then again, wouldn't this prosciutto hand be nice grilled and wrapped around some figs? Tasty AND suggestive!

IT'S JUST MEAT IT'S JUST MEAT I PROMISE

Annnnnnnd there are the penises. If you're currently howling "whyyyyyyyyy?" the answer is "because the Resident Evil 6 video game." This shop is basically a fucked-up marketing gimmick. Which hardly seems like a sufficient reason.

If you're not thoroughly grossed out yet, evaluate your life, but also you can go see more photos at The Picky Glutton.

Visual Tarot - это неограниченное количество Раскладов Таро, Вы можете создавать свои собственные расклады или редактировать существующие (в программу встроен Редактор раскладов Таро) Неограниченное количество Колод Таро, вы можете пользоваться колодами из программы, загружать и устанавливать дополнительные колоды или использовать свои собственные колоды. Неограниченное количество Интерпретаций Таро, Вы можете создавать свои собственные Интерпретации, редактировать существующие, менять значения карт на свои. (в программу встроен Редактор значений карт)

Вы можете использовать свои собственные названия карт, например, можно изменить название карты "Маг" на "Фокусник" или "Десять кубков" на "10 кубков" или переименовывать все масти сразу, например, "Жезлы" в "Скипетры" или обратить всех "Пажей" в "Принцесс" (в программу встроен Редактор названий карт) Для раскладов можно использовать всю колоду (78 карт) или только Старшие арканы (22 карты) или только Младшие арканы (56 карт) В раскладах можно использовать одну или более пустые карты или же не использовать их вообще, например, Вы можете выбрать для расклада 22 Старших аркана и 22 пустые карты.

В раскладах можно использовать перевёрнутые карты или отключить эту опцию в настройках и раскладывать карты только прямо. В раскладах можно повторять карты, что очень удобно для "Раскладов Времени", например, для раскладов на чередующиеся и повторяющиеся события, для которых требуется использовать одну и ту же карту несколько раз в разных позициях одного и того же расклада. Все расклады и интерпретации можно Именовать, Сохранять и Печатать используя имя, дату, вопрос картам Таро, собственные заметки и комментарии.

Карточный стол (окно отчёта) полностью настраиваемый, можно выбрать что Вы хотите чтобы там отображалось, а чего нет. Например, можно отображать только сам карточный расклад, без его интерпретации, можно добавить подписи к картам и их позиции в раскладе. Программу можно устанавливать как на жёсткий диск компьютера, так и на любой другой носитель, например, Flash-карту. Программа не использует реестр windows, все настройки хранятся в папке с установленной программой, поэтому чтобы скопировать её на другой компьютер или на другой носитель достаточно скопировать папку с программой.

A Plea to Saintly Women: The Life and Legacy of Nana Asma'u

Published: January 10, 2023 • Updated: March 22, 2023

Introduction

Nana Asma'u bint Uthman (1793-1864) was a Muslim scholar and prolific poet from the West African Sahel. She was the daughter of Shaykh Uthman ibn Muhammad ibn Uthman ibn Salih (d. 1817), known as Uthman dan Fodio, the founder of the powerful Sokoto caliphate and one of the most esteemed scholars in the traditions of law, Sufism, and governance in the early modern period. Raised in a poetry-loving culture, Nana Asma'u used poetry to teach the Qur'an and transmit Islamic values, memorialize great people, and preserve her people's history. Asma'u's brother Muhammad Bello, who succeeded their father as caliph, also wrote many poetic and prose treatises in the Islamic sciences and avidly recorded the history of the Fulani people, especially the monumental changes made under the leadership of his father.

Asma'u lived through revolutionary times as well as the period in which Sokoto consolidated its authority. A steady presence, she outlived both her father and her brother. Her proximity to political leadership certainly influenced her desire to record her community's history—both their worldly and spiritual successes. But Asma'u's vision and leadership were accomplishments in their own right, as they were instrumental in spreading Islam in the region, assimilating new subjects into the empire, and championing education and literacy. Her poem "A Plea to Saintly Women," which is rendered at the conclusion of this paper, is exemplary. It is a handsomely crafted hagiography of pious Muslim women from the prophetic time to her own, interwoven with pious petitions to God to lavish forgiveness and grace upon her. It combines her vision of teaching through didactic poetry and her ardor for religious life, with a keen focus on women's prosperity.

This paper explores Nana Asma'u's life and work, and situates her within the overall story of Islamic civilization. Her life draws much-needed attention to pre-modern Muslim life outside of the Arab "heartlands," which typically dominate the Islamic historical narrative. Nana Asma'u's writings and educational advocacy illustrate the embeddedness of Islam in Nigeria specifically, and West Africa generally. They are expressions of her profound faithfulness and depth of knowledge. With her life as a lens, we come to learn of the Islamic textual resources available in West Africa and the commitment of the West African scholarly class to reproducing knowledge that was relevant and intelligible to the laity both in language and style. Asma'u's contributions to Muslim thought in the region preceded major political and social shifts like British colonialism and the eclipse of the Islamic educational system by Europeanized models of schooling.

Asma'u is also a reminder of poetry's educational potential. She was a devotee of poetry and its capacity to communicate knowledge in a lasting way. As far as we can deduce from her philosophical commitment to poetry and belles-lettres, she believed them to be a unique and beautifully defining aspect of our humanity. We can imagine that she found great comfort and inspiration in Prophet Muhammad's ﷺ unparalleled eloquence, concomitant with his emotive and efficacious use of language.

Rather than discuss the better-known jihadi and anti-colonial Muslim movements of the more recent past, this paper focuses on the lesser-known but perhaps more enthralling history of the first Muslims in West Africa. This history uncovers nascent yet committed Muslim communities throughout West Africa that predate any state-led or quasi-state-led proselytizing efforts in the region. Simply put, Islam spread in West Africa more than a millennium ago much as it spread in the West today: through ordinary human interactions and through the charisma and piety of extraordinary individuals. Ahmad Baba (d. 1627), the renowned scholar of Timbuktu, is quoted by Uthman dan Fodio as saying "[Black Africans] accepted Islam without being conquered by anybody."[1]

Nana Asma'u enjoyed the privileges of high birth in a Fulani clan in what would become northern Nigeria. Her title, "Nana," is a colloquialism given to female religious teachers, and indicates her role in public life. The 'u' customarily religious teachers, and indicates her role in public life. The 'u' customarily present at the end of her name is indicative of a local pronunciation and can double as a form of endearment; in parts of West Africa one will hear 'Muhammadu' and 'Fatimatu.' Her family was of the scholarly class, and her father was a charismatic and learned teacher who attracted students from beyond his community. Such was Uthman dan Fodio's popularity that the sultan of the nearby state of Gobir attempted to hinder his preaching and stifle the community by disallowing conversion into Islam and outlawing distinctive Muslim dress. Later, the state of Gobir made an unsuccessful attempt on the shaykh's life, which forced Uthman dan Fodio to migrate with his community. Evidently, the state of Gobir and the Muslims could not live separately in peace, and years of warfare ensued, concluding with the establishment of the Sokoto caliphate under the rule of Shaykh Uthman. Most of Asma'u's life was lived after her father established his rule over the region. Born into her father's Qadiriyya Sufi path, she exemplified discipline in worship and inner piety, doubling down on her gifts as an inheritor and disseminator of knowledge.

Asma'u was likely named after the daughter of Abū Bakr (RA), who famously carried supplies to the Prophet ﷺ and her father during the hijra despite being pregnant and in great personal danger. Like her namesake, she was determined and indefatigable. Like her father, she was intelligent and a quick learner. By the age of ten she had memorized the Qur'an, and, due to her willingness and the opportunities afforded her, continued her education seemingly without obstacles.

Stories of her early life can be found in Rawḍ al-Jinān (The Gardens of Paradise), a biography of her father written by her husband Gidado with her assistance. Gidado was an affectionate nickname, meaning "beloved," which Uthman b. Abubakr Sambo Laima carried his whole life. Although not publicly known for Islamic scholarship, he was a gifted Arabist,[2] recognized for his strength of character, trustworthiness, and the weight of his responsibilities as wazir of the state. Gidado's father was a scholar and his mother was a distant relative of Uthman dan Fodio. Before marrying Asma'u, he was closely acquainted with her brother Muhammad Bello, as the two would travel long distances together to buy books. Scottish commander and explorer Hugh Clapperton visited Sokoto in 1824, where he met numerous high-ranking members of the Sokoto caliphate including Gidado, whom he describes as "excessively polite," "excellent," and extremely well-spoken in Arabic.[3]

Rawḍ al-Jinān recalls episodes of Asma'u's zeal for knowledge even when young, her inquisitiveness, and her close relationship with her father. Gidado recounts a story in which Asma'u's father tests his young daughter on her Tamajek, a Tuareg language that was good for general knowledge but hardly required for her education.[4] After stumbling on a couple of questions, she confesses that she only acquired her proficiency through eavesdropping on conversations. Shaykh

Uthman dan Fodio advises her that if she wants to learn Tamajek, she will need to suspend her covert tactics and find a teacher. She would eventually become fluent in Arabic, Fulfulde, and Hausa, and conversant in Tamajek. Arabic was the language of the scholarly class, Fulfulde the language of her people, Hausa the language of her neighbors (who became subjects of the caliphate), and Tamajek the language of the nomadic Tuareg.

Asma'u was not alone in being a highly educated woman of the Fodiyo clan. Her education and that of others of her ilk supported the energetic da'wa efforts of the state to usher non-Muslims into the fold of Islam and support the religious growth of Muslims. After the passing of her father, she was responsible for collecting and cataloging all of the shaykh's work, an essential task for preserving his legacy and entrenching his ideas in the new state. The Fulani signal the significance of this task by harkening back to the collection of the Qur'an after the passing of the Prophet ﷺ.

There are several written exchanges between Nana Asma'u and male scholars and bureaucrats in the region. One such Mauritanian scholar, by the name of Al-Ḥājjī Aḥmad b. Muḥammad al-Shinqīṭī, wrote to Asma'u upon arriving in Sokoto on his way to hajj. In response, she crafted an Arabic poem welcoming him, praising him for embarking upon the hajj, and calling him her brother. The outpouring of glowing commendations from Asma'u toward al-Shinqīṭī and vice-versa suggests their acquaintance before his arrival. Her network likely extended even wider. Oludamini Ogunnaike describes how, through the pilgrimage to Mecca, "scholars of Timbuktu, Djenne, Borno, Kano, Katsina, Agadez, Pir Saniokhor, and Walata were also connected to and had intellectual and spiritual exchanges" with scholars of Cairo and Damascus such as Jalāl al-Dīn al-Suyūṭī and Muḥammad al-Bakrī throughout the centuries.[5] Likewise, several West African scholars feature in the hagiographies and histories of the scholars of Damascus.[6] In another written exchange, (yet another) Mauritanian scholar boasted to Asma'u—as if to gain her commendation—about how his community also had women who attain the highest levels of Islamic education.

Her thought and work

As a gifted and prolific writer, Asma'u's surviving works give a great deal of insight into the values, socio-political circumstances, and prevailing sentiments of her time. In their Collected Works of Nana Asma'u, Jean Boyd and Beverly B. Mack highlight the paucity of literature in Asma'u's community: "Most of the Hausa poetic materials available in print are those written by men, and mainly works that date in the mid to late twentieth century. Evidence of the rich scholarly tradition of the nineteenth century northern Nigeria is only suggested by occasional academic studies or rare reproductions of one of the Shehu's (Uthman dan Fodio) works."[7] As a result, we must rely heavily on Asma'u's extant works to craft an understanding of her people. Her Hausa and Fulfulde (the language of the Fulani) works were written in Arabic script, which was the standard until its replacement with the Latin alphabet in the colonial period. The usage of Fulfulde in Arabic script, also known as Ajami, has declined so dramatically in the region Asma'u used to call home that it is rare to find people today who can decipher pre-colonial Fulfulde texts. Despite this, Fulfulde poems are still recited in cultural and religious life today—an indication that this West African poetry tradition stretches back at least hundreds of years.

Asma'u began her teaching career at the age of 14,[8] having memorized the Qur'an some four years prior.[9] This seems to have also been the same year she married Gidado, with whom she had six children. Asma'u's surviving works are almost entirely lyrical poems, so we might assume this to be her primary form of public writing. Perhaps she privileged poetry as a form of communication because of its ability to convey meaning persuasively and musically and also for its ease of memorization. It enchants while it informs. When a Bedouin recited poetry to the Prophet ﷺ, he responded: "There is magic in eloquence and wisdom in poetry."[10] The power of persuasive speech to change minds and hearts coupled with the hypnotic musicality of poetry were potent tools in Asma'u's capable hands.

Nana Asma'u's scholarly community, while literate, still prized the hallmarks of an oral-based culture, such as rhythmical exposition, cadence, parallelism, and repetition in the service of memorization. This dexterity in verbal expression was not only useful for communicating with the masses. It was also a tool for the scholar wishing to scaffold his or her knowledge through advanced mnemonic devices. All around were skilled poets and Arabists, including Asma'u's father Uthman dan Fodio and her brother Muhammad Bello. They produced more than 300 prose works and dozens of poems.[11] John Hunwick emphasizes that in West Africa, the ability to compose Arabic verse was "a hallmark of the accomplished scholar."[12] In Nigeria specifically, the history of Arabic writing stretches as far back as the 12th or 13th century to the first known writer: grammarian and poet Abu Ishaq Ibrahim al-Kanemi (d. 1212).[13] The fact that al-Kanemi was a grammarian in Arabic suggests that he was among others in his community to achieve advanced competency in Arabic, which in turn indicates that there must have been an audience for such a work.

A plea to saintly women

Nana Asma'u wrote "Tawassul Ga Mata Masu Albarka" (A Plea to Saintly Women) in 1837 in Fulfulde and Hausa, two great houses of poetry, though only fragments of the Fulfulde version are extant. Between 1810 and 1835, the principal years of Sokoto's expansion, large numbers of non-Muslim women came under Muslim rule, some becoming additional wives and concubines to Muslim men. As new members of this Muslim civilization, these women lost religious and cultural connections to the lives they had led before, not to mention changes in their day-to-day existence living under Muslim governance. Many Muslim women came under Fodio rule, some from non-Fulani tribes like the Hausa, whom Shaykh Uthman had been involved in teaching before he was exiled from Hausa territory in 1802.

In 1836, Muhammad Bello, Asma'u's brother and the caliph after their father, produced Kitāb al-Naṣīḥa (Book of Counsel), based on the texts at his disposal like Ibn al-Jawzī's (d. 1201) Ṣifat al-Ṣafwa (Attributes of the Exemplary) which in turn had relied upon the earlier work Dhikr al-Niswa al-Mutaʿabbidāt al-Sufiyyāt (Commemoration of Pious Sufi Women) by ʿAbd al-Raḥmān al-Sulamī (d.1021).[14] In Kitāb al-Naṣīḥa, Bello instructs the new female members of Sokoto on society's expectations for women. He opens the text with concerns over women's values moving away from restraint toward materialism. He then proceeds to tell stories of exemplary pious women. Bello asked Asma'u to translate and versify the work, presumably so that its content would have a broader reach.

Asma'u translated and versified the work, but she also recast it, accessing the same sources as Bello and choosing to focus solely on women's potential. Asma'u was already a poet at this time, and she regularly translated her own works to aid her teaching efforts. By embracing the Hausa language as a medium for teaching religion and morality, she showed a willingness to reach beyond her social and cultural circle, showing that Islam was not so foreign as to be incommunicable in the language of the people she hoped to serve. "Tawassul" would have been recited orally to mesmerize, foster community, and instruct. As has been noted by western scholars, there is little evidence of Islamic themes in Hausa poetry before the jihad led by Uthman dan Fodiyo, that is, prior to the beginning of the nineteenth century. Few Muslims, including scholars, knew how to write Arabic in Hausaland before the jihad, so written materials would have been hard to reproduce.[15] While Bello's work is titled with plain language, Asma'u's title is powerfully evocative. "A Plea to Saintly Women" belies a simple literary reading; rather, Asma'u meant that it be experienced as a prayer. She believed the women mentioned in the work are not just exemplars, but intimate teachers whose poetic memorialization brings them to life. Nana were Asma'u's legions of women teachers trained by her to impart foundational knowledge to the eager.

Asma'u hoped to activate wonder in her listeners and thereby inspire them to pursue formal and spiritual education. When that inspiration came, at the ready

Around the time Nana Asma'u wrote "A Plea to Saintly Women," she was in her mid-40s, highly energetic, and a skilled rider. She enjoyed freedom as a person of rank in the caliphate. In 1840, Asma'u initiated a cadre of women teachers called the Yan Taru and devoted herself to teaching them the Qur'an and Islamic morality so they could teach the female masses. State leadership recognized that ordinary people were entangled in old traditions of superstition and their family structures were extremely hierarchical.[16] Da'wa efforts like those of Asma'u's itinerant women teachers sought to bring to women the purity of tawḥīd and all the social benefits that came with adopting a Muslim way of life. These teachers —equipped with numerous rhyming stories of the awliyā', companions, and messengers—were charged with teaching the basics of Islam. While women in the Fodio clan certainly had access to higher levels of learning than others,[17] Asma'u's initiation of the Yan Taru indicates that she perceived significant gaps in women's access to knowledge and teachers.

Asma'u wasn't alone in this perception. In Shaykh Uthman dan Fodio's writing, he affirms the right of women to education and chastises husbands who neither teach their wives themselves nor allow them to seek knowledge from others. He wrote in Nūr al-Albāb (Light of the Intellect):

...most of the ulama leave their wives, daughters and slaves neglected like animals without teaching them what Allah enjoins on them regarding their articles of faith, their ablution, their prayers and other things which Allah commands that they should be taught. Among these are the things permitted to them in their business transactions and the like...they treat their wives, daughters and slaves like household implements which are used until they are broken and then thrown onto the rubbish heap. Alas! How can they abandon their wives, daughters and slaves in perpetual darkness of ignorance while they daily impart knowledge to their students. This is nothing but error because they are instructing their students in the manner out of sheer egotism and hypocrisy. This is a grievous mistake.[18]

It must be noted that a woman such as Asma'u had unparalleled access to knowledge: she was the daughter of the most respected and well-connected learned man of her clan, and he expected her to inherit Islamic knowledge and serve as the head female teacher of women. However, as is clear from Shaykh Uthman's own words, it was not common practice for the male ulama of his locality to prioritize educating their daughters. Shaykh Uthman's family included well-educated women like his mother and great-grandmother. Though not much is known about the education of his wife, Nana Asma'u's mother Maymuna, she was known as a free spirit with a great deal of mobility and access,[19] which undoubtedly left an impression on Asma'u. Perhaps in her interactions with everyday women through her various roles, she realized that many women were not uneducated for lack of will but rather a lack of resources. Part of that lack was "misguided" male figures, according to Asma'u's father, who said unequivocally:

O Muslim women, do not listen to the words of the misguided ones who seek to lead you astray by ordering you to obey your husbands instead of telling you to obey Allah and His Messenger. They tell you that a woman's happiness lies in obeying her husband. This is no more than a camouflage to make you satisfy their needs. They impose on you duties which neither Allah nor His Messenger imposed on you. They make you cook, wash clothes and do other things which they desire while they fail to teach you that which Allah and His apostle have prescribed for you. Neither Allah nor his apostle charges you with such duties.[20]

Shaykh Uthman openly faced criticism from ulama who differed in their views on women's education, reasoning that women attending religious lessons risked harmful mixing with men. However, he argued that the certain evil of ignorance was worse than the potential evil that might come from gender-inclusive gatherings.[21] Shaykh Uthman's lessons were widely attended by men and women alike. Part of what made Shaykh Uthman such an effective leader was the fact that he was a visionary: he imagined what society could be like if men and women prioritized Islamic education and spiritual development. No wonder Nana Asma'u formally took charge of women's education in Sokoto, and records still exist of those whom she formally taught and the villages in which she spent time teaching.[22]

Through education, the Yan Taru organization could incorporate women into the larger community—making them more adept stakeholders in society and empowering them as the first teachers of their children. A teacher, known as jaji, wore a distinctive hijab called a malfa,[23] a highly visible mark of education that reaffirmed the central importance of knowledge in the Sokoto administration. By raising a cadre of educated women, Asma'u circumvented the critics of female education. Women could now learn from other women in the privacy of each other's homes, which handily removed a perceived obstacle to female education. After women achieved fluency in reciting poems, they were taught to write them in the Arabic script. Learning Arabic script was a gateway to the Arabic language and the Qur'an, and regular recitation of didactic poetry imparted to women tools for understanding and self-expression. Among Nana Asma'u's extant poetic works, "Qasida fi Munaja" (Instructional Poem), written in Arabic, Fulfulde, and Hausa, utilizes mnemonic devices to teach the name of every surah in the Qur'an. This poem serves as an introduction to Qur'anic memorization, functioning as memory pegs for students.

Warning for the negligent and reminder for the

In a succinct Arabic manual, titled "Warning for the Negligent and Reminder for the Intelligent Regarding the Ways of the Pious" (see an example of Nana's poetry below),[24] Asma'u delineates pertinent guidance for the believer hoping for felicity. She begins with "that which stands between man and paradise." Her framing addresses readers of two different levels of spiritual maturity: those who are in need of warning due to frequently succumbing to neglect and sloth and those who are in need of reminder due to having developed a spiritual practice. Asma'u manages to infuse the work with language that speaks to the internal state of both groups. For the neglectful, she empathizes with their fear and teaches them how to overcome that fear at every stage. For the intelligent, she bolsters their hope by recasting every cataclysm—death, the grave, the final judgment—as rites of passage on the path to felicity in the next life. This reframing harkens back to her introductory language: "That which stands between man and paradise." Asma'u thus addresses the weariness that sometimes arrests the internal dynamism of the righteous and drains their zeal for a righteous life.

Asmau then lists eight habits destructive of the neglectful and the intelligent alike, though to different degrees. These are both habits of the heart and habits of action. Some people may be actively engaged in acts of greed, whereas others may suffer from hearts that harbor feelings of greed without acting on them. Asma'u mentions antagonism toward others, pointless argumentation, greed, unfettered materialism, boastfulness, consulting with diviners and believing what they foretell, harmful association with jinn, and witchcraft. She goes on to mention eight redeeming habits, among them repentance, scrupulousness in worship, frequent remembrance of Allah, charity, fasting, patience, and maintaining good family relations. In this work she follows the method of takhallī and then tajallī, purifying the heart from negativity and adorning it with beautiful traits. She devotes the lengthiest treatment to the distinguishing characteristics of those who follow the Sunnah.

Among the signs of those who follow the sunnah of the Messenger of God, may God bless him and grant him peace, is belief in and adherence to everything he brought, a commitment to loving him by imitating him in speech, action, character and sincere intention in all of these. Among the signs that one loves the Messenger ﷺ are following his commands, shunning his prohibitions, preference for his sunnah, avoiding innovation (bid'a) in religion and cultural customs that contravene his sunnah, striving to recite the Qur'an, understand it and act according to it, compassion for and striving to protect the Muslim community from harm, detachment from worldly affairs and preference for the hereafter, reverence when the Prophet ﷺ is mentioned (or concentration when making remembrance [dhikr] of the Prophet), may God bless him and grant him peace, honoring his family and companions, his places Mecca and Medina, longing to visit them, copious prayers upon him, adopting his character by doing what pleases God, opposing whoever opposes God's religion even if it be one's own father or son, compassion, forbearance, and forgiveness and patience with one's own soul in that which it dislikes.[25]

She describes these distinguished people as having "faith in everything he has brought forth; obedience to him in these things; obligation to loving him by imitating him in speech, action, and manners; and behaving this way with sincerity of intention." Whereas before she addressed fear and hope, in this section she speaks to love and describes those who savor following the example of the Messenger of Allah ﷺ. Among the signs that one has truly embraced the Prophet ﷺ is a preference, in all circumstances, for his Sunnah—humility, generosity, moderation, taking refuge in God, and zeal that endeavors by any means to purify one's faith. While fear of God remains critical for the pious, Asma'u places special emphasis on zeal for God which is rooted in love and attraction towards Him. For her, this motivation better aligns with prophetic practice and promises a greater spiritual return. Joy and zeal for worship are also remedies for the spiritual apathy that threatens to settle into the believer. When one feels lost, fidelity to one's religious commitments is the rope that leads forward.

Asma'u's conviction, as is evident in this work and others, is that learning ought to be a transformative experience. A purely academic pursuit for the sake of acquiring information alone passes up the opportunity to attain the ethical and spiritual demeanor concomitant with studying the Islamic sciences. Shaykh Ahmadu Bamba of neighboring Senegal put it this way in various poems:

Everyone who acts without knowledge is like a speck of dust in the wind

And he who acquires knowledge without practicing it is a loaded donkey.
If your progress in knowledge does not lead to spiritual growth and detachment from worldly things

You are regressing and harming yourself because you are distancing yourself from God Most High.
...
The only useful knowledge is that which one learns and teaches only for the love of God, Most High[26]

Poetic elegies: Reminder, transformation, and community

Poetic elegies make up a significant portion of Asma'u's composed works. While commonly thought of as straightforward memorialization of great individuals, they served a more dynamic purpose for Asma'u and her community. Asma'u delights in the person she describes and relishes in being a means for the listener to vividly envision the praised one. The people she memorializes embody the heights of human potential and their lives are instructive for her and her listeners. In "Plea to Saintly Women," she makes explicit the communal value of remembering the merits of those passed. She is especially effective in that panegyric by weaving together stories of women around the Prophet Muhammad ﷺ, women throughout the centuries, and women who had passed during her lifetime. Through this method, she illustrates how these women learned from the memory of prior exemplars, and she sets the stage for her contemporaries to do the same. The many poetic elegies left behind indicate Asma'u's role as an orator for her people, for elegies serve a communal function and were intended for recitation aloud. The subjects of these praise poems are the Prophet Muhammad ﷺ, prominent family members, and also members of the community whom Asma'u spotlighted for reasons always of their character and piety.

Nana Asma'u remembered in death

In 1978, Alhaji Muhammadu Magaji, a Nigerian Islamic scholar, heard a woman by the name of Yarbuga singing an elaborate, lengthy elegy to the memory of Asma'u. Magaji collected and translated into Hausa the works of Asma'u and other Fulani scholars.[27] Given the address of the speaker, it was thought to have been composed by Asma'u's brother, Isa, a century prior, around the time of her passing. In the poem, Isa describes going to see where Asma'u's body lay at her home with her husband Gidado, and barely being able to get through the crowd of people gathered around it. Everywhere were scenes of restless emotion. "Men were crying, no one was left unmoved, not even the animals." These remarks suggest the overwhelming reception of Asma'u by her community. Seemingly out of reverence, Isa never addresses Asma'u by her first name, but rather calls her "Nana" and "Inji," the former title given for her authority in public matters like teaching and administration and the latter for her authority in spiritual matters.[28] The title Nana was held by other women scholars in Timbuktu,[29] though its origins are unclear and early Arabic manuscripts of her work omit the title, instead referring to her with honorifics like saliha (righteous), waliya (saintly), and zahida (ascetic) and always as the daughter of Shaykh Uthman. He writes that after their father, Uthman dan Fodio, the children followed Asma'u's leadership. He compares her "light" to lightning that illuminates and arouses hearts from heedlessness. He describes her generosity to men and women alike, her care for orphans, her craft at reconciling affairs, and the mutual love between her and her family.

Note on the poem: Jean Boyd and Beverly Mack translated this Hausa/Fulfulde poem in the Collected Works of Nana Asma'u. I recast their translation to capture the style and rhyme of the original because rhyming poetry was an important teaching medium for Asma'u and a central tool in the scholarly tradition she drew from. I also attended to elevating religious language beyond perfunctory phrases, opting for language that reflected the deep well of spiritual knowledge Asma'u drew from. Due to the transmogrification of Arabic names when written in Fulfulde and Hausa, it appears Boyd and Mack were unable to trace the identity of some of the individuals mentioned in the poem. I compared the names in Asma'u's poem to two well-known biographical dictionaries of pious figures that appear to have been used by Asma'u and her ilk: Abd al-Rahman al-Sulamī, Dhikr al-niswa al-muta'abbidat al-sufiyyāt and Ibn al-Jawzī's Ṣifat al-Ṣafwa. Lastly, some lines were subsumed into others or left out for clarity and concision.

Nana Asma'u

Dear God, receive our praise and thanks
And bless Muhammad ﷺ of the utmost rank
Benedictions to his family and his friends
And those who follow him 'til time's end

In this poem I will tell you about the pious Toward whom I admit I am biased
I am mindful of them while I am still alive
May they remember me on the Day my soul is revived

The ascetic women are all sanctified
For their piety, all are magnified
For deliverance, they prayed ceaselessly
Friends, don't forget this so easily

I wrote this poem to assuage my heart
And remind you how they pined for God
The perfume of their yearning for God permeates

In every line of this poem I create

Of the Prophet's close ones I first shall speak:
Aisha, the noble daughter of the nobleman al-Siddiq

Friends, remember the name Zaynab bint Jahsh
She reignites the embers of my heart from ash
She exceeded in piety, according to Aisha
Loved and esteemed by the Prophet of rahma

Fātima al-Zahra al-Batul
Above all servants of Allah she holds rule
She possessed all the qualities of a flower in full bloom
Spun from the threads of Muhammad and Khadija's loom

Umm Hārūn[30] shown so bright
Habiba Adawiya[31] recited the Names[32] morning and night

Of Rabiʿa ʿAdawiyya's[33] piety I speak
Her fame is still at its peak
The Lady from Basra who saw what others could not Brilliance of mind and heart, set apart

Rabiʿa's prayer was a thousand prostrations
By day and by night in the throes of lamentations
Pleasing the Prophet ﷺ was her sole consideration
On the Day of Understanding you will give her congratulations

Umm Dardā',[34] Mu'aza,[35] and Ruqayya of Mosul[36]
Umm Ayyūb,[37] Sha'wana,[38] and Rayḥāna al-Majnūn[39]

Rabiʿa bint Ismail[40] of Damascus, the student of Hukayma[41]

Her husband who worshiped with the best said none could match her

Amrah the ascetic,[42] Aisha bint Ja'far,[43] Atika Ghanuyah[44]
Ubayda bint Abi Kulaib,[45] the wife of Abu Imran,[46] and Maryam of Basra[47]
Mu'aza bint Abdullah,[48] Maymuna Majnuna,[49] and Maymuna Sa'uda[50]

The Nishapuri Fatima[51] was zealous even to those enraptured[52]
Nafisa bint Hassan,[53] by love of the Qur'an caged and captured
Cycling through the Qur'an in the trench of her grave
Which was dug by her hands for her own soul to save[54]
Born in Mecca, living in Medina, like her grandfather the Prophet
The ground of Egypt blessed by her ultimate deposit
For what might come from nearness to her come the prayerful and the profligate

I return to Fatima[55] the preacher, the teacher, daughter of Abbas Saiha
Mounting the steps of the mosque, her voice bellowed over the crowd
Enlivening the hearts they repented out loud
When shyness struck her she kept her efforts on the ground
But a shaykh dreamt of the Messenger telling her to reignite the crowd

I pray for their overflowing gifts to grace me
O God, make my repentance sincere and save me!
Let me not recite their names only to forsake me
I believe in Your promise and ask that You grace me

Perhaps by their piety, You will purify a sinning servant like me
And in the hereafter erase these wrongdoings of mine
How I've wronged myself! Only I know where I've crossed the line
With child-like hope, I beg forgiveness from the Divine
Now I turn to the women in this community of mine
Those who've died and those still alive

My father Shaykh dan Fodio[56] I must first remember

Hawa[57] and Ayesha, ascetic wives and good-natured

Habiba burdened herself educating many women
A commanding presence, respected now and back then Joda Kowuuri's knowledge of the Qur'an availed her everywhere
Biada's reclusiveness kept her secret near
The scholar Yar Hindu judged by the Qur'an
These are but a sampling from the Shaykh's clan

Many of our women committed the Qur'an to heart
Neither from piety nor preaching did they part
They were many and this poem is but an indication
As I near the end, consider this an affirmation
Of your potential should you have the aspiration
To achieve lofty stations and secure salvation

May we be reunited with those who have passed on —all the special ones I mentioned in this psalm
With mother and father and all Muslims

Deliver us to splendor, O Lord of many gifts
For the sake of our Messenger ﷺ, without whom we're adrift
You who hears, I end my rhyme with this Salutations on Ahmad or I'd be remiss
The companions and the faithful, grant them every bliss.

30 From Damascus, Umm Hārūn was known as someone of exceptional piety among the notable scholars of her time, such as Abū Sulaiymān al-Dārānī. She made a habit of traveling from her home in Damascus to Palestine by foot, seeking remote locations for spiritual retreat. We don't know her birth and death date, but, given her association with al-Dārānī, we can assume she lived in the late eighth and early ninth centuries CE. See Abd al-Rahman al-Sulamī, Dhikr al-niswa al-mutaʿabbidat al-sufiyyāt (Cairo: Maktaba Khānajī, 1993), 64.

31 Habiba Adawiya was a native of Basra, who likely lived in the generation after the better-known Rabiʿa al-Adawiya. She was known for keeping night prayer on the roof of her house. Rkia E. Cornell, Early Sufi Women (Louisville: Fons Vitae, 1999), 202.

32 The Names of Allah.

33 Perhaps one of the pious women with the most name recognition after the wives of the Prophet, she is the only woman mentioned by name in Abū Bakr al-Kalābādhī's Kitāb al-taʿarruf, one of the earliest treatises on Sufi individuals in the tenth century CE. She was a teacher of Sufyan al-Thawri, who referred to her as mu'addiba and sought her wisdom in spiritual and religious matters. Her students and admirers have related copious wisdom from her. Ibn Jawzi claims to have written an entire book on her. Cornell, Early Sufi Women, 282.

34 An orphan under the care of an Abu Dardā who used to sit in the circles of learning as a young girl, Umm Dardā' eventually became a teacher of hadith and fiqh and was known for keeping company with the scholars and teaching male and female students in Damascus. Muhammad Akram Nadwi, Al-Muhaddithat: The Women Scholars in Islam (Oxford: Interface Publications, 2006) 81.

35 I could not determine the identity of this individual.

36 Sifat al-Safwa mentions one of the sayings she was known for. Al-Jawzi, Sifat al-Safwa, (Dar al-Hadith, Cairo: 2000) vol.2, 358.

37 I could not determine the identity of this individual.

38 She was from a port city called al-Ubulla in Persia. She gave exhortations and recited the Qur'an as a teacher. Given her association with al-Fudayl ibn Iyad (d. 187/803), we presume she died in the eighth century CE. Al-Sulamī, Dhikr al-niswa al-mutaʿabbidat al-sufiyya, 44.

39 Al-Sulamī records her as Rayhana al-Waaliha. She lived in the eighth century CE in Basra. Al-Sulamī, Dhikr al-niswa al-mutaʿabbidat al-sufiyya, 38.

40 Rabiʿa's husband, Ahmad ibn Abi Hawārī (d. 845), relates many stories of her sainthood and the sainthood of other Syrian women, from which al-Sulamī compiled his own work. Rabiʿa was independently wealthy and financed many students and aspirants. Hawārī reports that she would ceaselessly fast and pray and that he was moved to richer faith just by the sight of her. Cornell, Early Sufi Women, 314.

41 Al-Sulamī describes her as a teacher or initiator of women into specialized knowledge, such as Rabiʿa bint Ismail. She lived in Damascus and was in communication with al-Dārānī. Al-Sulamī, Dhikr al-niswa al-mutaʿabbidat al-sufiyya, 53.

42 Possibly Amra al-Farghana from Khurasan who lived in the tenth century CE. Al-Sulamī describes her as someone with impeccable character, presence, and insight. Asma'u also mentions a Mu'aza of Mosul and Majida who shared in this quality of asceticism; however, I could not locate these individuals. Al-Sulamī, Dhikr al-niswa al-mutaʿabbidat al-sufiyya, 87.

43 Presumably the daughter of Ja'far al-Sadiq. She would have lived in the eighth century CE.

44 I could not determine the identity of this individual.

45 From Tufawa, near Basra, a contemporary of Malik ibn Dinar. Al-Sulamī, Dhikr al-niswa al-mutaʿabbidat al-sufiyya, 57.

46 Boyd and Mack transliterate the name as "Ahhiratu Umratu" and identify her as "Amrah wife of Habibu." However, I believe this entry could be referring to the wife of Abi 'Umran al-Juni (imra'a abi umran al-juni), who has an entry in Sifat al-Safwa. In that entry, her son is recorded as having seen his mother tie her legs together with rags to prolong her nighttime prayers.

47 A student of Rabiʿa Adawiya. Like her teacher, she was known for her tawakkul, strict adherence to night prayer, and emphasis on cultivating love for Allah. Al-Sulamī, Dhikr al-niswa al-mutaʿabbidat al-sufiyya, 33.

48 Perhaps the first initiator of women into a spiritual sorority in Basra a century before Rabiʿa Adawiya. Known for sober and vigorous spirituality, she stressed asceticism, prayer, fasting, and night prayer. Cornell, Early Sufi Women, 61.

49 The sister of Ibrāhīm al-Khawwāṣ, who was a companion of al-Junayd. She and her brother seem to have had a close relationship, which afforded her the opportunity to converse with men of a similar spiritual bent as her. She lived in Baghdad in the ninth century CE. Cornell, Early Sufi Women, 216.

50 Unclear attribution. In this section of the poem, Asma'u lists a number of names without much detail about their character. The authors of Collected Works of Nana Asma'u acknowledge that parts of this poem are missing. This may explain the lack of descriptions for these women. However, it is also possible that Asma'u simply wanted to show her knowledge of these women and acknowledge that they are deserving of mention without lengthening the poem.

51 Fātima of Nishapur is quoted anonymously in Kalābādhī's Kitāb al-taʿarruf and resurfaces in al-Sulamī's work with her statement properly attributed to her. Kalābādhī uses her words to confidently describe spiritual wayfaring (sulūk). She instructed Bayazid al-Bistami and Dhu al-Nun al-Misri, so she must have lived in the ninth century CE. She frequented Mecca for umrah and general devotional purposes, and indeed ultimately died on her way to make umrah. Al-Misri relates wisdom from her and testimonies of her saintliness. Cornell, Early Sufi Women, 144.

52 Even those enraptured by the love of Allah considered her zealous.

53 Nafisa (d. c. 824) is a well-known descendant of the Prophet ﷺ and probably the best-known female scholar of hadith in Egypt. She is connected to Imam al-Shafiʿi (d. 820), who received hadith from her and sought her out for prayer, and it seems that before his passing, he requested that his body be carried to her home so that she might say a final prayer over him. See Nadwi, Al-Muhaddithat, 268. The Sayida Nafisa Mosque in Cairo is her burial place and is considered a place of spiritual refuge by many.

54 To keep the remembrance of death near, she dug a grave and worshiped in it.

55 Perhaps Asma'u returns to Fātima of Nishapur because she admires her especially. Fātima's entry in al-Sulamī's work is one of the longest, and she enjoys similar appreciation in Asma'u's poem. Fātima enjoyed wealth and independence—qualities that would have resonated with Asma'u.

56 Such is Asma'u's reverence and appreciation for her father that she mentions him here. Perhaps this also serves as an acknowledgment and reminder that Uthman dan Fodio facilitated educational opportunities for women that allowed some to flourish.

57 In this section of the poem, Asma'u turns her attention to memorializing women in her community who passed during her lifetime. Hawa was Asma'u's maternal grandmother and was likely a Qur'an teacher. The little that we know about these particular women is mentioned here and in other elegies Asma'u penned. In a sense, she offers an appendix to the work of al-Sulamī by adding these women to the names of those he mentioned 800 years prior, much as Ibn al-Jawzi used al-Sulamī's work two centuries later to write his own and include others who lived after al-Sulamī died.

Гадание на картах - это уникальная система гадания о прошлом, настоящем и будущем от всемирно известной французской прорицательницы – Марии-Анны-Аделаиды Ленорман, в виде разработанной программы ГАДАНИЕ НА КАРТАХ, с голосовым озвучиванием и неповторимым дизайном. Узнайте свое будущее и судьбу!

Мы предлагаем Вам уникальную, неповторимую систему гадания о прошлом, настоящем и будущем, которую оставила нам известная французская прорицательница – Мария-Анна-Аделаида Ленорман, в виде разработанной компьютерной программы "Гадание на картах". Очень проста в использовании, с голосовыми подсказками – Вы услышите от гадалки описание каждой карты и узнаете результат гадания.

Программа "Гадание на картах" – единственная в своем роде и состоит из четырех способов гадания

- Большой расклад:

Большой расклад используется в случаях, когда Вам требуется составить развернутый прогноз на какой-либо промежуток времени. Перед перемешиванием карт - необходимо постараться мысленно задать картам программу - т. е. решить, какой промежуток времени вы хотите изучить...

- Короткий Расклад:

Короткий расклад используется для более тщательного и детального изучения какой-либо темы. В этом способе гадания уже имеет значение сочетание карт, а также их удаленность или близость к карте спрашивающего...

- Расклад "Семь Домов":

Расклад "Семь Домов" рекомендуется применять, когда нужно составить достаточно более подробный прогноз на небольшой промежуток времени. Как показывает практика, события, прогнозируемые данным способом гадания, начинают происходить в течение ближайшего месяца.

- Карта Личности:

Способ гадания "Карта Личности" рекомендуется для любителей нумерологии. В этом способе гадания Вы узнаете свою "карту личности", а также свой жизненный путь по дате рождения.

Узнайте свое будущее и судьбу!

Лучше этого не потреблять: какие продукты разрушат ваш мозг

Диетологи назвали продукты, способные разрушить человеческий мозг, вызвав обморок и слабоумие.

Знай UA

Специалисты отмечают, что для того, чтобы избежать обморока и слабоумия, необходимо исключить из своего рациона вредную пищу. Ведь есть продукты, которые способны повредить наш мозг.

По данным Всемирной федерации неврологии, здоровье мозга влияет на способность человека общаться и принимать обдуманные решения. Так что ряд факторов способствуют здоровью этого органа, главным из которых является питание.

По словам американских диетологов, существуют конкретные продукты, которые необходимо исключить из своего рациона, чтобы оставаться здоровым.

Какие продукты разрушают наш мозг:

1. Сахар. Следует отметить, что работа мозга напрямую зависит от уровня сахара в крови, поскольку глюкоза является основным топливом для органа. В то же время, опасность этого продукта заключается в том, что чрезмерное употребление сладостей способствует выбросу инсулина, который блокирует доступ к мозгу большинства полезных аминокислот.

Однако не только чрезмерное употребление сахара, но и полный отказ от него все равно плохо сказываются на здоровье вашего мозга. Из-за недостатка глюкозы уровень сахара в крови становится нестабильным, а это может вызвать приступы гипогликемии, спутанность сознания и обмороки.

Объясняется, что большое количество алкоголя оказывает влияние на способность мозга функционировать. В частности, на уровень нейротрансмиттеров в организме, а они являются химическими посредниками, помогающими клеткам мозга взаимодействовать.

Кроме того, следует обратить внимание на такие распространенные ошибки, как пропуск приема пищи и игнорирование контроля уровня витамина B12 в организме. По словам ученых, мозг использует 20% энергии, получаемой вместе с каждым приемом пищи, поэтому он первым и будет страдать при пропусках.

Описание

Ментовский фоторобот (полная версия) - это небольшая (дистрибутив всего лишь около 3 МБ) программа с достаточными профессиональными отличиями. Используется в милиции, как альтернатива более ёмким и сложным профессиональным программам с дистрибутивами более 500 МБ. Ментовскому фотороботу требуется значительно меньше оперативной памяти чем другим фотороботам.

С помощью этой программы можно собрать портрет своего кумира или товарища, портрет своей мечты или просто запомнившееся лицо. Применение специальных функций, позволяющих изменять размеры любой части лица, делает эту программу мощнее даже некоторых профессиональных программ такого рода.

Ядовитые пигменты: Самые смертоносные цвета истории

Опубликовано: Сегодня

По протяжению всей истории развития цивилизации человеческая способность создавать красивые цвета и краски для одежды, предметов быта и искусства была одним из самых важных показателей развития общества.

Содержание

- Яркий, но смертельный: Свинцовый белый
- Чем опасен свинец
- Опасны ли используемые материалы сейчас
- Никогда не используйте неаполитанский желтый
- Токсичная ртуть в вермилионе
- Зеленые пигменты убийцы мышьяка
- Урановый оранжевый: радиоактивный пигмент

Для многих современных художников и ценителей искусства использование ядовитых пигментов может показаться странным, но в прошлом, когда не было альтернатив, художникам приходилось рисковать своим здоровьем, чтобы создавать свои шедевры.

Сегодня мы хотим рассказать вам о самых известных ядовитых пигментах, которые использовались в прошлом, и о том, какие из них до сих пор используются в современном искусстве.

Яркий, но смертельный: Свинцовый белый

Свинцовые белила (карбонат свинца (II)) уже использовались египетскими художниками более 5 тысячелетий назад. Они были очень популярны благодаря своей яркости, хорошей укрывистости и быстрому высыханию. Однако, как вы уже догадались, свинцовые белила являются смертельно токсичными.

Свинцовые белила использовались художниками древности и средневековья повсеместно, пока в XIX веке не стало ясно, что они вызывают тяжелое отравление свинцом. Симптомы отравления свинцом включают боли в животе, головные боли, судороги и даже смерть.

Натюрморт с черепом, Франс Франкен Младший, 1607 год. Свинцовые белила использовались для создания белого цвета.

Несмотря на опасность, свинцовые белила использовались на протяжении многих веков. Только в XX веке, с появлением безопасных альтернатив, их использование начало сокращаться.

Чем опасен свинец

Свинец - не единственный ядовитый пигмент, опасный для человека. Ртуть - еще один элемент, известный своей токсичностью, но применяемый в прошлом в качестве красного пигмента. Мышьяк, который также является ядом, использовался в зеленых и желтых красках.

Ртуть существует в трех формах - элементарной, органической и неорганической. Ртуть, используемая в красках, является неорганической и очень токсичной для человека. Ртуть может проникать в организм через кожу, легкие и желудочно-кишечный тракт. Она может накапливаться в мозге, печени и почках, вызывая повреждение этих органов.

Симптомы отравления ртутью и мышьяком включают мышечную слабость, потерю координации, трудности с речью и слухом. В дни и месяцы, предшествующие воздействию, могут возникать такие симптомы, как раздражительность, депрессия, тревожность и бессонница.

Несмотря на свою токсичность, мышьяк с древних времен использовался как самостоятельный материал. Чаще всего встречается его минерал реальгар, который часто желтого или оранжевого цвета, используемый в древней китайской живописи.

Ярким примером такого использования является картина Чжоу Фана "Императрица Ван Сюаньмо", где мышьяк применялся для создания красного цвета.

Императрица Ван Сюаньмо, Чжоу Фан, 1759 год. Мышьяк использовался для создания красного цвета.

Кинновар был известен и древним римлянам. Витрувий, например, писал о красном пигменте, который получался путем нагревания киновари. Это, вероятно, и есть красный мышьяк, который использовался в качестве пигмента.

Ртуть является очень ядовитым веществом, и древние художники могли не знать всех опасностей, связанных с ее использованием. Отравление ртутью может вызывать тяжелые заболевания, такие как болезнь Минамата, которая была впервые описана в Японии в 1950-х годах.

Сегодня использование ртути в красках строго регулируется, и опасность ее применения хорошо известна. Однако в прошлом ртуть была широко распространенным и ценным пигментом.

Портрет Анны Австрийской в образе Девы, Пьетро Антонио Лоренцини, 1700 год. Ртуть использовалась для создания красного цвета.

Токсичная ртуть в вермилионе

Синнабар, он же ярко-красный киноварный сульфид ртути, считается ртуть - еще один элемент, известный своей токсичностью, но применяемый в прошлом в качестве красного пигмента. Мышьяк, который также является ядом, использовался в зеленых и желтых красках.

Это, вероятно, и есть красный мышьяк, который использовался в качестве пигмента. Источник этого красного пигмента был неизвестен, пока Плиний этого не прояснил и местоположение не назвал.

Если человек очень это хочет использовать, для предохранения поверхностей и устранения запаха, то можно использовать воск, чтобы покрыть поверхность, содержащую мышьяк. Воск будет блокировать контакт с кожей, но не будет предотвращать испарение. Поэтому после устранения воска, содержащего мышьяк, запах снова появится.

Синтетический ярко-красный, известный как красный мышьяк, был открыт в 1840 году. Он был использован в Германии и Франции. Однако, этот пигмент был запрещен в 1858 году и должен был стать устаревшим пигментом после Первой.

Зеленые пигменты убийцы мышьяка

Зеленый цвет является очень универсальным цветом, который использовался человеком на протяжении тысячелетий. Однако, многие из зеленых пигментов, которые использовались в прошлом, были очень токсичными. Этот список включает такие пигменты, как зеленый мышьяк, зеленый Шееле и зеленый Скиннера.

Зеленый мышьяк, также известный как парижская зеленая или зеленый Шееле, был открыт в 1814 году. Он был очень популярен в XIX веке из-за своей яркости и стойкости. Однако, этот пигмент был очень токсичным. Он содержал мышьяк, который может вызывать тяжелые заболевания, такие как рак кожи, легких и печени.

Натюрморт с вишнями, Эдуард Мане, 1882 год. Зеленый мышьяк был популярным пигментом в XIX веке.

Зеленый Шееле был открыт в 1775 году. Он был очень популярен в XIX веке из-за своей яркости и стойкости. Однако, этот пигмент был очень токсичным. Он содержал мышьяк, который может вызывать тяжелые заболевания, такие как рак кожи, легких и печени.

Зеленый Скиннера был открыт в 1828 году. Он был очень популярен в XIX веке из-за своей яркости и стойкости. Однако, этот пигмент был очень токсичным. Он содержал мышьяк, который может вызывать тяжелые заболевания, такие как рак кожи, легких и печени.

Несмотря на опасность, зеленый мышьяк использовался художниками на протяжении многих лет. Только в XX веке, с появлением безопасных альтернатив, его использование начало сокращаться.

Другой основной зеленый пигмент "зеленая зелень", содержащий медные ион соль Гипсовая. Гипсовая зелень была открыта Шееле в 1775 году и широко использовалась в XIX веке. Однако, этот пигмент также был очень токсичным, поскольку содержал мышьяк.

Некоторые художники, тем временем все еще хотели использовать зеленый цвет в своих работах. Если вашей целью становилась минимизация вашего риска отравления, вместо этого можно было использовать такие пигменты, как хромовый зеленый. Хотя, конечно, можно было полностью избежать зеленого цвета.

Урановый оранжевый был популярен в 1930-х и 1940-х годах, но его использование было ограничено из-за его радиоактивности. Уран является слабым радиоактивным элементом, и его воздействие может вызывать рак.

Несмотря на опасность, урановый оранжевый пигмент все еще используется в некоторых странах. Однако, его использование строго регулируется, и его можно найти только в некоторых специализированных магазинах.

The Black Guard Battalion "Al-Haras Al-Aswad" was an elite force in the army of the Almoravid dynasty, led by the Moroccan Muslim prince "Youssef Ibn Tachfine" (may Allah have mercy on him). This elite force of black warriors were among the first-class heroes, and they only fought with daggers and spears, and they pledged full allegiance to Ibn Tachfine. The battalion consisted of 4000 fighters, and in the Battle of Zallaqa, the bravery and dedication of this part of the great Almoravid army appeared, as they played a major role, after Allah, in crushing the army of Alfonso VI, known as "Adfonsh."

After the Islamic armies attacked Alfonso's army and set fire to their rear camp, Alfonso tried to retreat to save his camp. Ibn Tachfine launched his forces for a rapid intervention to settle the situation, and he succeeded in doing so. Alfonso found himself face-to-face with the Black Guard battalion, and this terrifying battalion was able to crush the Crusaders' army and end any resistance from them. Moreover, one of them was able to stab Alfonso in the thigh with a dagger, and he remained limping thereafter.

Язык, который вы упоминаете, является языком Урду, который является одним из национальных языков Пакистана и одним из официальных языков Индии. Урду относится к семейству индоарийских языков и использует арабскую письменность. Переводы, которые вы предоставили, означают следующее:

- موت کا زمانہ (maut ka zamaana): время смерти
- موت کا وقت (maut ka waqt): время смерти
- موت (maut): смерть
- مرگ (marg): смерть
- مرنا (marna): умирать

Эти слова и выражения связаны с концепцией смерти. Если у вас есть какие-либо конкретные вопросы о смерти или о языке Урду, я буду рад помочь вам.

o مَمات کے اردو معانی

کلمہ "مَمات" کا مطلب ہے "موت" یا "وفات"۔ یہ اردو زبان میں استعمال ہونے والا لفظ ہے جو عموماً موت یا جان کے سفر کو ظاہر کرنے کے لئے استعمال ہوتا ہے۔ اس کے علاوہ، "مَمات" کا استعمال بھی مذہبی یا ادبی موضوعات میں بھی کیا جاتا ہے۔ اس لفظ کا مترادف لفظ "وفات" ہے جو بھی موت یا فنا کو ظاہر کرتا ہے۔

o مَمات کے اردو معانی ЧТО ЭТО ЗА ЯЗЫК

Вы упоминаете язык Урду. "مَمات کے اردو معانی" переводится на русский язык как "значение слова 'مَمات' на урду". Язык Урду, как я уже упоминал ранее, является одним из национальных языков Пакистана и официальным языком Индии. В данном контексте "مَمات" означает "смерть" или "вымирание" на урду. Это слово используется для обозначения концепции смерти или ухода из жизни. Если у вас есть еще вопросы, я с радостью помогу вам.

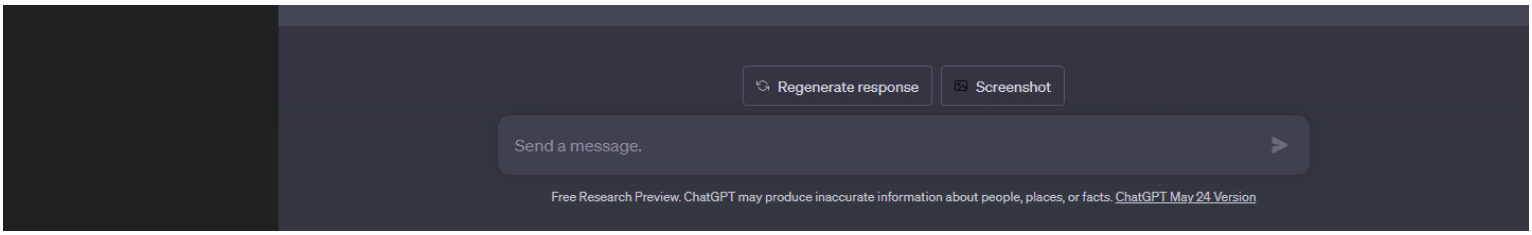
Слово "पिशीत्स्य" (Piśhītsya) находится в санскрите и является существительным в женском роде. В санскрите существуют три рода: мужской, женский и средний. Слова, обозначающие женские существительные, считаются стрилинг (strīliṅga), в то время как слова, обозначающие мужские существительные, считаются пुंलिङ्ग (pumliṅga).

"पिशीत्स्य" (Piśhītsya) - это существительное в стрилинге, что указывает на его женский род в санскрите. Однако, без дополнительного контекста, я не могу точно определить его значение. Если у вас есть дополнительная информация или контекст, пожалуйста, предоставьте его, чтобы я мог вам помочь с более точным определением и переводом.



o संज्ञा, स्त्रीलिंग ЭТО "смерть" или "вымирание" на урду ???

Извините за путаницу в предыдущих ответах. "संज्ञा" (sanjñā) - это существительное в санскрите, и оно не имеет прямого отношения к урду. В санскрите нет понятия рода "стрілінг" или "пуілінг". Род в санскрите классифицируется как "пуілінг" (мужской род), "стрілінг" (женский род) или "напумсак" (средний род).

Если вы ищете перевод слова "смерть" или "вымирание" на урду, вот соответствующие переводы:

- "смерть" - "موت" (maut)
- "вымирание" - "انقراض" (inqilāb)

Еще раз приношу извинения за путаницу и непонимание в предыдущих ответах. Если у вас есть еще вопросы, пожалуйста, сообщите.

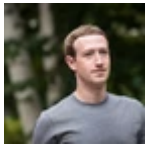
A list of some of Africa's most prominent cults and secret societies of all time

Africa



The Internet has shone light on many secret societies, rendering them not so secret.

Here is a list of some of Africa's most prominent cults of all time:

Ekpe society

The Ekpe is a secret society that lives mostly in Nigeria and whose members are typically law enforcers and politicians. They are well respected agents of wealth distribution in the community. It is a male-only society, and members are bound by secrecy.

The society is somewhat akin to a free mason group and does some unofficial law enforcement. Residents in Ekpe villages often go to the group to help them seek justice when they've been wronged.

Ogboni

The Ogboni is a fraternity indigenous to Nigeria, Benin and Togo. To be a member, one must be a part of Yoruba nobility. The Ogboni fraternity is said to have a strong affiliation to royalty, gerontological system of governance and the law enforcement of the community.

Internal details about the membership and brotherhood demands of this ancient group is supposedly a top secret known only to the members.

Osirica

The Osirica is a black Egyptian masonic order that existed in ancient Egypt. Osirica brotherhood is the root of all the mason societies, dating back around 2300 B.C.

Ma'at. Archaeological evidence found that the group was extremely advanced in education for its time, and headed the construction of the Valley of the Kings.

Free Masons

A fraternal society that emerged in the western culture between the 16th and 7th century. Free masons were originally an ancient Egyptian fraternity of builders, with Imhotep, as their founder and chief sculptor.

Imhotep was a revered personality as he was believed to be with super powers of healing and influencing people and affairs of the community.

The Freemasonry's affiliation to the Imhotep is clearly evident and this is probably why they are accused of several conspiracy theories, since their objective is geared towards the restructuring and controlling of global affairs.

Leopard society

The Leopard Society was allegedly a cannibalistic society in the early-to-mid 2oth century in Sierra Leone, Libera and Côte d'Ivoire.

Group members would disguise themselves as leopards, wearing leopard skins, carrying claw-like weapons, and attacking their prey. They believed feasting on a human strengthened their bonds.

Neegee society

The Neegee or Crocodile Society is considered evil by the Poro and Sande groups.

human flesh, they gain the ability to transform into a crocodile.

Doomsday cult

The doomsday cult is a sinister transnational cult that has paved its way from the west and Asian world into some African countries including Uganda and South Africa. The group is gaining grounds as it seems to incessantly predict the total destruction of the planet earth.

The cult members are usually violent and self-destructive to the point of committing suicide.

Abakua

Abakua is an Afro-Cuban men's secret society related to the Ekpe. The group is a mutual aid society known for elaborate street dances and very high expectations of the members to prioritize the group over their own families. The group has managed to stay mostly hidden for over more than 100 years.

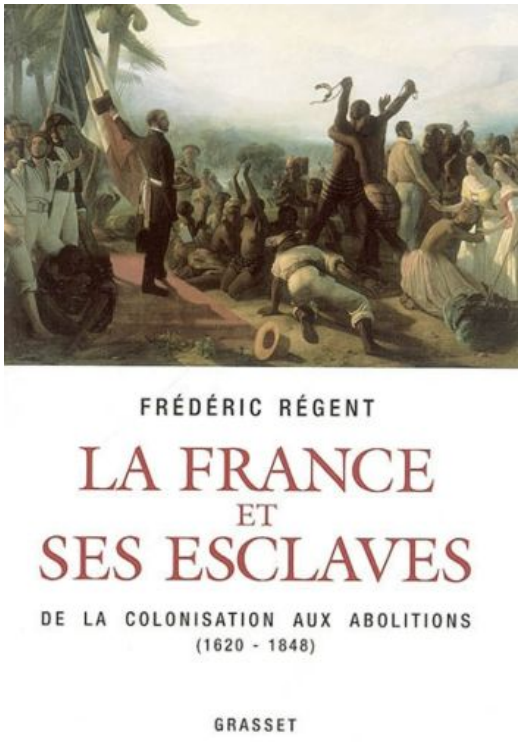
La France et ses esclaves



de la colonisation aux abolitions
(1620-1848)

Frédéric Regent

Sous la domination coloniale française, quatre millions d'esclaves ont vécu ou survécu dans les territoires suivants: Gorée, Grenade, Guadeloupe, Guyane, Ile Bourbon (Réunion), Ile de France (Ile Maurice), Louisiane, Marie-Galante, Martinique, Nouvelle-France, Saint-Barthélemy, Saint-Christophe, Sainte-Croix, Saint-Domingue, Saint-Louis du Sénégal, Sainte-Lucie, Saint-Martin, les Seychelles, Tobago.

Il existe des histoires de la colonisation française, des histoires de chaque colonie ou ensemble régional colonial, des histoires très générales de l'esclavage, mais il n'existe aucune histoire croisée de l'esclavage dans les colonies françaises sur toute la période coloniale. Ce livre est donc une première. Il s'adresse à un public large, désirant apprendre ce qui s'est passé durant les deux siècles de la période esclavagiste de la France, dans un souci de vérité et de clarté.

La France et ses esclaves raconte cette histoire, loin du manichéisme habituel, elle décrit les relations complexes, entre Blancs, Noirs, Amérindiens, les métissages et les transformations.

La France et ses esclaves: de la colonisation aux abolitions (1620-1848), Frédéric Regent • Editeur Grasset, Paris • 368 p. • 2007 • ISBN 978-2-246-70211-5 • 19,50 €.

Ce livre, qui couvre une période allant des débuts de la colonisation à la seconde abolition de 1848, utilise des documents jusque là méconnus. Il permet de comprendre à tout lecteur ce que fut l'esclavage sous la domination française - un pan mal connu et peu enseigné de notre histoire.

Né en 1969, Frédéric Régent est originaire de Guadeloupe, il est docteur en histoire de l'Université Paris I - Panthéon-Sorbonne. Auteur de différents articles sur l'expédition d'Egypte, l'esclavage et la Guadeloupe pendant la Révolution, co-auteur avec Jacques Adélaïde-Merlande et René Bélénus de /La rébellion de la Guadeloupe 1801-1802/ (Archives départementales de la Guadeloupe, 2002), il enseigne aujourd'hui l'histoire à l'Université des Antilles et de la Guyane. Il est l'auteur, chez Grasset en 2004, de Esclavage, métissage, liberté (/La révolution française en Guadeloupe, 1789-1802/), aujourd'hui reconnu comme un livre de référence.

Interview parue dans la revue Enjeux, n°199, mai 2008

La journée commémorative du souvenir de l'esclavage et de son abolition (10 mai) est une bonne occasion pour revenir sur le livre consacré à l'esclavage de Frédéric Régent qui enseigne à l'Université des Antilles et de la Guyane.
Voici un ouvrage qui présente de façon claire et efficace, en même temps avec une rare précision les acquis les plus récents de l'historiographie de la colonisation française et du fonctionnement des sociétés esclavagistes dans les colonies.

Le refus des explications simplistes, des idées reçues, n'est pas le moindre es mérites de ce travail sur un sujet fortement marqué par des enjeux de mémoire.

Refusant de verser dans le registre de l'émotion ou de l'indignation, l'auteur nous livre une analyse complète et rigoureuse, souvent subtile qui ne recule jamais devant la description de réalités sociales bien plus complexes qu'on ne le croit souvent.

Bref, une synthèse magistrale, première en son genre à embrasser ces deux siècles, des premières installations de colons au décret du 27 avril 1848, durant lesquels des terres françaises portèrent quatre millions d'esclaves. Nous remercions l'auteur d'avoir bien voulu éclairer quelques uns des aspects principaux de son livre en répondant à nos questions.

Fabrice Giovanazzi : Comment la France en vient-elle à choisir l'esclavage et à subventionner la traite négrière pour exploiter ses colonies?

Frédéric Régent: De 1628 à 1642, des marins français capturent des esclaves sur les bateaux négriers étrangers et les introduisent dans les colonies françaises. Des colons français achètent également des esclaves aux navires négriers étrangers. La traite négrière est légalisée par le roi de France Louis XIII en 1642. Hostile au départ, il se laisse convaincre par le fait que la traite négrière lui est présentée comme le meilleur moyen de christianiser les Africains. Son successeur Louis XIV encourage la traite négrière en donnant une subvention pour chaque esclave introduit dans les colonies en 1672. Le commerce des esclaves sera ainsi subventionné jusqu'en 1793. Si dans un premier temps, la monarchie française a encouragé un peuplement français des colonies, très rapidement, elle se rend compte de son échec. Les Français ont du mal à survivre car ils sont davantage victimes des maladies tropicales que les Africains. De plus, avec le développement de la production sucrière, il est plus rentable pour les propriétaires de plantation d'acheter des esclaves que de payer le voyage de serviteurs français, travaillant gratuitement pendant trois ans. La monarchie française se rend compte que la prospérité des îles passe par le développement de l'esclavage. Elle encourage donc la traite négrière, puis codifie l'esclavage avec l'Edit de mars 1685, un des textes fondamentaux du Code Noir. C'est donc la recherche du plus grand profit qui entraîne le choix de l'esclavage et de la traite négrière par la monarchie française, nonobstant toute attitude humanitariste.

Dans ton livre tu mets beaucoup l'accent sur les rapports sociaux très complexes qui s'établissent dans les sociétés coloniales...

En effet, les rapports entre maîtres et esclaves sont très complexes. L'esclavage c'est d'abord un régime de violence. Fouets, chaînes, cachots, mutilations, humiliations font partie de l'arsenal de la terreur dont disposent les maîtres pour dominer les esclaves, souvent 10 fois plus nombreux qu'eux. L'esclave est le bien mobilier de son maître qui peut le vendre, le louer, l'échanger, le donner et aussi l'affranchir. Si le maître ne possède pas le droit de vie et de mort sur son esclave, il est rarement condamné lorsqu'il le tue. L'esclave réduit à l'état de bien mobilier est tout de même baptisé. C'est donc que les maîtres lui reconnaissent une âme. L'Église enseigne la soumission des esclaves à leurs propriétaires. Les colons sont d'ailleurs tout à fait conscients de traiter inhumainement des êtres humains, mais ils considèrent que ces êtres humains sont d'une nature différente. Ce qui ne les empêche pas d'ailleurs d'avoir très fréquemment des relations sexuelles avec des femmes esclaves. Il faut préciser que les Français qui vivent dans les colonies sont dans une proportion écrasante des hommes. Entre 1635 et 1715, les départs de La Rochelle pour les colonies françaises des Antilles font état de 40 femmes sur 6.200 engagés, soit une femme pour 154 hommes. De nombreux colons fréquentent et parfois se marient avec des femmes esclaves amérindiennes, africaines, malgaches ou indiennes. En se mariant avec leur maître ces femmes et leurs enfants deviennent libres. Dans le recensement de la Réunion en 1690, 67% des couples (29 sur 43) sont composés d'un homme français et d'une femme malgache ou indienne. Même lorsqu'elles sont extraconjugales (lorsque le maître est marié avec une femme d'origine européenne fréquente des femmes de couleur), ces relations aboutissent fréquemment à des affranchissements. Certains maîtres gratifient de la liberté les esclaves dont ils ont apprécié le comportement et le travail. Ces esclaves affranchis et leurs descendants forment la catégorie des libres de couleur, eux-mêmes propriétaires d'esclaves. A la fin du XVIIIe siècle, les libres de couleur possèdent environ 20% des esclaves à Saint-Domingue et 5% en Guadeloupe. La quasi-totalité des propriétaires d'esclaves de la Réunion ont une ancestralité mêlée d'Européens, de Malgaches et d'Indiennes.

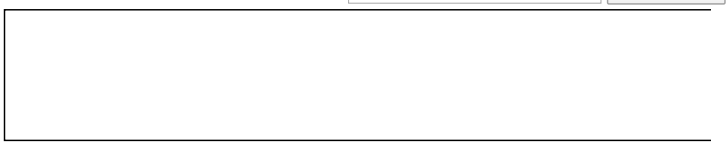
L'abolition de l'esclavage en 1848, après le précédent avorté de la Révolution française, est à mettre à l'honneur de la IIe République. Tu montres cependant que « le mouvement d'émancipation des esclaves est un processus de longue durée ». Peux-tu nous en dire plus sur ce qui y contribue ?

La première abolition de l'esclavage en 1794 est loin d'être un échec complet. En effet, sur les 600.000 esclaves (Saint-Domingue, Guadeloupe, Guyane) qui bénéficient de l'émancipation, 500.000 (ceux de Saint-Domingue) restent libres. Le rétablissement de l'esclavage est donc partiel. L'exemple de Saint-Domingue qui devient indépendant sous le nom d'Haïti en 1804 entraîne des départs d'esclaves des colonies restées françaises (Guadeloupe, Martinique) vers ce nouvel état. C'est surtout l'abolition de l'esclavage dans les colonies britanniques appliquée à partir du 1er janvier 1834 qui va entraîner de forts mouvements de désertions d'esclaves des colonies françaises vers les îles voisines connaissant la liberté.

En France, des abolitionnistes comme Schœlcher exigent l'abolition immédiate de l'esclavage. Ils ne l'obtiennent qu'à la chute de la Monarchie de Juillet en 1848. Le 27 avril 1848, l'esclavage est aboli dans les colonies françaises. Il faut noter que par deux fois la République abolit l'esclavage, le 4 février 1794 et le 27 avril 1848. Nous pouvons nous étonner de l'écart entre la proclamation de la Première République, le 22 septembre 1792 et la première abolition, 16 mois plus tard. Ce délai s'explique par le fait que les Républicains sont au départ favorable à une abolition immédiate de la traite, mais graduelle en ce qui concerne l'esclavage. D'autre part, Saint-Domingue est alors secouée par une grande insurrection d'esclaves instrumentalisée au départ par les royalistes de l'île et Robespierre considère cette révolte comme une seconde «Vendée». Les Républicains refusent alors de récompenser par la liberté, des esclaves qu'ils croient insurgés contre eux. Lorsqu'en août 1793, l'envoyé de la République Sonthonax abolit l'esclavage à Saint-Domingue, pour rallier les esclaves, à la cause de la République ce qu'il parvient à faire, les Républicains de Paris proclament l'abolition. Le processus d'abolition est lent et combine à la fois l'action des esclaves et des philanthropes. D'ailleurs, les esclaves se nourrissent des écrits abolitionnistes pour comploter ou se révolter de la fin du XVIIIe siècle à 1848.

Alors que sur ce sujet de l'esclavage et de sa mémoire, les polémiques se sont déchaînées ces dernières années, sans toujours hésiter devant l'instrumentalisation, comment situes-tu ton travail et ta réflexion par rapport à ce débat qui a resurgi ces dernières années sur le passé esclavagiste de la France? Dans ce cadre, quel est l'intérêt du 10 mai, "journée commémorative du souvenir de l'esclavage et de son abolition"?

Je situe d'abord mon travail sur le terrain de l'histoire. Les faits historiques déplaisent toujours à ceux qui veulent les instrumentaliser. La connaissance historique évolue sans cesse, il ne peut donc y avoir de mémoire figée des événements du passé. La monarchie française a été esclavagiste. Plutôt que de parler de passé esclavagiste de la France, je préfère évoquer le passé esclavagiste de certaines élites économiques françaises que l'on peut aujourd'hui identifier. En effet, le système esclavagiste crée des entreprises de négoce à échelle internationale. Il participe au développement même de l'esprit du capitalisme au XVIIIe siècle. Il rend indispensable la consommation croissante de denrées non vitales (café, tabac, cacao) produites aux dépens du sang et de la sueur des esclaves, alors que la majorité de la population du royaume n'a pas toujours en quantité suffisante l'aliment de base qu'est le pain. Ce mode de production et de commercialisation est rentable pour quelques milliers de propriétaires de grandes habitations et quelques centaines de négociants. Des deux côtés des océans, ce système profite à des élites aux dépens des masses populaires qu'elles soient serviles, paysannes ou ouvrières. L'approvisionnement en sucre, café, tabac, denrées consommées essentiellement par les élites de la société, se fait au prix du sang et de la sueur des esclaves. Le maintien des colonies esclavagiste nécessite un puissant soutien militaire et financier, payé par le sang et les impôts du petit peuple. Ce dernier est de plus en plus écrasé d'impôts dans les campagnes, exploité dans les manufactures et enrôlés souvent de force dans l'armée ou sur les navires de guerre dans les ports. Le petit peuple du royaume de France paye le prix fort des guerres très coûteuses (guerre de Sept Ans et Guerre d'Indépendance américaine) qui permettent la conservation des colonies esclavagistes La dette publique, creusée par ces conflits, oblige bientôt le roi de France a convoqué les Etats Généraux à la fin de 1788 ce qui débouche sur la Révolution française.



Il y a donc une histoire partagée de la souffrance et de l'exploitation des masses populaires. C'est cette histoire là qui devrait être portée à la connaissance de tous et nourrir la mémoire de ce crime contre l'humanité qui n'a profité qu'à un petit nombre. Jusqu'à aujourd'hui, les commémorations du 10 mai n'ont pas été à la hauteur des enjeux historiques de l'esclavage. Jusqu'à maintenant, les représentants de l'État se sont contentés de célébrer quelques abolitionnistes et de verser une petite larme compassionnée sur le triste sort des esclaves. Il ne s'agit pas de culpabiliser l'ensemble du des Français ce qui serait historiquement faux ou de dire aux descendants d'esclaves oubliez tout, on repart sur des bases nouvelles. Ce qui est nécessaire, c'est un véritable enseignement de la question de l'esclavage dans toute sa complexité. Par ailleurs, la mémoire de l'esclavage dérange parfois, car elle constitue une condamnation sans appel d'une des premières formes de mondialisation capitaliste qu'a été le commerce triangulaire. Cette première phase de globalisation ne s'est pas développée uniquement sur les bases d'une hiérarchie raciale (les noirs=esclaves). Certes, elle a contribué au développement de stéréotypes et d'idéologies racistes, mais elle a provoqué l'enrichissement des catégories sociales aisées en Europe, en Afrique et en Amérique. Il est étonnant de constater que la traite et l'esclavage ne sont souvent questionnés que sous l'angle de la question raciale et non dans ses aspects économiques et financiers. Aujourd'hui encore, les discriminations sont bien plus souvent sociales que raciales. La discrimination raciale étant souvent le fruit de la représentation sociale que l'on se fait de l'autre.

Apres 91ans de règne les Almoravides sont supplantés à la tête de l'empire par les Almohades issus des montagnes du Haut-Atlas.Alors que Marrakech est prise en 1147 et les représentants de la lignée almoravide massacrés, une famille almoravide, appelée Bani Ghaniya, originaire de la tribu saharienne de Messoufa continuait à gouverner les Îles Baléares.Il convient alors de faire connaissance avec ces îles de la Méditerranée occidentale, appelées par les auteurs arabes «Jouzour Charq al-Andalous». Parmi elles: Palma de Majorque, dite par les Arabes «Madinat Mallorca» dont le poète du XIe siècle Ben Al-Labbana Al-Andaloussi vantait ainsi les mérites: «C'est un pays auquel la colombe a prêté son collier,Et que le Paon a revêtu de sa robe de plumes,On dirait que les cours d'eau y sont vin,et que les patios des maisons sont des coupes… »Autre île d'importance: Minorque (Madinat Manorka) louée pour sa fertilité notamment par le géographe Al-Zuhri au XIIe siècle. Comment ne pas citer également la célèbre Ibiza (La Yabisa des Arabes) décrite notamment par le géographe Al-Idrissi dans sa Nuzhat Al-Mushtaq. Ainsi que d'autres îles comme Fromentera, Cabrera, Dragonera, …Vu leur position stratégique en Méditerranée, les Îles Baléares ont connu successivement la conquête phénicienne, romaine, vandale, byzantine et musulmane.
les îles Baléares ont été conquises en 1115 par le roi almoravide Ali Ben Youssef Ben Tachfine. Cet événement survient à la suite de l'expédition dirigée par une coalition de Pisans et de Catalans contre Majorque dans le but de libérer des prisonniers chrétiens tombés entre les mains des pirates des Baléares débouchant sur huit mois de siège devant Majorque et l'appel à l'aide lancé par les populations musulmanes.L'archipel est ensuite confié aux représentants Béni Ghaniya qui tiennent leur nom de leur mère, parente du sultan Youssef Ben Tachfine et épouse de Ali Ben Youssef Al-Messoufı.
De leur union sont issus Yahya Ben Ghaniya, commandant des forces almoravides en Espagne, mort en 1149 lors du siège de Grenade par les Almohades et Mohammed Ben Ghaniya nommé en 1126 gouverneur des Baléares. Il est succédé par son propre fils Ishaq, puis par le fils de ce dernier Mohammed qui est révoqué en 1184 après avoir reconnu la suzeraineté des Almohades. C'est ainsi qu'il est remplacé par son frère Ali qui déplaça la rébellion contre les Almohades en Afrique du Nord en alliance avec les turcomans de Tripolitaine et avec les bédouins Béni Hilal qui furent d'ailleurs déportés pour cette raison dans les plaines atlantiques par les sultans almohades. Les villes de Bougie, Gafsa, Alger Miliana sont ainsi prises avant que Ali Ben Ghaniya ne soit assassiné en 1188 près de Tozeur. Son frère et successeur Yahya poursuivra longuement le combat mais ne saura résister à la reconquête almohade des Baléares menée en 1203 par le sultan Muhammad an-Nasir.Ceci dit, la mainmise almohade sera de courte durée. En 1228, dans le cadre de la Reconquista, une expédition de 15.000 hommes et de 1500 chevaux est organisée conjointement entre les chevaliers aragonais et les chevaliers catalans avec à leur tête, Jacques Ier, roi d'Aragon, comte de Barcelone et seigneur de Montpellier. Palma de Majorque est prise d'assaut en 1229 et ses habitants massacrés, alors que l'autre patrie fut réduite en esclavage ou prit le chemin de l'exil en Afrique du Nord, comme plus tard le reste de la population de l'archipel, laissant la voie à une immigration principalement catalane. La légende rapporte que le grand nombre de cadavres jeté à l'air libre provoqua une épidémie qui ravagea l'armée victorieuse en proie à des querelles concernant la répartition du butin. Après Majorque, Ibiza est prise en 1235, Minorque où régnait le clan du Raïss Qaraqouch est soumise à son tour en 1287 et tout l'archipel réuni à la couronne d'Aragon en 1343, mettant fin à plusieurs siècles de présence musulmane dont on peut encore contempler les vestiges…

la Mauresse de Moret et Dorothée

Dans son excellent petit ouvrage, publié en 2012, consacré à la religieuse métisse communément appelée *La Mauresse de M*oret, Serge Bilé laisse le lecteur libre d'arrêter son jugement personnel sur son ascendance, après une étourdissante promenade dans le dédale des archives et des témoignages littéraires du XVIIIe et du XIXe siècles. Cependant le dernier chapitre du livre, très riche sur les soins que Louis XIV apporta à cette religieuse noire, nous laisse croire que ceux qui continuent à voir en elle la fille de la reine Marie-Thérèse se trompent ou veulent nous tromper.

Certes, dans la culture collective – sauf dans celle de quelques rares irréductibles, comme nous le verrons plus loin – Marie-Thérèse, l'épouse du roi Louis XIV, a mis au monde une fille métisse en novembre 1664. Les petites histoires sur l'excessive consommation du chocolat ou le simple regard d'une personne noire qui produirait des enfants noirs, inventées par son médecin et ses soutiens, n'ont pas suffi pour la laver de son adultère. Et même si la mort de la fille de la reine et la disparition de son père nègre n'ont pas clairement été établies, leur existence fait partie de l'Histoire de France depuis des siècles.

Si malgré cela la polémique autour de la religieuse noire, qui vécut et mourut au couvent des bénédictines de la ville de Moret, ressurgit aujourd'hui et passionne de nouveau les historiens, c'est parce que les archives semblent montrer que l'adultère de la reine Marie-Thérèse – ou son prétendu adultère – était destiné à nier le fruit des relations sexuelles que Louis XIV aurait eues avec une négresse. La question que l'on se pose désormais est donc celle-ci : la Mauresse de Moret, la sœur Louise-Marie de Sainte Thérèse, est-elle la fille – déclarée morte à la naissance – de la reine Marie-Thérèse ou la fille adultérine de Louis XIV ?

Pour celui qui lit attentivement son livre, le récit de Serge Bilé ne peut longtemps entretenir le trouble dans son esprit. Il contient les éléments nécessaires pour donner la ferme conviction que cette religieuse noire était bien la fille de Louis XIV. Ce ne sont pas les affirmations de Saint-Simon et de Voltaire – selon ce dernier, la Mauresse est le fidèle portrait du roi – ni même les contradictions des historiens et de Victor Hugo qui peuvent aider en cela. Au contraire, ce qui nous ouvre les yeux, c'est la ferme négation de l'existence des filles adultérines de Louis XIV, et particulièrement celle des historiens comme Alain Decaux qui – ignorant à la fois la vie sexuelle du roi et son comportement à l'égard de la Mauresse – refusent de croire que le roi ait pu folâtrer avec une négresse.

Que dit l'Histoire de la vie sexuelle de Louis XIV ? En 1919, balayant les scrupules de tous ceux qui ne voulaient pas voir en la religieuse noire la fille du Roi Soleil, l'archiviste Jules Mathorez rappelait en ces termes l'idée que les précédents siècles avaient laissé de lui : « Lorsqu'on se souvient que, pour Louis XIV jeune, tout était bon, pourvu que ce fussent des femmes, et qu'il aima la Beauvais (femme de chambre borgne de la reine mère), des filles de jardiniers, et d'autres personnes de modeste condition, rien ne s'oppose à ce que, vers 1656, Louis XIV ait eu une héritière noire qu'il aurait fait conduire au couvent de Moret ».

L'évidente conviction raciste qui anime Alain Decaux et certains historiens et les pousse à nier la paternité du roi ne peut constituer un argument. Serait-il inconcevable qu'un roi de France ait eu des relations sexuelles avec une Noire ? Le fait d'être roi n'empêchait pas Louis XIV d'être homme. Et comme il avait plus de droit que les autres hommes – sinon tous les droits – il couchait avec qui il voulait. Oui, la réputation de Louis XIV était connue : ses conquêtes ne se limitaient pas aux femmes et aux filles des nobles de sa cour. Pauvre ou riche, négresse ou pas, qu'importait la condition : un joli minois condamnait une belle dame à ses rets !

Plutôt que de se laisser enfermer pour des raisons racistes dans la négation pure et simple de cette filiation entre Louis XIV et la religieuse noire de Moret, tout lecteur attentif sera contraint de se poser cette question déjà formulée par Jules Mathorez en 1919 : « Comment expliquer [sans cette filiation] l'intérêt porté par la cour à cette négresse ? »

Ce sont en effet les soins particuliers, que le roi prit à la formation de cette religieuse noire mais aussi pour lui garantir une existence commode, qui étonnent. Les documents d'archives consultés par Serge Bilé attestent que cette attention n'a jamais faibli jusqu'à la mort de Louis XIV. C'est dire combien ceux qui continuent à croire que la religieuse noire Louise-Marie de Sainte Thérèse – annoncée morte et réapparue après une vingtaine d'années de silence ! – est la fille de la reine et du nain noir Nabo, ne sont absolument pas crédibles.

Personne ne peut croire que Louis XIV, cocufié par la reine, se soit ardemment transformé en beau-père attentif et généreux au point de faire de cette jeune femme noire la prunelle de ses yeux et céder à ses volontés que Madame de Maintenon – sa dernière compagne – qualifiait de caprices. Signalons que la sœur Louise-Marie de Sainte Thérèse exigea et obtint en effet que le roi assistât à sa prise de voile le 30 septembre 1695. Elle avait alors trente-et-un ans.

Non, personne ne peut croire qu'un cocu publiquement humilié – l'accouchement d'une reine se faisant toujours en public – se plie aux caprices du fruit de l'adultère de sa femme ! Non, un cocu ne multiplierait pas les visites à la fille dont la naissance a souillé sa réputation devant la cour entière. Seules les femmes sont capables de ce dépassement ; pas les hommes, à moins que le cocufiage ne soit pas connu de tous. Il est certain que le défilé des princes de la cour au couvent de Moret s'explique par le fait que la négresse Louise-Marie de Sainte Thérèse était bien la fille naturelle du Roi Soleil. Nous pouvons dire, après l'abbé Pougeois qui fut curé à Moret, que « ce n'était sans doute pas fortuitement que la Mauresse portait en religion le nom de Louise-Marie de sainte Thérèse, c'est-à-dire les noms mêlés du roi et de la reine »

Il nous a suffi de pousser un peu plus loin notre curiosité hors du livre de Serge Bilé, qui nous a permis de forger notre conviction, pour découvrir que selon Serge Aroles, « l'énigme de la fille noire de Louis XIV (est) résolue par les archives ». Oui, Serges Aroles montre clairement lui aussi, à travers les archives, que Louise-Marie de Sainte Thérèse – avec sa « triple dénomination alors rarissime, relevant quasi exclusivement de la haute noblesse » – est la fille de Louis XIV et non point celle de la reine Marie-Thérèse. Non seulement l'auteur affirme et démontre que la négresse de Moret est la fille du roi de France, mais aussi que celui-ci – toujours selon les archives – a eu une deuxième fille du nom de Dorothée, qu'il n'avait cessé de voir en cachette.

Voici l'introduction de son court texte : « Les archives sont souveraines : elles dédisent formellement trois siècles de littérature, qui n'ont point fait usage d'elles mais qui veulent que la fameuse « mauresse de Moret » eût été une fille que la reine de France aurait eue en 1664 d'un amant noir. Et les archives stupéfient. Il est une autre fille que Louis XIV protège de tous ses soins, mais tant secrètement qu'elle est restée inconnue jusqu'à nos jours : Dorothée, précieuse petite créature que le roi fait escorter de Paris à Orléans par son trésorier général de l'Artillerie ». Quand Dorothée, placée chez les Ursulines d'Orléans devait rejoindre un couvent proche de Paris pour y rencontrer le roi, elle jouissait d'une protection quasi militaire, fait remarquer Serge Aroles.

Autre détail de l'histoire qui tend à confirmer cette double paternité de Louis XIV, c'est que le luxueux carton sensé contenir les documents personnels de Louise-Marie de Sainte Thérèse nous est parvenu vide ; et quant à Dorothée, on a aussi pris soin d'effacer toute trace d'elle. Après leur mort, le vide trop soigneusement créé autour de ces deux femmes noires tend à confirmer leur lien de parenté avec le roi de France. Trop de « documents volés. Sans équivalent est l'absence de toute mention d'un acte de baptême [...] pour une religieuse bénédictine », fait remarquer Serge Aroles qui croit à une volonté délibérée d'effacer toutes les traces qui conduiraient à l'affirmation d'un quelconque lien de parenté entre les filles noires et Louis XIV. Il ne nous reste aujourd'hui, dans les archives, que peu de chose des enregistrements, au XVIIIe siècle, des minutes notariales disparues. Toutefois, « Louise et Dorothée, apparaissent […] – et avec quelle force pour cette dernière ! – dans les archives de la Maison du Roi. Que l'une ou l'autre eût été une enfant de la souveraine, elle apparaîtrait dans les comptes de la Maison de la Reine ». Ce dernier complément d'information lave la reine du soupçon de tout lien de sang avec l'une ou l'autre des deux femmes métisses.

Qui serait la mère de ces deux filles métisses ? Sont-elles sœurs ou demi-sœurs ? Sur ce chapitre, aucune certitude, selon Serge Aroles. Comme il n'y avait aucune servante noire, tant dans la « Maison du Roi » que dans la « Maison de la Reine », il émet l'hypothèse que ces filles seraient issues de « la petite noire vendue, jeune enfant, au premier comédien de Louis XIII, pour jouer les rôles de sauvage » que Louis XIV, amateur de théâtre, n'aura pas manqué de remarquer. Et, ajoute-t-il, si ces deux filles sont issues de la même femme, c'est qu'il y a eu relation amoureuse entre le roi et leur mère et non point une relation de passage. Logique !

Mais là où Serge Aroles surprend tout le monde, c'est quand il soutient – contre toutes les rumeurs du XVIIIe siècle – que la reine Marie-Thérèse n'a jamais accouché d'une fille noire. Selon lui, aucune correspondance entre les royaumes d'Europe (Autriche, Espagne, Grande-Bretagne, Vatican) ne mentionne ce fait. Or, ajoute-t-il, « malgré les alliances matrimoniales, ces puissances restaient ennemies de la France », et l'absence de pudeur et de retenue qui caractérisaient les lettres secrètes de l'époque n'auraient pas fait l'économie de l'information.

L'on peut donc dire que si l'enfant de la reine, né en novembre 1664, n'avait nullement la peau noire, c'est que cette histoire a été inventée comme un contre-feu aux naissances des enfants de Louis XIV. Oui, on peut imaginer que pour détourner l'attention de la cour et du peuple de ce qui lui arrivait, l'entourage du roi a propagé une nouvelle absolument fallacieuse. Et comme l'enfant de la reine est mort quelque temps après sa naissance, le public n'a pu, à l'époque, savoir la véracité de l'histoire.

Cette lecture de l'Histoire que fait Serge Aroles lave non seulement la reine de la calomnie qui la couvre depuis des siècles, mais confirme aussi le fait que Marie-Thérèse ne pouvait en aucune façon être la mère de la religieuse noire de Moret qu'elle n'a d'ailleurs pas souvent visitée. Cette présentation tend plutôt à montrer que ses zélés calomniateurs ne cherchaient et ne cherchent qu'à protéger l'honneur de Louis XIV. En juillet 2014, un article publié sur le site internet du journal Paris Match était ainsi intitulé : « Scandale à la cour : la reine Marie-Thérèse accouche d'un bébé noir ». Un article apparemment écrit pour dire que le déshonneur du roi de France est venu de l'Espagne, le pays de naissance de la reine. Son auteur ne tient aucun compte des documents d'archives et tend plutôt à déformer l'histoire quand il dit que le roi allait voir la négresse de Moret parce qu'il avait entendu dire que celle-ci avait des dons pour l'occultisme et aussi parce que « le roi, bon père pour tous ses enfants, ne se résignait peut-être pas à abandonner la fille de Marie-Thérèse, victime avec Nabo d'une faiblesse passagère à laquelle lui-même, des années durant, n'avait cessé de s'abandonner ». Ces lignes montrent de manière éclatante que la grossière tentative de falsification de l'Histoire poursuit son cours parmi nous. Mais cette fois, elle est devenue plus que ridicule ; elle est risible !

Dans la revue L'Histoire de mars 2019, c'est-à-dire quatre ans et demi après moi, un petit article (p.43) signé Joël Cornette fait la même analyse avec les mêmes éléments sans me citer ! Alors que jamais, avant moi, personne n'avait fait mention de Serges Aroles. Il finit son billet par une pirouette qui voudrait entretenir le négationnisme sans se rendre compte que son sentiment est aussi risible que celui de Paris Match : «Aucun document cependant ne permet d'étayer ces hypothèses. Le dossier Boinet 89 aux archives de la bibliothèque Sainte-Geneviève porte la mention manuscrite : "La Moresque Fille de Louis 14". Mais le dossier... est vide», affirme-t-il. Si le seul fait que le dossier est vide annule tous les indices qui trahissent la vérité, on peut conclure que peu de récits de l'histoire de France mériteraient d'entrer dans les livres d'histoire et dans les manuels scolaires. Le grand soin pris pour faire disparaître le dossier trouvé dans les affaires du roi est la preuve même que cette femme est la fille de Louis XIV ; le sentiment de Joël Cornette n'y change rien ! Joël Cornette aurait dû se poser cette question essentielle et élémentaire avant de conclure son article : pourquoi le dossier (même vide) d'une négresse se trouvait-il dans les affaires du roi de France ? Pourquoi n'a-t-on trouvé aucun document de cette fille dans les affaires de la reine ?

Serge Aroles a cité le livre de Serge Bilé sur son site Internet, par probité, parce que celui-ci a été le premier à aller très loin dans les recherches pour affirmer que la Mauresse de Moret n'est pas la fille de la reine. Suite à mon article, Serges Aroles m'a adressé des documents relatifs à "l'Homme au masque de fer" en me suggérant de les exploiter pour un travail équivalent à celui que je venais d'accomplir.

- Merci St Ralph pour ce billet qui prend à contre pied l'article de paris match. Thomas Jefferson, à l'image de louis XIV, 3em président des États-Unis et principal rédacteur de la constitution américaine eut des enfants noirs avec l'une de ses esclaves. La falsification de l'histoire des nations se poursuit de nos jours, comme en Côte d'Ivoire, où les criminels sont présentés comme de parfaits démocrates. Merci encore de nous éclairer, au dela de l'histoire officielle.

- Mon cher Xada, ton commentaire traduit exactement la réalité des faits. Partout, on tente par tous les moyens de donner un autre visage au fait pour donner un autre sens à l'Histoire. Seule la vigilance est l'ennemi des falsificateurs. Si nous baisons la garde et nous nous taisons, ils ont raison et leur point de vue fait l'Histoire. Si nous nous montrons présents, ils se font tout petits et le public les regarde avec mépris.

Posté par St-Ralph, 09 septembre 2014 à 22:31

- La falsification de l'histoire est une spécialité bien occidentale. Très belle démonstration de Serge Bilé. Merci St Ralph

- La Falsification de l'histoire ? ?

  Que d'efforts pour démontrer que la Moresse et la fille de L14 et non de Marie-Thèrèse ! On oublie de citer Mme de Montpensier "la reine avait fait une mine. la fille dont elle était accouchée ressemblait un petit maure que M. de Beaufort avait amené, qui était fort joli, qui était toujours avec la reine; quand on s'était souvenu que son enfant y pourrait ressembler on l'avait ôté mais qu'il n'était plus temps" (Tome 4, p14, Ed. G Charpentier et Cie). Mme de Montpensier venait de recueillir ces nouvelles de Monsieur, frère du roi. Que la Princesse dise vrai ou non, ce qu'il est impossible de vérifier, ne pas la citer pourrait bien faire partie aussi des "falsifications de l'histoire".

  Posté par CLAUDE, 04 juillet 2017 à 13:05

- Cher Claude,

  Ils ont très nombreux tous ceux qui ont raconté leur petite histoire sur la prétendue fille noire de la reine. Bein sûr que la reine a eu une fille... noire, il n'est nullement certain. Mais ce n'est pas d'elle dont parle mon billet. Mon billet parle précisément de la religieuse de Moret et non de la fille que la reine a mise au monde.
  Une chose est sûre, la fille de la reine n'est pas la religieuse de Moret ! Voilà ce que démontre mon billet à travers les archives.
  Mme de Montpensier que vous citez ne nous dit nulle part que la religieuse de Moret est la fille de la reine ! A vous d'en faire la démonstration. On ne va citer toutes les âneries qui ont été racontées sur l'enfant de la reine. Mme Montpensier ne dit pas l'avoir vue ! "Son enfant y pourrait ressembler..." Attention à la formulation des phrases, aux temps des verbes !

  Posté par St-Ralph, 04 juillet 2017 à 16:09

- Merci de votre réponse
  Je fais attention à la formulation, puisque loin de prétendre que Mme de Montpensier a vu l'enfant je précise qu'elle tient ses informations de Monsieur, qui a assisté à la naissance.
  Vous dites que « le défilé des princes de la cour au couvent de Moret démontre que la moresse était bien la fille naturelle du roi. N'est il pas également possible que le roi ait voulu, par cette attitude, convaincre que tel était le cas ?
  Il aurait tout aussi bien pu faire en sorte que (presque) personne ne soit informé de l'existence de la Moresse. Pourquoi ne l'a-t-il pas fait ? C'est cela qui me surprend..
  La disparition des papiers du carton censé contenir les documents personnels de la Moresse marquerait selon Serge Alores, une volonté délibérée d'effacer toutes les traces qui conduiraient à l'affirmation d'un quelconque lien de parenté entre les filles noires et Louis XIV. Mais alors pourquoi ce « le défilé des princes de la cour au couvent de Moret » ?
  Vous évoquez « l'évidente conviction raciste qui anime Alain Decaux », .
  Je suis allé sur Wikipédia et lis : « Alain Decaux, né le 23 juillet 1925 à Lille et mort le 27 mars 2016 à Paris, est un écrivain, ... Il est membre du comité d'honneur du Mouvement contre le racisme et pour l'amitié entre les peuples (MRAP) ».

Ferdinand de Magellan et la Bataille d'Azemmour/1513/(الرحالة ماجلان ومعركة ازمور):
En 1505, Ferdinand embarque sur l'un des vingt-deux navires d'une importante flotte commandée par Francisco De Almeida, en partance de Lisbonne pour les îles de la Sonde, par la route maritime portugaise des Indes orientales, jalonnée de ports fortifiés établis sur les îles. Il passe sept années à maintenir par la force la mainmise portugaise sur les « îles des Épices », passant d'un comptoir commercial à un autre, d'une bataille à la suivante. Il survit à de multiples blessures et il apprend ce qui lui sera fort utile pour la suite : rester en vie dans un environnement hostile.
De retour à Lisbonne, toujours aussi ambitieux, Magellan entame une nouvelle carrière militaire comme officier de cavalerie. Il s'engage dans la lutte menée par le Portugal pour dominer l'Afrique du Nord. En 1513, il trouve une occasion idéale de démontrer sa loyauté et son utilité quand l'autorité marocaine de la ville d'Azemmour refuse tout net de payer son tribut annuel au Portugal. Le gouverneur Moulay Zayam, de la dynastie des Wattassides, déploie autour de la ville une puissante armée. Le roi Manuel 1er, répond en dépêchant vers la cité la plus grande flotte navale ayant jamais navigué sous la bannière de son petit pays. Son neveu, le Duc de Bragança, commande une Armada de 500 navires de type Caravelle ayant à bord 2000 cavaliers, 13 000 fantassins et une importante artillerie. Le 29 août 1513, le corps expéditionnaire débarque à Mazagan, puis marche sur Azemmour pour l'assiéger et la soumettre. Le 2 septembre 1513, après d'intenses et nombreux combats, la cité tombe, les Portugais l'occupent, la fortifient et y installent une garnison. Magellan participe à la riposte aux escarmouches livrées par les Marocains qui sortent régulièrement du bled pour harceler les soldats chargés de défendre la ville. Il fait preuve d'un grand courage en s'engageant dans des luttes au corps à corps. Un coup de lance dans le genou gauche atteint l'articulation et sa jambe restera pour toujours à demi ankylosés.
Un témoin oculaire : ElHassane Ibn Mohamed El Wazzane connu sous le nom de Léon l'Africain a assisté à ce combat entre les troupes du Sultan Wattassi et les troupes portugaises d'Azemmour et Safi « Je me trouvais sur cette route, étant présent à ce combat …, mais je m'en tenais le plus loin qu'il m'était possible, pour ne pas courir de danger, contempler cet horrible spectacle, sur une jument fort légère et agile, car je me dirigeais vers Marrakech, pour aviser le gouverneur de cette cité, que mon seigneur le roi de Fès n'attendait que l'heure pour que son frère dût arriver à Doukkala, pour attaquer les portugais. »
C'était la première guerre entre une armée menée par les Beni Wattas et les conquérants portugais dans la province de Doukkala.
- Après l'occupation d'Azemmour, la chasse au butin humain à l'intérieur de Doukkala.
Suite à la conquête d'Azemmour au mois de Septembre 1513 et la soumission des villages voisins. Emmanuel fût offert par le Pape Léon X, au début de l'année 1514 , "le tiers et le sixième des revenus de toutes les églises et de tous les monastères de son royaume pour tout le temps qu'il ferait la guerre aux marocains'' . L'ordre de la guerre contre les Marocains fut donné ; Rui Barreto Capitaine de la place d'Azemmour voulait suivre une politique d'apprivoisement entretenue par le système d'otages, pour soumettre les habitants de l'intérieur de Doukkala . L'année 1514 passa pour lui et pour Joâo (Joam) de Meneses capitaine de la région avec des alternatives de succès et de revers. D'après les récits de Marmol et de De Goes, un jour du mois de février à l'aube l'armée portugaise d'Azemmour avait attaqué deux Cités situées au pied de Jbel Lakhdar, nommées Bencafis et Tafuf. Les portugais n'avaient laissé à leur retour à Azemmour avec 200 captifs (des enfants, des femmes et des vieillards) et un butin constitué essentiellement de bétail, deux places ruinées et incendiées. Plusieurs citoyens étaient tués par les armes, sous les décombres ou noyés en voulant traverser vers la rive droite de l'oued El Faregh en crue. Un tel acte contre des citoyens pacifiques que Marmol nomma « Guerre sainte » ne peut être désigné aujourd'hui que par le terme de « Terrorisme ».

Magellan avec Ses états de services au combat et ses blessures de guerre lui valent le respect et une promotion au rang de « maître de manœuvre ». Ce grade lui permet de partager les prises de guerre.
Il décide de récompenser certaines tribus alliées en leur donnant une partie des animaux pillés . Après cette transaction, Magellan est accusé d'avoir secrètement revendu 400 chèvres au Marocains et d'avoir gardé les bénéfices pour lui. L'accusation est en soi scandaleuse puisque en tant que maître de manœuvre, il a effectivement droit à sa part de butin. Refusant de se défendre sur place, il quitte Azemmour sans autorisation pour Lisbonne où il surgit devant le roi. Il ne présente aucune excuse pour sa conduite et exige en revanche une augmentation de sa maradia, une pension qu'il perçoit en tant que membre de la maison royale. Il rappelle au souverain qu'il est un noble ayant voué sa vie au service de la couronne, ce dont témoignent ses blessures. Le monarque est cinglant : Magellan sujet aussi insolent que stupide, doit immédiatement retourner à Azemmour, répondre des accusations de trahison, de corruption et de désertion. Après enquête sur les faits, le tribunal le lave de tout soupçon et il revient à Lisbonne muni d'une lettre de recommandation de son officier supérieur. Avec un entêtement hors norme, Magellan retourne voir son altesse et exige l'augmentation de sa moradia avec plus de véhémence que jamais. Bien évidemment le roi refuse.

Marabout

A marabout (Arabic: مُرابِط, romanized: murābiṭ, lit. 'one who is attached/garrisoned') is a Muslim religious leader and teacher[1] in West Africa, and (historically) in the Maghreb. The marabout is often a scholar of the Qur'an, or religious teacher. Others may be wandering holy men who survive on alms, Sufi Murshids ("Guides"), or leaders of religious communities.

Muslim religious teachers

Muslim religious brotherhoods (Tariqah in the Sufi tradition) are one of the main organizing forms of West African Islam, and with the spread of Sufi ideas into the area, the marabout's role combined with local practices throughout Senegambia, the Niger river valley, and the Futa Jallon. Here, Sufi believers follow a marabout, elsewhere known as a Murshid ("Guide"). Marabout was also adopted by French colonial officials, and applied to most any imam, Muslim teacher, or secular leader who appealed to Islamic tradition.

Today marabouts can be traveling holy men who survive on alms, religious teachers who take in young talibes at Qur'anic schools, or distinguished religious leaders and scholars, both in and out of the Sufi brotherhoods which dominate spiritual life in Senegambia.[2]

In the Muslim brotherhoods of Senegal, marabouts are organized in elaborate hierarchies; the highest marabout of the Mourides, for example, has been elevated to the status of a Caliph or ruler of the faithful (Amir al-Mu'minin). Older, North African based traditions such as the Tijaniyyah and the Qadiriyyah base their structures on respect for teachers and religious leaders who, south of the Sahara, often are called marabouts. Those who devote themselves to prayer or study, either based in communities, religious centers, or wandering in the larger society, are named marabouts. In Senegal and Mali, these Marabouts rely on donations to live. Often there is a traditional bond to support a specific marabout that has accumulated over generations within a family. Marabouts normally dress in traditional West African robes and live a simple, ascetic life.

Syncretic spiritualists

The spread in sub-Saharan Africa of the marabout's role from the 8th through 13th centuries created in some places a mixture of roles with pre-Islamic priests and divines. Thus many fortune tellers and self-styled spiritual guides take the name "marabout" (something rejected by more orthodox Muslims and Sufi brotherhoods alike). The recent diaspora of West Africans (to Paris in particular) has brought this tradition to Europe and North America, where some marabouts advertise their services as fortune tellers. An Exu of Quimbanda, Marabô, is believed to have carried this esoteric and shamanic role into Brazil. Contemporary marabouts in Senegal advertise on television and have hot lines.[3]

Political influence

Pre-French colonization

Marabouts have been prominent members of Wolof society since the arrival of Sufi brotherhoods from the Maghreb in the 15th century. Their advanced knowledge of the Quran and esteemed reputation have often allowed them to act as traders, priests, judges, or magicians in conjunction with their roles of community religious leaders.[5] Additionally, because of their ability to read and write, village chiefs would frequently appoint marabouts as secretaries or advisers as a means to communicate with neighboring rulers.[5]

The marabouts' expanding influence in politics paired with their unique allegiance of the Muslim community eventually posed a real threat to the chiefs who had appointed them. In 1683, rising tensions between chiefs and the Muslim population led to a Muslim revolt in the Wolof kingdom of Cayor, which concluded with the installation of a marabout as Damel..[5] In the years following the revolt, relations between marabouts and Wolof chiefs remained relatively calm until a period of militant Islam in the Wolof states in the middle of the 19th century. Militant marabouts primarily of Tukulor(l origin, called "warrior marabouts," completely rejected the authority of local chiefs and sought to install a theocratic Muslim state. As the authority of chiefs and royal armies were undermined by propaganda and military force used by the warrior marabouts, Muslim resistors turned to local marabouts for guidance and protection from their oppressors. After three decades of war and conflict, the warrior marabouts were gradually ousted from the Wolof states as French colonists began to take a tighter hold on the region. As confidence in the leadership abilities of chiefs and rulers declined as a result of the conflict, marabouts emerged as the most trusted and revered source of leadership in Wolof communities.[5]

Post-French colonization

French colonizers had difficulties adjusting to ruling over Muslim societies. Particularly in West Africa, constructing institutions of colonial rule that didn't favor certain constituencies while neglecting others proved to be a tricky task. The French opted for forms of indirect rule through the local aristocracy in an effort to maintain order and keep administrative costs down, but found that many subjects detested these colonial chiefs and rulers and tended to gravitate towards their local marabouts. Marabouts were admired for their transparency and righteousness as they were known to renounce political powers, while ensuring economic, social, and religious stability within their communities.[6] Since the judgment of marabouts is so influential, the success or failure of a politician would be almost entirely contingent on the support of more prominent marabouts. Because of this, politicians would try to appease marabouts by agreeing to promote their Sufi brotherhood's best interests in turn for their endorsement, with some politicians believing that winning an election would be impossible without the support of a marabout.[5] This political dynamic, based on patronage and exchanges, would lead to a somewhat of an alliance between marabouts and the French colonizers.[7] Along with endorsing certain politicians in exchange for favors, French colonial administrators sought out marabouts and heads of Sufi brotherhoods to act as intermediaries between colonial administrators and West African Muslims to ensure appropriate allocation of power and resources to avoid any potential conflict.[8]

Post-independence

After Senegal gained its independence from France in 1960, marabouts and leaders of Sufi Brotherhoods (also marabouts), or the Khalife-Général, have continued to play influential roles in Senegalese politics. Some have questioned the utility of having clientelist relationships between marabouts and government officials in a modern democracy.[9] The new "grandson" generation of marabouts has cultivated a more independent and secular political outlook and have proven that they are willing to question the authority of their predecessors. In Senegal's 1988 presidential election, Khalife-Général Abdou Lahatte Mbakke supported Abdou Diouf for reelection. Both as public endorsement and as a reward for installing new roads and street lamps in Touba while in office, the Khalife-Général declared a ndiggël (a binding command issued by the Khalife-Général to all members of the Mouride Brotherhood) that proclaimed that all men must vote for Diouf. Although multiple Khalife-Général have issued 'ndiggël politique' in support of a presidential candidate in previous elections, several marabouts of the "grandson" generation openly rejected the command by voting for the opposition instead.[10] These marabouts believed that the ndiggël violated their secular political rights, which was a sentiment shared among many other Mourides in Touba.[9]

In 1997, a rural council of Touba Mosquée in Senegal issued a set of new taxes meant to fund an ambitions development project in the holy city. City merchants promptly voiced their displeasure of the new taxes and threatened to kick the rural council, whose members were all appointed by the Mouride Khalife-Général, out of the city. Although tax revolts are not uncommon elsewhere, this incident was particularly noteworthy as the merchants' blatant refusal exhibited a departure from typical state-society relations in Senegal. Declining economic performance in Senegal may lead to more taxes in the future, which means political actors may have to adjust or fundamentally alter their clientelist relationships with marabouts and Khalife-Général.[9]

The Maghreb

The term Marabout appears during the Muslim conquest of North Africa. It is derived from the Arabic word "Mourabit" or "mrabet" (one who is garrisoned):[11] religious students and military volunteers who manned the Ribats at the time of the conquest.[12] Today marabout means "Saint" in the Berber language, and refers to Sufi Muslim teachers who head a lodge or school called a zaouïa, associated with a specific school or tradition, called a Tariqah (طريقه Ṭarīqah: "way", "path").

Marabout's tomb, southern Morocco

The pronunciation of that word varies according to the spoken Berber dialect. For example, it is pronounced "Amrabadh" in the Riff dialect. The "marabout" is known as "Sayyed" (سيد) to Arabic speaking Maghribians. Many cities in Morocco got their names from local marabouts, and the name of those cities usually begins with "Sidi" (سيدي) followed by the name of the local marabout. The standard Arabic for "saint" is "Waliy" (ولي).

A marabout may also refer to a tomb (Arabic: قُبّة [qubba]) of a venerated saint, and such places have become holy centers and places of pious reflection.

The roots of this tradition can be traced back to ancient times when the Berbers believed in the polytheistic religions. Herodotus mentioned the tradition too, when he has spoke of the Nasamones bringing animal sacrifices to the tombs of holy men.

Some Zawiyas linked with specific marabouts

Note that these are not places of formal pilgrimage (limited in Islam to religious pilgrimages of the Hadj and Jerusalem), but are rather places of reflection and inspiration for the pious.

These spiritualists range from conventional Islamic priests (Limam) who are versed in the Qu'ran and preside over services at local mosques, to local healers and diviners who mix Islam with indigenous beliefs and practices. Some marabouts practices resemble those of getba, with Islamic verses replacing cowries. Most marabouts receive gifts or money for their services, with the most respected and renowned marabouts drawing substantial income from their practice. However, these practices are generally disapproved by Islamic disorthodoxy."

See Muslim brotherhoods of Senegal. Cheikh Ahmadou Bamba was a mystic and religious leader who produced a prodigious quantity of poems and tracts on meditation, rituals, work, and Qur'anic study. Politically, Ahmadou Bamba led a pacifist struggle against French colonialism while not waging outright war on the French as several prominent Tijaan marabouts had done.

Масоны, второе солнце, потопы и куда девалась вода. См ролик
https://youtu.be/9_MLLIwmJpg
Экспедиция Ханса Нильзера:
17 января 1901. Невероятно! Этого просто не может быть! В греческом тексте я нашел ясные указания на то, что жрецы египетского бога Амона и первые иерархи нашей Святой Церкви принадлежали к одному и тому же тайному сообществу! Неужели таких людей Господь избрал для того, чтобы нести людям свет Своей истины? Нет, нет, я не хочу в это верить...
22 февраля 1901. По-моему, старший библиотекарь что-то заподозрил. По крайней мере, чувствую за собой слежку, поэтому прекратил работу с секретными фондами...

Поскольку жрецы Амона - это прямые предшественники современного масонства, я естественно с большим вниманием отнесся к содержанию папируса.

Согласно древнему тексту, первые жрецы Амона появились еще в IV тысячелетии до нашей эры. Именно они в значительной степени способствовали объединению страны и оказывали большое влияние на фараонов. В папирусе с большой гордостью рассказывается о том, как цари считали жрецов своей главной опорой, как они во всем следовали советам священнослужителей. А дальше я наткнулся на довольно интересный фрагмент, который имеет смысл процитировать здесь целиком.

Жрецы - носители знаний

В древнеегипетской цивилизации возник сложный аппарат государственной власти, тесно сращенный с сакральным аппаратом жрецов.

Знания существовали в религиозно мистической форме.

Жрецы накапливают знания в области математики, химии, медицины, фармакологии, психологии, они хорошо владеют гипнозом.

Древние египтяне занимались только теми математическими операциями, которые были необходимы для их непосредственных хозяйственных нужд, но никогда они не занимались созданием теорий - одним из важнейших признаков научного знания.

Также считалось, что фараоны появляются от брака царицы, жены фараона с каким-либо божеством. Родство в династии фараонов велось по материнской линии. Правили не только мужчины-фараоны. В истории известна царица Хатшепсут. В всех египетских храмах живого фараона воспевали, как бога, молились за его здравие и благополучие. С молитвами к богам обращался и сам фараон. В представлении самих египтян фараон представлялся как богочеловек. Считалось, что между Согласно нему боги даровали фараону долголетие, личное благополучие и процветание государства, а фараон со своей стороны обеспечивал богам соблюдение культа, строительство храмов и тому подобное. Единственный из смертных он имел доступ к богам. Иногда фараон лично участвовал в начале земледельческих работ, что носило священный характер. Он бросил в Нил свиток с приказом начать разлив, он начинает подготовку почвы для посева, первым срезает первый сноп на празднике жатвы и возносит благодарственную жертву богине урожая Ренену т. В Египте постоянно велась борьба за престол Верхнего и Нижнего Египта. Важную роль в ней играли жрецы. Иногда они основывали новую династию фараонов. Часто фараоны были марионетками в руках верховного жреца. Борьба шла почти без перерыва. При ослаблении государства сразу подымали голову сепаратистские настроения в различных областях Египта.

Статуя Рамзеса II богами и фараонами существовал нерушимый договор.

Золотая маска Тутанхамона

Экспедиция Ханса Нильзера

Хансе Нильзер, загадочный исследователель из Германии. Именно его публикация в «Аугсбургском христианском ежемесячнике, натолкнула на мысль о ведущей роли апостола Павла в со здании христианской религии. Если рассказывать кратко (кто хочет подробностей, пусть читает «Ключ Соломона»), то родился Нильзер в 1849 году многодетной бюргерской семье и был ревностным католиком. С детства родители готовили его к принятию сана, да и сам мальчик питал большую любовь к религии. Ему несказанно повезло: епископ заметил его способности и отправил способного юношу к папскому двору. Поскольку Ханс блистал талантами, в первую очередь в области истории Церкви, его направили в архивы Ватикана. Не сразу и не вдруг, но Нильзер получил доступ в святая святых папского престола.

Как известно, в Риме существует несколько чело век, допущенных к самым сокровенным тайнам Ва тиканских библиотек. Даже папа порой не знает, какие сокровища хранятся там, абсолютный контроль над библиотекой и входящими в ее состав архивами.

На просторах русского интернета появилась статья под названием «Дневники Ханса Нильзера или что скрывает Ватикан»? В ней пишеться о том, что некий ревностный католик из Германии из многодетной бюргерской семьи по имени Ханс Нильзер работал в библиотеке Ватикана и после этого оставил свой дневник, в котором очень подробно описал всё, с чем ему там удалось соприкоснуться и увидеть. Ниже приводиться дневник Ханса Нильзера по годам с датами.

Souleymane Diawara

Le Ghana était un royaume d’Afrique qui a existé du 6ème au 13ème siècle de notre ère. Il se situe au sud du désert du Sahara et au nord-ouest du fleuve Niger, en Mauritanie et au Mali.

Grâce à l’introduction du chameau dans le Sahara , à sa disponibilité et à son utilisation croissantes à l’époque romaine, au cours des premiers siècles de notre ère, des routes commerciales transsahariennes (nord-sud) devinrent possibles, permettant aux sociétés africaines du Sahel d’accéder aux marchés de la Mer Méditerranée: à mesure que ces routes devenaient plus rentables, des villes telles que Djenné et Gao ont vu le jour et, avec le temps, des États territoriaux plus complexes et plus puissants, dont le Ghana, ont été les premiers.

Les personnes qui ont formé le royaume du Ghana étaient les Soninkés, un sous-groupe de la famille mandé. Ils ont appelé leur royaume Wagadu, mais nous l'appelons aujourd'hui ,Ghana, le nom que les Arabes lui ont donné. L'âge d'or du royaume a commencé vers l'an 800 et a duré près de trois siècles. La capitale du Ghana a changé plusieurs fois mais la dernière et la plus célèbre d'entre elles est Kumbi (ou Koumbi Saleh), une ville fondée au IVe siècle de notre ère. Elle devint la plus grande ville au sud du Sahara avec environ 15 000 habitants à son apogée.

Les activités commerciales qui constituaient l'épine dorsale de l'économie du Ghana étaient la vente d'or, de noix de cola (le dernier «ingrédient secret» du Coca-Cola) et d'ivoire aux villes de la Méditerranée, en échange de sel. Les Soninkés étaient des intermédiaires, car ils ne contrôlaient pas les sources de la plupart de ces produits, venus du sud, tandis que le transport proprement dit des marchandises au nord était assuré par des Berbères nomades chevauchant des chameaux.

LE SONINKE APPELAIT LEUR ROYAUME WAGADU, MAIS NOUS LE CONNAISONS EN TANT QUE GHANA, LE NOM QUE LES ARABES LUI DONNENT.

La prospérité du Ghana repose en grande partie sur les caravanes berbères, qui sont organisées indépendamment par des chefs et des marchands berbères: elles constituent le seul lien avec le monde extérieur.

Cependant, à mesure que le Ghana s'enrichissait et élargissait sa base territoriale, les tensions avec diverses tribus de marchands berbères s'intensifiaient également. Les Berbères voyaient d'un muvais oeil le pouvoir croissant des villes commerçantes, dominées par les Soninkés. Avec la conquête par le Ghana de l'importante ville-État d'Audaghost (Mauritanie actuelle), les relations sont devenues beaucoup plus hostiles. À l'aube du XIe siècle, les Berbères, qui étaient les maîtres du commerce d'Audaghost, ont tenté à plusieurs reprises de libérer la ville du contrôle du Ghana.

Vers le milieu du XIe siècle, la dynastie des Almoravides du Maroc (1040-1147) a commencé à attirer un grand nombre de Berbères, offrant ainsi une forme d'organisation et une unité plus solides aux clans berbères, par ailleurs en conflit. Les Almoravides sont devenus assez puissants pour lancer des campagnes de conquête à l'étranger. Au nord, ils envahirent l'Espagne (Al-Andalus) en battant le califat de Cordoue (r. 929-1031 de notre ère). Au sud, les Almoravides firent des ravages au Ghana, conquérant même la capitale, Kumbi, en 1076 de notre ère. Bien que le Ghana ait finalement réussi à expulser les envahisseurs, les dégâts étaient énormes. Les réseaux de commerce du Ghana ont été perturbés (Audaghost a rapidement perdu toute importance, par exemple), mais l'introduction des troupeaux de pâturages berbères sur ce qui était autrefois des terres agricoles a été à l'origine d'un terrible processus de désertification.

Le Ghana ne retrouvera pas son ancienne gloire et les décennies suivantes verront un déclin supplémentaire à mesure que les peuples sujets se libéreront du contrôle du royaume. En 1203 de notre ère, Kumbi a été prise par l'un de leurs anciens peuples sujets: les Susu. En 1240, le royaume s'effondra lorsque Kumbi fut à nouveau dévasté et le cœur du Ghana fut annexé par l'empire naissant du Mali (vers 1230-1600).

Pour ce passage, "Les personnes qui ont formé le royaume du Ghana étaient les Soninkés, un sous-groupe de la famille mandé." Il faut savoir que le Mandé est plus ressens que le Ghana. Les Sonikés viennent de l'Égypte, précisément de Assouane (assouankaou transformer en soniké).

Je ne suis pas historien et ne connais pas le passé de l'Afrique. Mais en lisant les nombreux commentaires qui se contredisent (je ne parle même pas des insultes de la part de ceux qui sont convaincus d'être plus intelligents que les autres), j'en viens à poser une question toute bête : L'Histoire de l'Afrique est-elle écrite ? Si oui, il n'y a pas à tergiverser. Si non, pourquoi les historiens africains (je parle des universitaires érudits et non des experts Facebook) ne l'ont-ils pas encore écrite? Manque de documents écrits?
Quelqu'un parle de la grandeur de l'Afrique à un moment où l'Europe était plongée dans la barbarie (de quelle période s'agit-il ?): même les périodes les plus sombres de notre Histoire sont précieusement documentées.
Les légendes et croyances n'ont aucune valeur d'Histoire (chez nous il y en a plein également que les historiens démontent facilement: Jeanne d'Arc, par exemple, ou le Bon Roi Henri IV ou encore la prospérité sous Louis XIV...
Si cette Histoire africaine n'est pas établie, qu'enseigne-on à l'école? Je pense aux énormes conneries commises par les premiers colons qui appliquaient le programme français, anglais ou allemand (nos ancêtres les Gaulois !! -- d'où les Christs en beaux blonds aux cheveux bouclés et aux Vierges blondes évanescentes.)

Dans mes discussions avec des amis sénégalais, je vous que leurs connaissances de leur Histoire sont totalement biaisées et faussées. Par exemple le rôle joué par les Arabes et les chefs de villages dans les razzias de " récolte" d'esclaves contre de l'or ou des armes est totalement occulté.
L'Histoire ne s'écrit pas avec du ressenti, de la haine ou des croyances , elle se base sur des faits avérés, réels et connus . 2

السحر في مصر القديمه

عرفت مصر القديمه منذ أقدم العصور بالسحر والذي كان يسمي باللغه المصريه "حكا" ، وقد لعب السحر دوراً بارزاً عند كافه فئات الشعب من العامه إلي الملوك المصريين ، كما أرتبطت العقيده الدينيه ارتباطاً وثيقاً بالسحر كأستناد بعض الكتب الدينية في أفكارها على السحر في بعض الأفكار والنصوص، ووجود بعض الأرباب الذين ترتبط قدراتهم بالسحر كإلالهه الشهيره أيزيس وأختها نفتيس واللتان لقبتا بلقب
"ورتي حكاو" أي عظيمتان السحر وكانتا تلعبان دوراً كبيراً وهاما في الأساطير السحريه وخاصة أيزيس ، كما أرتبط الإله حورس أبن أيزيس بالسحر كوجود لوحات شهيره سحريه لإبعاد السحر وطرد الارواح الشريره تسمي لوحات «حور شد» ... بالسحر ، وكان بجانب أيزيس ونفتيس الآلهتان "سركت" و "نيث" وكان الأربعه يرسمون على الجوانب الأربعة للتوابيت والمقبره بهدف حمايه المتوفي من الأرواح الشريره ، كما أرتبطت الإلهه "سخمت" التي تمثل على هيئه اللبؤه والتي كان يخاف منها الناس والكهنة ويصلون ويرتلون التعاويذ من أجل رد شرها وتحويلها للصوره الطيبه "باستت"

كما أشاد الإغريق بسحر مصر وخاصة "أفلاطون" الفيسلوف الشهير وقد أشاد بقدره المصريين على السحر وقد أنبهر بهم انبهارًا

شديداً وقال إن سحر المصريين يعتمد على التعاويذ والتعازيم أي إلقاء كلمات مبهمه لها قدرات خارقه للشفاء مثلاً او دفع الخطر ،وقال أيضاً إن هذه الكلمات سريه ولا يعرفها إلا طبقه خاصه وهم كبار السحره والذيين كانوا يأخذون وظائف في الكهنوت وكان الكاهن الموكل بمثل هذه المهام هو الكاهن المرتل والذي كان يسمي باللغه المصريه "غري حبت"

فكان مسئول عن إلقاء التعاويذ وصنع التمائم الحاميه ومسئولا أيضاً عن عمليات طرد الأرواح الشريره التي كانت تتلبس أو تمس المريض ومن ضمن الطقوس التي كانت تجرى أثناء عمليه طرد الأرواح الشريره مثل عمليات طرد أرواح المتوفيين الأشرار والتي كانت تعد النوع الاقوى والأخطر من الأرواح الشريره ، ومن طقوس السحر وطرد الأرواح تذكر النقوش أن كانت تطهي نوعاً معيناً من أنواع السمك وكان يملى فمها بنوعا من أنواع البخور وكانت تؤكل قبل النوم من قبل الشخص الذي تتلبسه تلك الأرواح لرد شرها ، وكان أيضاً يلف ويعقد عقد للأتقاء من شرهم ويعلق العقد حول عنق الشخص لحمايته من تلك الأرواح الملعونه وكان يكتب مثلا على العقد تهديداً لتلك الروح يقول

" إذا لم تسحب سمومك منه فسوف ابعدك عن الموتى السعداء"

كما ذكر في كتاب البوابات بعض المرده الذيين يجلسون على بوبات عددها ١٢ بوابه تمثل ١٢ ساعه من ساعات الليل وكان يركب رب الشمس على مركبه لمرور تلك البوبات ومرور ساعات الليل والشروق من جديد ويصاحبه إلهين للسحر يساميان "سيا" و "حكا"

ثم علمه لاتباعه واعوانه وكهنته . ولكنه اختص لنفسه باشياء لم يفصح عنها لهم . ليكون له الغلبه دائما . حتى انزل الله ملكين يعلمون الناس السحر (هاروت . ماروت) ولكنهم كانوا ياخذون العهد على من يعلمونه أن يستخدم السحر ليقى نفسه من شر سحر اتباع النمرود ولا يستخدمه فى الشر . وقد وصل النمرود فى احتراف السحر حتى انه كان يفتح الممالك ويحارب الجيوش وهو جالس على عرشه فكان يأمر الجبال والانهار والسحاب ويسخرهم فى خدمته بأمر الله . لذلك فهو أول بشرى يعبده بنى البشر . وهو أول بنى ادم واول ملك لبس التيجان الذهبيه حين رأى ابليس اللعين يلبسه فكان يتشبه باستاذه . النمرود حينما القى ابراهيم النبى فى النار وخرج منها سالما تنمرد على استاذه (اللعين) وقال له أن ابراهيم جاء بسحر اقوى من سحره لذلك لقب بالنمرود . وكما نعرف جميعا نهايته كانت ببعوضه .
اى كلام عن حضارات ومخطوطات ومومياوات قبل هذا التاريخ نوع من الخزعبلات . فالارض قبل ١٠ الاف عام او يزيد قليلا او يقل قليلا لم يكن عليها بشر . ومن يقول أن هناك بشر قبل ادم فهو مخرف . (اصحاب نظريه التطور) اركنو فى جنب فانا لا اجادل من يظن أن الإنسان بدأ كحيوان مشعر يمشى على اربعه .

وبقى الفرق من منظور الدين هو ان الظاهرة السحرية هي من انجاز شيطاني عكس المعجزة التي هي انجاز رباني ولاحتواء الظاهرة السحرية من طرف الدين يقدم تفسيرا لها بكون الانجازات السحرية هي لها أصل سماوي راجع إلى كون الشياطين يسرقون بعض العبارات من افواه الملائكة حينما تكون مجتمعة في الجنة تتبادل اطراف الحديث هذه الكلمات تسرقها الشياطين وتمد بها الكهنة وهؤلاء يوظفونها في طقوسهم كتعازيم للتحكم في الشياطين لقضاء اغراضهم(واتبعوا ما تتلوا الشياطين على ملك سليمان...) اما من الناحية التاريخية فقد تبين مع انتروبولوجيا الاديان وتاريخ الاديان ان الممارسة السحرية هي مرتبطة بطبيعة وعي البداءي بذاته هذا الوعي الذي بدأ وعيا احياءيا. انيميا يسقط الحياة على اشياء الطبيعة وظواهرها. لكون البداءي يعتقد ان كل شيء له روح وبالتالي يمكن اتقاء شر هذه الروح او التودد لها بتقديم ما تشتهيه من ناكل وبخور وطقوس فيها محاكاة. وبحكم

معنى ماكارطو : هو اسم لمركز جماعة ماكارطو الموجود بدائرة ابن أحمد إقليم السطات

هؤلاء السينغاليون كانوا منظمين من طرف فرنسا منذ سنة 1831 في إطار مجموعات مستقلة و كانوا مرفوقين بزوجاتهم ، وسبق لفرنسا أن استخدمتهم في السودان وجنوب إفريقيا.

وبالمناسبة الجيش الفرنسي الذي دخل المغرب أو الشاوية أو مگارطو كان مشكلا من مرتزقة من عدة بلدان بمن فيهم الجزائريين والتونسيين ، وفيهم حتى إخواننا من المغاربة المجندين الذين كانوا متعاونين في إطار الجندية النظامية للفيلق الأجنبي مع الفرنسيين و كانوا يحملون اسم " Les gommiers " و هي مشتقة من كلمة قوم العربية ، و قد شاركوا في مختلف الحروب مع فرنسا ، وكما هو معروف شاركوا في الحرب العالمية الثانية ومن بعد الاستقلال أدمجوا في الجيش

Stories of Mushrooms is feeling surprised.
20 September at 08:14 ·

One of the most famous fungi in the world is the “zombie ant fungus”. It takes over the mind of an ant, causing it to climb up a branch and cling to the underside of a leaf before mummification. Once locked in place, the mushroom-like fruiting body of the cordyceps sprouts from the ant and eventually releases its spores.

For those saying this is t cordyceps :

Cordyceps is a genus of ascomycete fungi that includes about 600 species. Most Cordyceps species are endoparasitoids, parasitic mainly on insects and other arthropods;
There is a variety of them and a variety of insects they feed on

Thank you for sharing! #indigenous #firstworld #Asian

...all the areas of Myanma (Burma)-Vietnam, Cambodia, Laos, Malaysia, Singapour, Thailand, Indonesia, China, Japan and Korea were inhabited first by Blacks. While many of these Black tribes still visually exist mainly in Southeast Asia. Many became partly absorbed by the Mongolian element that we see in contemporary times.

There is so much we do not know about the role Black indigenous inhabitants played in building the powerful dynasties of Asia that were stolen by the 'yellow' tribes of today. The book 'Paekche's Principle - The Secret of Asia' by Bayemy Biyick tackles this history and the relationship between these black and yellow tribes of Asia head on. Check it out at:

Whether it's ai or not. If you research enough you will see that all people came from deeply melanated people. They were and still are all over the world. Go to Asia, Africa, Europe, Australia, the Americas you will see the original people who are still there but have been pushed aside and forgotten or hidden. This has been done purposely. They call us minorities but when you look all over the world you see us everywhere. We the descendants of the original people. Whether people want to know it or not. I've done my research so I'm aware of the deception. Even my grandmother always told me we are indigenous to America. Yet I was so brainwashed I still started my research in Africa and was led right back to the Americas. My point is melanated peoples have been all over and still are. I want to point out we been here in the Americas too. Research that slave trade story more indepth. They telling it reverse. They need to tell the truth about how whites especially Irish and Scottish were enslaved by the British and forced to work in the colonies in America when they came to conquer America.

C’est dans un contexte politiquement et économiquement difficile, qu’une nouvelle dynastie apparaît au Maroc, celle des Beni Wattas, Berbères du groupe Zénète proche des Beni Merine. cette tribu était établie dans le Rif, au bord de la Méditerranée. De leur forteresse de Tazouta, entre Melilla et la Moulouya, les Beni Wattas ont peu à peu étendu leur puissance aux dépens de la famille régnante mérinide.
les Mérinides ont recruté de nombreux vizirs chez les Wattassides. Les vizirs wattassides s'imposent peu à peu au pouvoir. Le dernier sultan mérinide est détrôné en 1465. Il s'ensuit une période de confusion qui dure jusqu'en 1472. Le Maroc se trouve coupé en deux avec, au sud, une dynastie émergente, les Saadiens, et au nord un sultanat wattasside déclinant.
Ils ne s’installent pas au pouvoir à la suite de conquêtes, étant à la base régents exerçant la réalité du pouvoir. Mais à partir de 1471, Mohammed al-Cheikh (1471-1504), ayant échappé au massacre des Wattassides par le dernier sultan mérinide Abdelhak (1458-1465), devient le premier sultan de la dynastie des Wattassides. Elle fut impuissante à enrayer la décadence marocaine, à rétablir la paix et l’unité et à mettre un terme à la conquête portugaise.
Mohammed al-Cheikh, premier souverain wattasside innove : pouvoir, sa garde et son armée sont tous arabes. Malgré une tentative d’imposer des réformes nécessaires, une politique matrimoniale habile et tous leurs efforts pour s’attirer la sympathie des tribus arabes et des chorfas, les Wattassides ne parviennent pas à obtenir leur adhésion. Marqués par leurs origines et leur parenté Mérinide et Zénète, il leur manque l’indispensable prestige religieux. Les Wattassides lient leur échec à maîtriser la féodalité et à rassembler les terres éparpillées du royaume à cette absence de prestige religieux. Aussi, au lieu de lutter contre les Portugais, ils développent la guerre civile. Inquiets des progrès des chorfas Saadiens dans le Sud, ils cherchent un appui chez les Turcs. La chute de Grenade, événement extérieur que les Wattassides sont incapables d’empêcher, augmente leur impopularité.
Un des facteurs déterminants de cette incapacité venait du fait que le Détroit était aux mains des Portugais qui occupaient les trois principaux ports de la côte marocaine, à savoir Ceuta (prise en 1415), Tanger (prise en 1471) et El-Ksar al-Seghir (prise en 1458). Après la victoire de Grenade en 1492 par les troupes des « Rois Catholiques », Ferdinand d’Aragon et Isabelle de Castille, les Andalous sont expulsés de la péninsule ibérique. Ils s'installent à Tétouan, Fès ou Salé. Mais le malaise s'étend. En effet, les Andalous ont conscience d’être mal accueillis, de ne pas être choisis pour participer au pouvoir wattasside. Ils vont néanmoins contribuer par leur présence et leur ingéniosité à redonner une certaine vigueur à l’art marocain, en particulier dans le domaine de l’hydraulique.

Sous le règne de Mohammed al-Cheikh, le Maroc souffre d’un démembrement et de la dissociation territoriale. Au Nord, des régions toutes entières entrées en dissidence refusent l’autorité du sultan Wattasside alors qu’au Sud, la région de Marrakech se rend indépendante. Au même moment, les Portugais s’implantent de plus en plus largement sur le littoral atlantique.
Les règnes des quatre autres sultans wattassides - Mohammed al-Bortougali « le Portugais » (1505-1524), Ahmed al Wattassi (1524-1548 ; puis 1548-1550), An Nasir al-Qasri (1548) et Bou Hassoun (1554) - furent une succession d’échecs aussi bien face aux Portugais qu’ils combattaient par instants ou avec lesquels ils concluaient de longues trêves que face au démembrement du Maroc. Au Nord, les émirs de Tétouan et de Chechaouen deviennent quasiment indépendants du Sultan. De plus, étant en première ligne face aux Portugais, ils deviennent chefs de guerre sainte, défenseurs de l’Islam.
Au Sud, la montée en puissance de la famille Saadienne, maîtresse de Marrakech depuis 1522, représente une véritable menace pour le pouvoir Wattasside. Les Saadiens reconnus comme "chorfas" jouissaient d'un immense prestige surtout depuis que l'un des leurs, Abou Abdallah, avait, dans le Souss, pris la tête de la résistance contre les Portugais. Ils réussirent à arracher Agadir aux Chrétiens en 1541 et les forcèrent à évacuer Safi et Azemmour qu'ils avaient prises en 1481 et 1486. Ils apparaissent comme les champions de l’Islam alors que les Wattassides avaient conclu une courte trêve avec les Portugais afin de pouvoir combattre sur un seul front, celui du Sud, celui des Saadiens. Lutte qui se solda par la chute des Wattassides et la victoire des Saadiens.

مقدمة
يتطلب العمل الجهادي المنظم دقة ونظام وسرية في إصدار الأوامر الخاصة وتعاملات الأفراد لإجراء العمليات العسكرية الناجحة ضد أفراد العدو ومن أجل ذلك رأينا أن نقدم هذا الجهد المتواضع (دورة الأحبار السرية) من أجل رفع راية لا اله إلا الله محمد رسول الله، ونسأل الله العظيم رب العرش العظيم القبول والتوفيق وحسن الخاتمة.

تعريف الحبر السري وأقسامه

الحبر السري هو أي مادة تصلح للكتابة بدون لون أو رائحة عند جفافها ويمكن إعادتها للظهور بشكلها الواضح بطريقة معينة ويمكن تقسيم أنواع الأحبار التي سوف ترد في هذا البحث إلى عدة أنواع:
1-أحبار الامونيا: وهي الأحبار التي أما تحتوى على امونيا أو الامونيا هي التي تظهرها.
2-أحبار التفاعلات الكيمائية: وهي الأحبار التي تظهر الكتابة عند تفاعلها مع مادة أخرى تستعمل ككاشف.
3- الأحبار السرية الجلدية: وهي الأحبار التي يمكن كتابتها وكشفها على الجلد.
4-أحبار الأشعة فوق البنفسجية :وهي الأحبار التي يمكن كشفها عند تعرضها للأشعة فوق البنفسجية.
5-الأحبار الحساسة للحرارة: وهي الأحبار التي تظهر عند تعرضها لدرجات حرارة مختلفة.
6- الأحبار المائية: وهي الأحبار التي تظهر عند غمرها في الماء.
7-الأحبار البخارية: وهي الأحبار التي تظهر عند تعرضها لأبخرة المواد الأخرى.
8-الأحبار المتلاشية: وهي الأحبار التي تختفي بعد مرور زمن معين.
9-الأحبار السامة : وهي الأحبار التي يمكن استخدامها في عملية القتل.
10-الأحبار الحرارية الحارقة: وهي الأحبار التي يمكن استخدامها في عملية الحرق.
11-أحبار الألعاب السحرية: وهي الأحبار التي يمكن استخدامها في بعض الحيل والألعاب المسلية.

الأدوات المستخدمة في الكتابة

1- الورق:
أ- يجب أن يكون من النوع الماص الأملس.
ب-ان لا يكون من النوع الذي يفشي عليه الحبر.

2-وسيلة الكتابة: قلم حبر فارغ ونظيف، ريشة، قلم ذو رأس كروي، قطعة خشبية مدببة.

- هذا ويمكن الكتابة على الحرير والقماش الأبيض أو الأسود وعلى الملابس من الداخل وبطانة الجاكيت.
- ويتم حفظ مواد الكتابة في أوعية طبيعية (مواد تجميل، مواد طبية، داخل كبسولات الدواء وغيره).
- وتتم الكتابة بين الأسطر العادية وعلى الهامش وفي الفراغ أعلى الصفحة وأسفلها وعلى الظرف من الداخل وفي الصحف والمجلات في صفحات وأماكن معينة متفق عليها.

بعض الطرق العامة لكشف الحبر السري

1. استعمال أبخرة اليود.
2. التعريض للحرارة بالكي (عن طريق المكواه).

استعمال محاليل كيميائية: عن طريق ربط عدة فراشي عرضي ويتم غمسها في محاليل كيميائية مختلفة وتمرر بشكل قطري على الرسالة لإظهار أي رد فعل كيميائي في المكتوب ولنبدأ الآن في توضيح أقسام الأحبار السرية المختلفة.

أحبار الامونيا

غاز الامونيا غاز عديم اللون له رائحة نفاذة رمزه (NH_3) وهو يذوب في الماء ليكون هيدروكسيد الامونيا (NH_4OH) ودرجة ذوبان هذا الغاز في الماء عالية جدا. وللعلم فان محلول الامونيا في متناول الأيدي وفي الأسواق حيث تستعمل في صباغة الشعر وفي تنظيف زجاج السيارات وغيرها من الاستخدامات والأحبار السرية في هذا الباب أما ان تحتوى على الامونيا أو الامونيا هي التي تظهرها.

1-الحبر السري الأزرق

ملاحظات:

1. هذا الحبر متوسط الفاعلية لأنه لا يظهر بوضوح ويختفي بسرعة وإذا أردت ان تظهره على الـدوام امسـحة بقطنـة مبللـة بمحلـول كربونات الصوديوم 16%.
2. الأفضل ان تكتب بنترات الكوبلت وتظهر الكتابة عندما تمسحها بقطن مبللة بالامونيا مرة واحدة وفي اتجاه واحد تظهر الكتابة في هذه الحالة بلون برتقالي.

2- الحبر السري الصيني الأحمر*:*

يتكون من جزء (وزن) من كل من فنيول فيثالين والجلسرين والكحول الاثيلي ورابع كلوريد الكربون وعندما يجف سوف يختفى، وعنـد مسحة بقطنة مبللة بمحلول الامونيا يظهر بلون أحمر قاتم ولإظهاره على الدوام (وهذه قاعدة عامـة بالنسـبة لأحبـار الامونيـا) يمسـح بواسطة قطنة مبللة بمحلول كربونات الصوديوم.

- ملاحظة: هذا الحبر يعتبر من الأحبار الممتازة في أحبار الامونيا حيث أنه عند كتابته لا يظهر وعند كشفه يكون واضح لكن يجب غلق زجاجته المحفوظ فيها جيدا حيث أنه يتطاير.

3- الحبر السري التركي الأسود

ملاحظات:

1. يعد هذا الحبر ايضا من الأحبار الجيدة ويمكن إظهاره بلون أزرق ولا يختفي بواسطة محلول من حديد و سـيانيد البوتاسـيوم (2جـم في 25مل من الماء وهذا قاعدة عامة في هذا البحث عند ذكر كلمة محلول).
2. يمكن الكتابة بواسطة محلول كربونات الصوديوم 16% وتظهر بالحبر التركي بلون مائل الى البرتقالي ولا يختفى والعكس أفضـل بلون مائل الى الأسود الفاتح.

4- الحبر السري الأحمر الدموي (الألماني)

يتركب هذا الحبر بإذابة 350 مل من الأستون في 640 مل من المـاء المقطـر زائـد 4 جـم مـن هيدروكسـيد الصـوديوم + 4 جـم مـن الفنيول فيثالين وعند الجفاف يختفى الحبر ويظهر بلون أحمر دموي عند معاملته بالامونيا.

ملاحظات:

1- بعد الكتابة بهذا الحبر تظهر بعض الحروف ولا تختفي عند ذلك أمسحه بقطنة مبللة بالامونيا فسوف يظهر بوضوح ثم يختفي تمامـا عند الجفاف.
2- يمكن الكتابة بمحلول كربونات الصوديوم ونمسح بالحبر فيظهر أيضا ولا يختفى.
3- عموما فان هذا الحبر يعد من الأحبار الممتازة للأمونيا .

5- الحبر السري الإسرائيلي الأزرق الفاتح رقم (1):

يتكون هذا الحبر من إذابة 8 جرام من كبريتات النحاس في 472 مل من الماء المقطر مـع وضـع قليـل مـن الصـمغ أو السـكر ليجعـل الحبر له قوام وعندما يجف الحبر يختفى، وعند معاملته مع محلول الامونيا يظهر بلون ازرق فاتح.

ملاحظات:

1. لابد أن يجف الحبر (وهذه قاعدة عامة) قبل أن يعامل مع الامونيا.
2. يمكن إظهار الحبر بوضوح عند تعرضه لغاز الامونيا من أسفل الورثة تحت الكتابة.

6- الحبر السري الإسرائيلي الأزرق الفاتح رقم (2):

يتكون من إذابة 124 جم كبريتات النحاس في لتر من الماء المقطر المضاف اليه 8 نقطة من حامض الكبريتيـك (أو حـامض) المركـز وعندما يجف الحبر يختفى ويمكن إظهاره عند معاملته مع الامونيا بلون ازرق فاتح ثم يختفى عند الجفاف.

ملاحظات:

1- عند تعريض الورقة من أسفل لغاز الامونيا تحت الكتابة يظهر الحبر بشكل واضح ولا يختفـي بسـرعة ويعـد هـذا الحـبر مـن الأحبـار الجيدة للأمونيا.
2- عند الكتابة بمحلول من حديدوسيانيد البوتاسيوم ثم نظهـر الكتابـة بـالحبر الإسـرائيلي تظهـر الكتابـة بلـون بنـي واضـح ويبقـى ولا يختفى.

7- الحبر السري الأخضر الغامق*:*

لعمل هذا الحبر نذيب 73 جم من نترات الكوبالت في 4 لتر من الماء المقطر وكاشف هذا الحبر سـيكون محلـول مركـز مـن الامونيـا وستظهر الكتابة باللون الأخضر الغامق.

ملاحظة: يمكن تعريض الورقة من أسفل لغاز الامونيا فتظهر الكتابة بشكل واضح.

أحبار التفاعلات الكيميائية

*1-*الحبر السري الأزرق رقم (1):

يتكون هذا الحبر من 53 جم من حديدوسيانيد البوتاسيوم مذابة في لتر من الماء المقطر وكاشفة يكون محلـول مـن كبريتـات الحديـد المخفف بواسطة قطنة مبلله به وبعد الجفاف تظهر الكتابة باللون الأزرق والعكس صحيح.

ملاحظات:

1. اذا الحبر من الأحبار الجيدة حيث لا يظهر حديدوسيانيد البوتاسيوم بالامونيا أو بالحرارة العادية.
2. يمكن تحضير محلول كبريتات الحديد المخفف بإذابة 50 جم منها في لتر من الماء المقطر.

2- الحبر السري الأزرق رقم (2):

يكتب بمحلول كبريتات الحديد (3 جم لكل 50 مل ماء) زائد قطرتين من حامض الكبريتيك المركز وكاشفة يكون محلول حديدوسيانيد البوتاسيوم.
ملاحظات:
1. يمكن استخدام الحبر التركي بدلا من هذا الحبر حيث أنه له نفس التركيب.
2. يمكن إجراء التجربة بالعكس وهو الأفضل.

3- الحبر السري البني رقم (1):

يتكون هذا الحبر من محلول كبريتات النحاس (8 جم لكل 50 مل ماء) وكاشفة محلول حديدوسيانيد البوتاسيوم (3 جم لكل 25مل ماء).
ملاحظة:
يمكن إجراء التجربة بالعكس ويظهر بنفس اللون ولكن أخف.

4-الحبر السري البني رقم (2):

عبارة عن محلول من 62 جم من كبريتات النحاس في لتر من الماء المقطر وكاشفة 53 جم من حديدوسيانيد البوتاسيوم مذابة في لتر من الماء المقطر والعكس صحيح.

5-الحبر السري الأخضر:

يكتب بمحلول كبريتات النحاس 6.2 جم لكل 100 مل ماء مقطر وكاشفة محلول كربونات الصوديوم 15.9% والعكس صحيح بلون أخضر مزرق وهو الأفضل لكن يجب الانتظار حتى الجفاف .
ملاحظة: هذا الحبر يعتبر من الأحبار الشعبية لأن مواده متوفرة في كل مكان.

6- الحبر السري الأخضر الفاتح (اليمني):

يتكون هذا الحبر من 73 جم من نترات الكوبالت مذابة في لتر من الماء المقطر وكاشفة محلول مكون من 53 جم من حديدوسيانيد البوتاسيوم في لتر من الماء والعكس أفضل.
ملاحظة: عند المسح بالقطنة تمسح مسحة خفيفة.

7-الحبر السري الأحمر الغامق رقم (1)

يتكون هذا الحبر من 68 جم من كلوريد الزئبق في لتر من الماء وبعد جفاف الكتابة تختفي وتظهر بعد معاملتها بمحلول مكون من 83 جم من يوديد البوتاسيوم المذابة في لتر من الماء والعكس صحيح بلون برتقالي وهو الأفضل.
- 0 ملاحظة: عند مسح الكتابة مرة واحدة يظهر الحبر وعند مسحه مرة ثانية بيوديد البوتاسيوم يعطى لون أحمر حول الكتابة التي تختفي ويمكن أن تظهرها مرة أخرى بالمسح بقطنة مبللة بمحلول كلوريد الزئبق بلون أحمر.

8- الحبر السري الأحمر الغامق رقم (2):

يكتب بمحلول كلوريد النحاس (8 جم لكل 100 مل ماء) وكاشفة محلول حديدوسيانيد البوتاسيوم 03 جم لكل 50 مل ماء) والعكس صحيح ويظهر بلون أحمر.

ملاحظة: يمكن تخفيف محلول أي حبر حتى لا يظهر أثناء الكتابة وهذه قاعدة عامة.

9- الحبر السري البني الغامق:

يكتب بمحلول مكون من 27 جم من كلوريد النحاس في لتر من الماء المقطر وتظهر الكتابة بواسطة محلول من كبروسيانات الصوديوم (2.4 جم لكل 25مل ماء) والعكس أفضل يظهر بلون بني مسود.
ملاحظة: الأصل يظهر ويختفي والعكس يظهر ولا يختفى.

10- الحبر السري الأحمر الخفيف:

لعمل هذا الحبر نذيب 1 جم من مادة فنيول فيثالين مع 50 مل من الكحول الإثيلي و 50 مل من الماء المقطر. وكاشفه يتكون من 150 جم من كربونات الصوديوم مذابة في لتر من الماء المقطر ويمكن استخدام الكاشف كحبر والحبر ككاشف.
ملاحظات:
1. العكس أوضح من الأصل واكثر احمرارا.
2. كلما ازداد تركيز الكربونات كلما زاد وضوح ولون الحبر.
3. يمكن استخدام Metlylatedspirit (سبيرتو رخيص الثمن متداول في الأسواق ويستخدم في التطهير للجروح) بدلا من الكحول الاثيلي.
4. يعتبر هذا الحبر من الأحبار الهامة حيث أنه لا يظهر بالحرارة ويظهر فقط بمحلول كربونات الصوديوم ويمكن إظهار الكتابة جيدا بعملية التسخين بعد عملية المسح.

11-الحبر السري الأصفر:

تتم الكتابة بواسطة محلول من 68 جم من كلوريد الزئبق مذابة في لتر من الماء المقطر وكاشفه محلول مكون من 1 جم من هيدروكسيد الصوديوم في لتر من الماء المقطر.
ملاحظة: عند تجربة العكس ظهر بلون بني فاتح وكان أفضل وضوحا من الأصل.

الحبر المشفر:

1. نمسح الكتابة بمحلول الامونيا.
2. نمسح بمحلول كبريتات الحديد (2جم لكل 25مل ماء).
3. نمسح بمحلول حديد و سيانيد البوتاسيوم ثم نجفف بالتسخين.
4. نمسح بمحلول البلتش فتظهر الكتابة بلون أسود رصاصي بعد التجفيف بالحرارة.

ملاحظة: يمكن أن نمسح بالامونيا ثم بكبريتات الحديد ثم بمحلول حديدوسيانيد البوتاسيوم ثم بمحلول البلتش ثم نجفف ثم بالبلتش فتظهر الكتابة.

12- الحبر السري الأبيض: (يمكن تشفيره)

تتم الكتابة على ورق أسود أو ازرق مسود بواسطة محلول مكون من 61 جم من كلوريد الباريوم مذابة في لتر من الماء والكاشف عبارة عن محلول مخفف من حامض الكبريتيك (2 مل لكل 12 مل من الماء المقطر).

ملاحظات:

1- يمكن أن تتم الكتابة على ورق أبيض وبطريقة عكسية ثم تمسح بمحلول حامض الكبريتيك ثم تمسح من خلف الكتابة بمحلول مخفف من برمنجنات البوتاسيوم (أو جم لكل 10 مل ماء) فتظهر الكتابة صحيحة وبعد هذا الحبر من الأحبار المهمة حيث أنه لا يمكن كشفه بالحرارة.
2- يمكن الكتابة بمحلول كلوريد الباريوم ثم تمسح بمحلول حامض لكبريتيك ثم تسخن الورق فتظهر الكتابة بيضاء وما حولها يسود.
3- يكتب بمحلول كلوريد الباريوم 1 جم الى 10 مل ماء ثم نخففه ثم نمسح بحبر حامض الكبريتيك مع السكر مع الماء بنسبة (2ـ 1: 50) (حبر رقم 6 من الأحبار الحساسة للحرارة) ثم نسخن على النار حتى تظهر الكتابة بلون أسود واضح وسط اللون الأسود المغطى للصفحة بفعل حامض الكبريتيك.
4- لابد من رفع الورقة بسرعة من على الموقد عند وضوح الكتابة وإلا تحترق.

14- الحبر السري الأزرق البحر:

تتم الكتابة بمحلول كربونات الصوديوم (15 جم لكل 50 مل ماء) ويمسح بمحلول كلوريد النحاس (2.7 جم لكل 100 مل ماء) والعكس صحيح.

ملاحظة: يعتبر هذا الحبر من الأحبار الشعبية لان كربونات الصوديوم شائعة ومتداولة في الأسواق.

15- الحبر السري الأسود الفحمي:

يتكون من إذابة 4.1 جم من حامض الجليك زائد بضع قطرات من الصمغ مذابة في 170 مل من الماء المقطر (يجب أن يكون لونه أغمق من لون القش بقليل وكاشف هذا الحبر يتكون من 2جم من كبريتات الحديد مذابة في 226.4 مل من الماء المقطر.

ملاحظات:

1- عند إضافة قطرات من حامض الكبريتيك الى الكاشف يظهر اكثر (يمكن استخدام الحبر التركي).
2- يمكن إظهار هذا الحبر بواسطة محلول من كبريتات حديد والأمونيوم وبلون رصاص والعكس صحيح.
3- العكس صحيح وبلون اسود محمر ويمكن إظهاره بالامونيا بلون اصفر باهت وبالحرارة بلون بني.
4- يمكن تخفيف الحبر جدا حتى يكون 4, جم من حامض الجليك يذاب في 80 مل من الماء حتى لا يظهر بالحرارة أو الامونيا ويكون الكشف بواسطة الحبر التركي.

16- الحبر السري الأسود المطبخي

يتكون من محلول الشاي المركز وكاشفة محلول من كبريتيك حديدو الأمونيوم والعكس أفضل.

ملاحظات:

1. يمكن إظهار الكتابة بالحرارة بلون رصاص.
2. يمكن استخدام محلول حامض التانيك بدلا من الشاي في الكتابة (يمكن الحصول على حامض التانيك بعد ترشيح وتبخير محلول مركز من الشاي). وهذا الحبر يعتبر من الأحبار الشعبية.

17- الحبر السري البنفسجي الخافت

تتم الكتابة بواسطة محلول مخفف من الفينول (2جم فينول في 20 مل من الماء) وكاشفة عبارة عن 3 جم من كلوريد الحديد مذابة في 50 مل من الماء ويظهر الحبر بلون خافت.

ملاحظات:

1. لا يظهر الفينول بالحرارة العادية.
2. يعد هذا الحبر من الأحبار الشعبية.

الأحبار السرية الجلدية

وهي الأحبار التي يمكن كتابتها وكشفها على جلد الإنسان فيمكن الكتابة مثلا على جلد الرأس بعد الحلاقة التامة ثم ترك الشعر لينمو ويحلق عند الوصول. في مكان آمن وعموما يمكن الكتابة على أي جزء من جسم الإنسان.

*1-*الحبر السري الأسود الجلدي:

يتكون هذا الحبر من محلول حامض التانيك وكاشفة محلول من كبريتات الحديد وتظهر الكتابة بلون اسود.

ملاحظات:

1. عند استخدام الحبر التركي ككاشف ظهر الحبر بوضوح كبير.
2. بعد الكتابة تم غسل المكان بالماء ثم التجفيف ورغم ذلك ظهرت الكتابة بعد الكشف عليها بوضوح.

3. عند المسح على الكتابة بعد الإظهار بمحلول البلتش تتضح اكثر وقد اتضح ان العكس صحيح ايضا ويعد هذا الحبر من الأحبار الشعبية ايضا.

2- الحبر السري الأحمر الجلدي

يتكون هذا الحبر من محلول من كبروسيانات (فيما يستخدم) الصوديوم (2جم لكل 25 مل من الماء) وكاشفة محلول من كلوريد الحديد (3 جم لكل 50 جم من الماء) ويظهر بلون بني قهوة.
ملاحظات:
1. يمكن إدراج هذا الحبر في الأحبار الكيميائية لأنه يمكن أن يكتب به على الورق ايضا لكن مع مراعاة ان يكون المسح خفيف عند الإظهار.
2. عند محاولة الكتابة بالعكس لا تختفي الكتابة تماما بل يظهر اثر الصفرة على الجلد والكتابة بمحلول كبروسيانات الصوديوم لا تظهر بالحرارة .

أحبار الأشعة فوق البنفسجية

وهي الأحبار التي يمكن كشفها عند تعرضها للأشعة فوق البنفسجية.
وللعلم فأن الأشعة فوق البنفسجية تأتينا عبر الشمس وتكون كميتها كبيرة في فترة ما بين الساعة التاسعة الى الثانية عشرة وما بين الرابعة الى الغروب ويمكن الحصول عليها ايضا من خلال لمبة تباع في الأسواق للعلاج الطبيعي لكن يجب الحذر حيث أن هذه الأشعة وخاصة الصادرة عن اللمبة مضرة للعين ومن الأفضل أن توضع هذه اللمبة داخل صندوق خشبي مقفول من جميع الجهات وله فتحة صغيرة تدخل منها الرسالة المراد كشفها وتخرج بعد عدة دقائق للقراءة.

1- الحبر السري لنترات الفضة

نستخدم للكتابة محلول 10% من نترات الفضة ثم تعرض الورقة بعد الجفاف للأشعة فوق البنفسجية (من اللمبة) التي تكشف الكتابة في بضع ثوان.
ملاحظات:
1. يمكن للشمس ان تظهر الكتابة لكن تأخذ وقت أتطول.
2. تظهر الكتابة باللون البني وحتى لو تركت في الضوء العادي لذلك يجب ان تحفظ في مكان مظلم.
3. تظهر نترات الفضة بالحرارة البسيطة بلون بني فاتح وتظهر مع يوديد البوتاسيوم بلون بنفسجي والعكس يظهر بلون أخضر فاتح.
4. يمكن كشف هذا الحبر بالحبر التركي ويعطى لون زيتي اللون مع التسخين قليلا والعكس يظهر بلون بني مسود.

2- الحبر السري اللامع المخضر (السعودي)

يتكون من إذابة نصف جرام نترات يورانيوم مع 50 مل من الماء المقطر وتعريض الكتابة للأشعة فوق البنفسجية عن طريق اللمبة يظهر باللون الأصفر اللامع المخضر.
ملاحظات:
1. يجب الحذر من هذا الحبر حيث أنه سام ومشع.
2. يمكن إظهار الكتابة في أشعة الشمس ايضا لكن بعد فترة طويلة.

3- الحبر السري البولي

يكتب بواسطة البول على أنواع معينة من الورق حتى لا تظهر الكتابة ويكشف عليها بالتعريض للأشعة فوق البنفسجية.

الأحبار الحساسة للحرارة

تظهر بعض المحاليل ألوان مختلفة عند درجات الحرارة المختلفة وهذه هي نظرية الأحبار السرية الحساسة للحرارة . والطريقة المثلى لظهور هذه الأحبار هي تعريضها لفرن هوائي منتظم ومدرج حراريا للتحكم في درجات الحرارة المختلفة ويمكن استخدام الحديد المسخن مثل المكواه والسخان الكهربي وفي بعض الحالات تظهر الكتابة بكمية قليلة من الحرارة من عود الكبريت أو ضوء اللمبة الكهربائية أو غيرها.

1-الحبر السري الأصفر الذهبي

ملاحظات:
1. يظهر الحبر بلون خافت وعند مسحه بقطنة مبللة بنفس الحبر يختفي ويعود للظهور بالتسخين.
2. عند تعرضه لغاز الامونيا يظهر بلون ازرق ثم يختفي.
3. عند مسحه بقطنة مبللة بمحلول حديدوسيانيد البوتاسيوم يظهر باللون الأحمر والعكس صحيح.
4. عند مسحة بيوديد البوتاسيوم (محلول) يظهر بلون أسود.

2-الحبر السري لكربونات الصوديوم

تكتب بمحلول 5% كربونات الصوديوم وبالتسخين يظهر بلون بني فاتح وبزيادة التسخين يتحول الى بني مسود.

3-الحبر السري الأخضر الغامق:

يتكون من 1 جم من كلوريد النحاس مذابة في 20 مل من الماء ومضاف إليها محلول مكون من 1.4 جم من كلوريد الكوبالت في 20 مل من الماء وبالتسخين تظهر الكتابة بلون أخضر غامق.

ملاحظة: يظهر هذا الحبر بواسطة محلون البليتش بلون بني محمر والعكس يظهر بلون بني غامق وهذا من الأحبار الشعبية.

4-الحبر السري الأسود

يتكون من محلول مخفف جدا من نترات الزئبق (1 جم لكل 20 مل ماء) وتظهر الكتابة باللون الأسود عند تعرضها للحرارة.

- 0 ملاحظة: يمكن تحضير نترات الزئبق وذلك بإذابة 1.5 جم من الزئبق مع 11 مل من حامض النتريك وبتبخير الخليط الناتج تتبقى في الكأس بلورات نترات الزئبق البيضاء.

5-الحبر السري الأزرق المخضر

يتكون من محلول كلوريد الكوبلت تركيز من 4-5% تظهر الكتابة باللون الأزرق المخضر عند تعريضها للحرارة اختفي بعد فترة من ظهورها عند ما تبرد.
ملاحظة: كلوريد الكوبالت يظهر بالكلوركس (البلتش)بلون بني محمر والعكس يظهر بلون بني غامق.

6-الحبر السري الأسود:

يتكون من 1 جم من السكر مذاب في 50 جم من الماء المضاف اليه 3 مل من حامض الكبريتيك وستظهر الكتابة بعد تعرضها للحرارة باللون الأسود.
ملاحظات

1. عندما مسحنا عليه بالحبر الحراري رقم (1) (بروميد البوتاسيوم + كبريتات النحاس) فظهر بلون رصاص.
2. هذا الحبر من الأحبار الشعبية.

7- الحبر السري البني رقم (1)

أخلط كلوريد الامونيوم مع الماء بنسبة 1 كلوريد الى 15 ماء تظهر الكتابة باللون الأسود عند تعرضه للحرارة ولا يتلاشى.
ملاحظات

1. يظهر هذا الحبر بعد تعرضه للحرارة بفترة بسيطة.
2. يظهر هذا الحبر بلون بنفسجي عند الكشف عليه بواسطة محلول يوديد البوتاسيوم.

8-الحبر السري البني رقم (2):

يتكون من عصائر الفواكه وخاصة عصير العنب وعصير الليمون وكذلك من اللبن وكل على حده يكتب به ثم بواسطة التسخين أو باللهب تظهر الكتابة باللون البني.
ملاحظة: يمكن استبدال عصير الليمون باستخدام حامض الليمون (Citric acid) بنسبة 1 جم من الحامض الى 25مل من الماء.

9-الحبر السري البني رقم (3):

يتكون من الخل ويظهر بواسطة التسخين.
ملاحظة: يتكون من 3 مل من الخل مع 15 مل من الماء.

10- الحبر السري البني رقم (4):

يتكون من محلول قوي من كبريتات الامونيوم (1 جم - 10 مل ماء) وتظهر الكتابة بالتسخين.

11- /الحبر السري البني رقم (5):

يتكون من محلول كلورات البوتاسيوم أو الصوديوم (1 جم-15 مل ماء) وتظهر الكتابة بالتسخين أو باللهب المباشر.
ملاحظات:

1. يمكن الكتابة بواسطة محلول مكون من خليط كلورات البوتاسيوم أو الصوديوم مع السكر بنسبة 1:1 وتظهر الكتابة باللون البني بواسطة حرارة بسيطة.
2. يمكن الكتابة بمحلول السكر وتظهر الكتابة بعد التسخين بلون اسود محمر.

12- الحبر السري البني رقم (6):

يتكون بإضافة 40% من محلول فورمالدهيد الى عصير الليمون بكمية وافرة ستظهر الكتابة بعد تعرضها للحرارة الشديدة.
ملاحظة: وضعنا 4 جم من الفورمالدهيد مع 6 مل من الماء مع 1 جم من حامض الليمون وظهرت الكتابة بعد فترة من تعرضها للتسخين.

13- /الحبر السري البني المحمر الغامق:

يتكون من عصير البصل عند تعرضه يظهر باللون المذكور.

14-الحبر السري الوردي:

يكتب بمحلول مخفف من نترات الكوبلت سيعطى لون وردي عند أول التسخين ثم يتحول الى بني ثم الى بني غامق بزيادة التسخين.
ملاحظات

1. تم عمل الحبر بوضع 1 جم من النترات مع 50 مل من الماء.
2. يظهر الحبر بواسطة محلول البليتش بلون بني محمر والعكس يظهر بلون بني غامق.
3. عند التبريد تختفي الكتابة وبالتسخين تعود مرة اخرى.

15-الحبر السري الأسود الواضح:

جهز محلولين الأول يتكون من إذابة 30 جم من كبريتات النحاس في 100 مل من الماء المقطر والمحلول الثاني يتكـون مـن 30 جـم من (85 جم من كلوريد الامونيوم مذابة في لتر من الماء) ثم نخلط المحلولين مع بعضهما وبعد الكتابة والتسخين تظهر الكتابة باللون الأسود الواضح.

- ملاحظة: تم إذابة 3 جم من كبريتات النحاس في 10 مل من الماء ثم أذبنا 9, جم من كلوريـد الامونيـوم فـي 9.1 مـل مـن المـاء أخذنا منهم وزن 3 جم وأضفناه للمحلول الأول.

16-الحبر السري للأطفال

يتكون من 5 جم من الخل مع 10 جم من محلول مشبع من ملح الطعام (3 جم من الملح مع 7 مل من المـاء) وهـذا الحـبر غيـر سـام ويظهر بالتسخين باللون البني المحمر.

17-الحبر السري الأسود

يكتب بواسطة محلول حامض الكبريتيـك (مـاء البطاريـة بنسـبة 1 مـل حـامض الـى 50 مـل مـاء) باسـتخدام قلـم لا يتـأثر بالأحمـاض وبالتسخين تظهر الكتابة باللون الأسود.

18- الحبر السري المتحول والذي لا يختفى بالتبريد

هذا الحبر يسمى الحبر الكاشف للتلاعب فانك اذا أردت ان تعرف انه لو كان شخص غير مرغوب فيه قد قـرأ رسـالتك بـالحرارة تصـنع علامة من هذا الحبر داخل الرسالة وتبقى هذه العلامة بعد التسخين ولا تختفي بالتبريد ويتكون هذا الحبر من 0.1 جم مـن ريزسـينول (Recinol) +0.1 جم من باراتوليدين (Paratoludin) + 8 قطرات من الماء + 6 قطرات من حامض الكبريتيك هـذا الحـبر سـوف يظهـر باللون الأحمر الباهت أو الأصفر ويتحول الى اللون الأسود أو البني عند التسخين ويبقى ولا يختفى.
ملاحظة: يمكن لهذا الحبر ان يظهر بتعريض للشمس فترة طويلة.

الأحبار المائية

وهي الأحبار التي تظهر عند غمرها في الماء ومنها:-

1-الحبر السري لعصير الليمون:

يتكون من 1 جم من حامض الليمون ومذاب في 25مل من الماء بعد الكتابة والجفاف ووضع الورقة داخل الماء تظهـر الكتابـة بـاللون الرصاصي.

2-الحبر الاسبريني السري:

احضر حبتين أسبرين واطحنهم وضع عليهم 15 مل من الكحول الاثيلي (السبيرتو) وقلب حتى الـذوبان ثـم ترشـح وتكتـب بـالمحلول الناتج وتجفف الورقة وتضعها في الماء فتظهر الكتابة بلون رصاص وعند الجفاف تختفي ولأظهرها مرة تضعها في الماء.

الأحبار البخارية

تظهر بعض الأحبار بتعريضها لأبخرة بعض المواد الأخرى التي تتفاعل معها وتظهرها ومن أمثلة ذلك:

1-الحبر السري البخاري لغاز كبريتد الهيدروجين:

يتكون من محلول خلات الرصاص 10% وستظهر الكتابة بعد تعرضها لأبخرة غاز كبريتد الهيدروجين بلون بني محمر.
ملاحظات:

1- يمكن إستخدام كبريتد الامونيوم السائل بدلا من كبريتد الصوديوم وتم استخدام الغاز المتصاعد من الزجاجة مباشرة فظهر الحبر.
2- يحضر غاز كبريتد الهيدروجين عن طريق وضع 5 مل من حامض الكبريتيك على 2جم مـن بلـورات كبريتـد الصـوديوم المطحونـة أو بوضع 2 مل من حامض الكبريتيك على 2 مل من سائل كبريتد الامونيوم.

2-الحبر السري البخاري لليود:

أ-عند الكتابة بالماء والتجفيف ثم التعرض لأبخرة اليود ثم المسح بقطن مبللة بالماء تظهر الكتابة باللون الأسود .
ب-وعند الكتابة بمحلول حامض الليمون 1 جم في 10 مل ماء والتجفيف ثم التعرض لأبخرة اليود ثم البلل بواسطة قطن تظهر الكتابة بلون بنفسجي واضح .
ملاحظة:

- هناك طريقة أخرى لإظهار الكتابة: أولا تتم الكتابة بالماء أو حامض الليمون وتجفف ثم نبلل بالماء ثم نعـرض لأبخـرة اليـود فتظهـر الكتابة.

الأحبار المتلاشية

بعض الأحبار تختفي وتتلاشى بعد مرور فترات زمنية واليك بعض الأمثلة:

1-الحبر المختفي البرتقالي

ضع 3 جم من حامض التانيك مع 6 مل من حامض النيتريك ثم أضف إليهم 4 مل من حامض الكبريتيك ثم أضف 20 مل أخرين من حامض النيتريك ثم أضف بعض الصمغ السائل عند التبريد وعند الكتابة بهذا الحبر سوف يتلاشى تماما في بضع أيام.

2-طريقة عامة لعمل حبر متلاشي

لو خلطت أي حبر عادي مع حامض الكبريتيك بنسبة 1:1 سوف تتآكل الورقة في خلال شهر.

3-الحبر السري لليود المتلاشي

يتكون هذا الحبر من 1.5 جم من يوديد البوتاسيوم مع 12 جزء من الصمغ السائل مع 50 مل من الماء وطريقة صنعه تكون بإذابة يوديد البوتاسيوم في نصف الماء الموجود وبعد ذلك أذب اليود ثم أضف باقي الماء واخلط الصمغ .

ملاحظات:

1. بدأ الحبر في التلاشي بعد 18 ساعة.
2. بعد أن وضعنا 0.5 جم يوديد بوتاسيوم في 0.5 الماء الموجود ثم وضعنا 0.5جم اليود وقبل ان نذيبه وضعنا باقي الماء وسخنا على الموقد الكهربي وذلك لأن اليود لم يذب فلما وقع الكأس على الموقد الكهربي أخرج غاز مسيل للدموع بطريقة شديدة.

4- الحبر الأحمر المتلاشي

يتكون هذا الحبر من 1 جم من الفنيول فثالين مع 50 مل من الامونيا سوف يتلاشى هذا الحبر عندما يتعرض للهواء مباشرة وعند مسح الكتابة بواسطة محلول كربونات الصوديوم تبقى الكتابة ولا تختفي.

ملاحظة:

- 0تم وضع 0.5 جم (فنيول فثالين) Ph-ph مع 25مل أمونيا مع 3, جم NaOH فلم تختفى الكتابة إلا بعد 15 دقيقة وهكذا كلما زادت نسبة هيدروكسيد الصوديوم تزيد مدة بقاء الكتابة.

الأحبار السامة

وهي الأحبار التي يمكن استخدامها في عمليات القتل.

1-الحبر الروسي القاتل بالسكتة القلبية:

يتكون من حامض الهيدروسيانيك بتركيز 100% يوضع في القلم ويرش على وجه الضحية فيموت على الفور.

1. يمكن استخدام قلم حبر الذي عند فتحه يخرج منه غاز سيانيد الهيدروجين المتطاير من الحامض المركز وهي تؤثر على الأوعية الدموية وتسبب سكتة قلبية لحظية ثم تعود الأوعية الدموية للعمل بعد بضع دقائق فلا يدرى أحد كيف قتل هذا الإنسان والدليل الوحيد على هذه العملية هي رائحة اللوز الناتجة عن الغاز والتي تختفي ايضا بعد فترة قلية.
2. يمكن استخدام قلم له ثقب وموجه نحو وجه الضحية وبداخله يحدث تفاعل بين حامض الكبريتيك وسيانيد البوتاسيوم ليخرج الغاز القاتل ومن خواص مادة DMSO إنها مادة قابلة للنفاذ الى داخل جسم الإنسان بسرعة وهي تقبل كثير من السموم لتحملها الى تيار الدم إلا تلك السموم التي هي عبارة عن أملاح لمعادن صاحبة الوزن الجزئي الكبير وتستخدم هذه المادة الى جانب ما ذكر في علاج مرض الهربز).

2-الحبر السري القاتل اللحظي:

يتكون من إذابة 33جم من سيانيد البوتاسيوم في لتر من الماء وعندما تقدم شراب للضحية تصب فيه بضع قطرات من القلم الحبر الشخصي.

ملاحظة:يمكن زيادة تركيز السيانيد في المحلول ليكون شديد الفاعلية.

3-الرسالة السامة:

تحضير الرسالة السامة:

يمكن كتابة رسالة مشوقة وبها أخبار تهم الشخص المطلوب قتله ثم نضع هذه الرسالة في محلول مكون من ثنائي مثيل أكسيد الكبريت(DI-methlylsulphoxideوتكتب باختصار Dmso وهذه المادة متوفرة في الصيدليات حيث تدخل في تركيب مراهم الروماتيزم وأمراض العيون والبواسير وأمراض الأسنان وتوجد ايضا عند الذين يعملون في تربية الخيول وعند صيدلية العلاج البيطري حيث يتم مسح جسد الخيل بها قبل دخوله السباق ليسخن وتدخل في صناعة كريمات البشرة ومن أهم خواصها أنها سريعة النفاذ الى جسم الإنسان حامله معها ما نريد ومن سم يذوب معه بأكبر نسبة مثل سم السيانيد وسم الرسين أو جرثومة بتولونيوم أو غيره من السموم المناسبة لحالة الشخص واليك مثال على تحضير الرسالة : نأخذ كمية مناسبة (حوالي 10 مل) من DMSO كافية لغمس الرسالة في طبق ونطحن كمية من السيانيد طحنا جيدا ونزن حوالي 6 جم من السيانيد ونضعه في الطبق الموجود فيه DMSO وٍ ذوبه جيدا حتى يصير مثل الماء نغمر الرسالة الآن في هذا المحلول ثم نخرجها ونتركها حتى تجف لتعور الى حالتها الطبيعية ولابد من استخدام القفاز والكمامة في هذه العملية وضع الرسالة الآن داخل ظرف مجهز بغلاف بلاستيكي داخلي ونرسلها الى الشخص المطلوب الذي بدوره حينما يلمسها ويأخذ في قراءة أخبارها المشوقة ربما لا يستطيع ان يكمل قراءته.

- 0ملاحظة: يمكن ان تدهن الغلاف من الداخل (للظرف) بمادة تسمى.(Silicone sealant)التي تستخدم في رهان الأحذية الشمواه التي لا تتأثر بالماء وتستخدم خاصة في الشتاء (وهذا بالطبع حتى لا تقتل ساعي البريد) وهذه الطريقة تعوضك عن استخدام كيس بلاستك كغلاف للرسالة.

وهي الأحبار التي يمكن استخدامها في عمليات الحرق.

1-قلم الحبر السري الناري:-

شكل هذا القلم عادي ويمكن ان تهديه الى الضحية أو تتركه على مكتبه وبعد فترة معينة يحرق المكان خصوصا ان كان الى جانبه بعض الأشياء التي تساعد على الاحتراق وفي داخل هذا القلم تضع بـدلا مـن الحـبر خليـط مـن كلـورات البوتاسـيوم مـع السـكر بنسـبة 3-1 وموضع في الجانب الآخر من القلم حامض كبريتيك مركـز ومفصـول بينهمـا بقطعـة بلاسـتك أو ورق مسـتوى محسـوب وقـت اخـتراق الحامض لها وبعد هذه الفترة الزمينة سوف يصل الحامض للخليط ويحدث اشتعال بانفجار حيث أن الأنبوبة مغلقة جيدا.

2- الزجاجة السرية الحارقة

تتكون من إذابة 1 جم يود مع 20 مل من الامونيا(NH_4NO_3) مع 1 مل حامض نيتريك داخل زجاجة مقفولة بسداد مثقوب لكي تتبخـر منه الامونيا الزائدة وتبقى المادة المتفجرة المتكونة داخل الزجاجة والـتي لـو وضـعت فـي محـرك السـيارة أو فـي أي مكـان سـاخن للتفجير وكذلك يمكن تفجير العبوة بالتحريك أو بالاهتزاز ولو بسيط.

ملاحظة : يمكن وضع هذا الخليط في قلم مجهز لهذا الغرض.

أحبار الألعاب السحرية

وهي الأحبار التي يمكن استخدامها في بعض الحيل والألعاب المسلية.

1- حبر الشعلة المتصلة

يتكون من 1 جم من نترات البوتاسيوم مذابة في 15 مل من الماء المقطر . قلب جيدا مع التسخين لتمام الذوبان ثم اكتب بهذا الحـبر على ورقة غير ناعمة وبعد جفاف الحبر والتأكد انه متصل تماما أشعل أوله ولاحظ ان الشرارة تشتعل حسب الكتابة الموجـودة والـتي تظهر سوداء.

2- حبر سري يظهر بالأكسدة

يتكون من 4 جم من كبريتات الحديدوز مع 0.5جم من حامض التانيك مذابة في 50 مل من الماء وعند خلط هذه المواد تترسـب مـواد سوداء. أضف ألان بضع قطرات من حامض الهيدروكلوريك وحامض الكبريتيك حتى تذوب الرواسب تماما عند الكتابـة سـيتحول الحـبر الى اللون الأسود بواسطة الأكسجين الموجود في الهواء.

ملاحظات:
1- يظهر الحبر بعد ساعة ونصف تقريبا بلون الرصاص.
2- يجب حفظ هذا الحبر بعيداً عن الهواء الجوي.

3- الحبر السري المتحول اللون

يتكون من 1 جم من كلوريد الكوبالت المذاب في 10 مل من الماء ، اغمر ورقة في هذا المحلول ثـم جففهـا بقليـل مـن الحـرارة مـن موقد كحولي أو غاز سيتحول لونها الى اللون الأزرق وبعد ان تقفل يدك عليها أو تبردها يتحول اللون الى الرمادي الخفيف.

ملاحظات وقواعد عامة في البحث:

1. لابد من التأكد من نقاء المواد الداخلة في تصنيع الأحبار حيث ان الشوائب قد تسبب فشل الحبر.
2. الأفضل استخدام الماء المقطر في تحضير الأحبار لكن عند انعدامه يمكن استعمال العادي.
3. في هذا البحث عندما ترد كلمة محلول بدون تفصيل معني ذلك ان المحلول يتكون من 2جم من المادة مذابة 25 مل من الماء.
4. لابد من جفاف الحبر قبل الكشف علية.
5. الأحبار التي يدخل في تركيبها مادة كربونات الصوديوم تختفي بعد فترة زمنية معينة كذلك الأحبار التي تظهرها هذه المادة.
6. يمكن تثبيت أحماض الامونيا لفترة زمنية محدودة بمسحها بقطنة مبللة بمحلول كربونات الصوديوم.
7. كثير من الأحبار تظهر بالحرارة لذلك يجب تخفيفها بقدر المستطاع ومحاولة تشفيرها حتى لا نظهر بسهولة.
8. عند تعرض الأحبار عموما لغاز اليود تظهر وتثبت حتى الأحبار التي تختفي بمجرد الكتابة مثلا أحبار الامونيا.
9. يمكن استخدام محلول كلوريد النحاس ومحلول كلوريد الكوبالت أحدهما لمسح الأخر بعد كتابته وإظهاره بالحرارة.
10. يمكن ان تكتب ملح سيوسيانات الصوديوم (NaSCN) أو تكتب ملح كبروسينات الصوديوم والأولى افضل.

ملحق الأحبار السرية

يمكنك الأن التدرب بصناعة هذه الأحبار بعد ان انتهيت من الدورة التاسيسية وللعلم قد يكون بعضها قد تكرر من قبل.

أولا تجارب محول كربونات الصوديوم.

1- حبر احمر يكتب بمحلول كربونات الصوديوم وكاشفه محلول فينول فثالين.
2- حبر احمر بني يكتب بمحلول كربونات الصوديوم وكاشفه محلول كلوريد الزئبق.
3- حبر بني يكتب بمحلول كربونات الصوديوم وكاشفه محلول كبريتات حديدو امونيوم.

4- حبر بني محمر يكتب بمحلول كربونات الصوديوم وكاشفه محلول حامض الجاليك.
5- حبر بني يكتب بمحلول كربونات الصوديوم وكاشفه الحبر التركي.
6- حبر ازرق يكتب بمحلول كربونات الصوديوم وكاشفه الحبر الأزرق الإسرائيلي.

ثانيا تجارب حلول كلوريد النحاس:

1- حبر ازرق يكتب بمحلول كلوريد النحاس وكاشفه محلول يوديد البوتاسيوم.
2- حبر بني يكتب بمحلول كلوريد النحاس وكاشفه محلول حامض الجاليك أو التانك.
3- حبر اصفر يكتب بمحلول كلوريد النحاس وكاشفه محلول حديدو سيانيد البوتاسيوم.
4- حبر اسود باهت يكتب بمحلول كلوريد النحاس وكاشفه محلول سيوسيانات الصوديوم.

ثالثا تجارب محلول حامض التانيك:

1- حبر ازرق باهت يكتب بمحلول حامض التانيك وكاشفة الحبر التركي.
2- حبر ازرق باهت(2) يكتب بمحلول حامض التانيك وكاشفة محلول كبريتات حديدو امونيوم.
3- حبر بني باهت يكتب بمحلول حامض التانيك وكاشفة كلوريد النحاس.

رابعا تجارب محلول حديدو سيانيد البوتاسيوم:-

1. حبر ازرق واضح يكتب بمحلول حديدو سيانيد البوتاسيوم وكاشفه الحبر التركي.
2. حبر بني يكتب بمحلول حديدوسيانيد البوتاسيوم وكاشفه محلول الحبر الإسرائيلي.
3. حبر ازرق يكتب بمحلول حديدوسيانيد البوتاسيوم وكاشفه محلول كبريتات حديدو امونيوم.
4. حبر بني يكتب بمحلول حديدوسيانيد البوتاسيوم وكاشفه محلول نترات الكوبالت.
5. حبر ازرق يكتب بمحلول حديدوسيانيد البوتاسيوم وكاشفه محلول كلوريد الحديد.

خامسا تجارب محلول يوديد البوتاسيوم:-

1. حبر ازرق يكتب بمحلول يوديد البوتاسيوم وكاشفه الحبر الإسرائيلي.
2. حبر ازرق يكتب بمحلول يوديد البوتاسيوم وكاشفه محلول كبريتات النحاس.
3. حبر بني يكتب بمحلول يوديد البوتاسيوم وكاشفه محلول نترات الكوبلت.
4. حبر ازرق يكتب بمحلول يوديد البوتاسيوم وكاشفه كلوريد الحديد.
5. حبر بني يكتب بمحلول يوديد البوتاسيوم وكاشفه الحبر الألماني.
6. حبر بني يكتب بمحلول يوديد البوتاسيوم وكاشفه حامض الجاليك.
7. حبر بني يكتب بمحلول يوديد البوتاسيوم وكاشفه محلول فينول فثالين.

سادسا تجارب محلول سيوسينات الصوديوم:-

1. حبر ازرق يكتب بمحلول سيوسينات الصوديوم وكاشفه محلول كلوريد النحاس.
2. حبر بني فاتح يكتب بمحلول سيوسينات الصوديوم وكاشفه الحبر التركي.
3. حبر اسود يكتب بمحلول سيوسينات الصوديوم وكاشفه الحبر الإسرائيلي.
4. حبر بني يكتب بمحلول سيوسينات الصوديوم وكاشفه محلول كلوريد الحديد.

سابعا تجارب الحبر التركي:-

1- حبر ازرق تكتب بالحبر التركي وكاشفه حامض الجاليك.
2- حبر ازرق يكتب بالحبر التركي وكاشفه محلول حديدوسيانيد البوتاسيوم.

ثامنا تجارب الحبر الإسرائيلي:-

1. حبر بني مصفر يكتب بالحبر الإسرائيلي وكاشفه حامض التانيك
2. حبر بني يكتب بالحبر الإسرائيلي وكاشفه حامض الجليك.
3. حبر بني فاتح يكتب بالحبر الإسرائيلي وكاشفه محلول يوديد البوتاسيوم.
4. حبر بني فاتح يكتب بالحبر الإسرائيلي وكاشفه محلول حديد و سياتيد البوتاسيوم.
5. حبر بني فاتح يكتب بالحبر الإسرائيلي وكاشفه سيوسينات الصوديوم.

تاسعا تجارب حامض الجاليك:-

1- حبر اخضر مصفر يكتب بمحلول حامض الجاليك كاشفه م كبريتات النحاس.
2- حبر ازرق مسود يكتب بمحلول حامض الجاليك كاشفه م كبريتات الحديد.
3- حبر اخضر مصفر يكتب بمحلول حامض الجاليك كاشفه م كربونات الصوديوم.

عاشراً تجارب محلول تافينول فثالين:

1. حبر أحمر يكتب بمحلول الفينول فثالين كاشفه محلول كربونات الصوديوم.
2. حبر احمر يكتب بمحلول الفينول فثالينو كاشفه محلول الامونيا (يظهر ويختفي.

أحد عشر تجارب محلول البليتش

1- حبر ابيض مؤقت يكتب بالبلتش وكاشفه الحبر للإلماني.
2- حبر اصفر مؤقت يكتب بالبلتش وكاشفه محلول حديدوسيانيد البوتاسيوم.
3- حبر بني مسود يكتب بالبلتش وكاشفه محلول نترات الكوبالت.

ثاني عشر تجارب محلول كلوريد الحديد:

1. حبر اسود يكتب بمحلول كلوريد الحديد وكاشفه محلول حديدوسيانيد البوتاسيوم.
2. حبر بني فاتح يكتب بمحلول كلوريد الحديد وكاشفه محلول يوديد البوتاسيوم.
3. حبر ازرق باهت يكتب بمحلول كلوريد الحديد وكاشفه محلول حامض الجليك.
4. حبر اصفر يكتب بمحلول كلوريد الحديد وكاشفه محلول كلوريد الامونيوم.
5. حبر ازرق مسود يكتب بمحلول كلوريد الحديد وكاشفه محلول حامض التانيك.

تجارب اخرى

1- حبر ابيض مؤقت يكتب بمحلول كبريتات حديدو امونيوم وكاشفه الحبر الألماني.
2- حبر بني يكتب بمحلول كبريتات الحديد وكاشفه حامض التانيك.
3- حبر إلماني + حبر صيني + امونيا بنسبة (2 :2 :1) وكاشفه محلول حديدوسيانيد البوتاسيوم.

جدول أعداد الأحبار السرية

الرقم	الاسم بالعربي	الاسم بالإنجليزي	الرمز	ملاحظات
1	هيدروكسيد الامونيا	Amonium hydroxide	NH4OH	يستخدم في صناعة الشعر-تنظيف الزجاج-في الصيدليات
2	نترات الكوبالت	Cobalt nitrate	CO(NO3)2	يحضر من تفاعل الكوبالت مع حامض النيتريك
3	فينول فثالين	Phenol Phathaline	Ph-Ph	يستخدم كاشف في عمليات المعايرة
4	رابع كلوريد الكربون	Carbon tetra chloride	CCl4	السائل الموجود في طفايات الحريق
5	الجلسرين	Glycerine	C3H5(OH)3	في الصيدليات و أثناء تصنيع الصابون
6	كبريتات النحاس	Cupper sulphate	CuSO4	تفاعل برادة النحاس مع حم الكبريتيك
7	كلوريد النحاس	Cupper chlorid	CuCl2	تفاعل النحاس مع حامض الهيدروكلوريك المركز
8	سيوسينات الصوديوم	Soadium Ulphocyante	NaSCN	في محلات المواد الكيماوية
9	كبريتات حديدو الامونيوم	AMMONIUOM FERROSULPHATE	NH4Fe(SO4)2	في محلات المواد الكيماوية
10	حامض الجاليك	GALLIC ACID	C7H6O5	في محلات المواد الكيماوية
11	الفينول	CARBOLIC ACID	C6H5OH	في الصيدليات ومن الأسبرين
12	بروميد البوتاسيوم	POTASSIUM BROMIDE	KBR	في محلات المواد الكيماوية
13	حامض التانيك	TAUNIC ACID		تستخرج من الشاي
14	كلوريد الكوبالت	COBALT CHLORIDE	CoCl2	في محلات المواد الكيماوية
15	فورمالدهايد	FORMLDHYDE	HcHO	في محلات المواد الكيماوية
16	حامض الليمون	CITRIC ACID	C3H4(COOH)3	يستخرج من الليمون -البقالات
17	نترات الفضة	SILVER NITRATE	AgNO3	من تفاعل الفضة مع حامض النيتريك
18	انثراين	Anthracene	C6H4CHC6H4CH	في محلات المواد الكيماوية
19	نترات اليورانيوم	Uranuim nitrate	UNO3	من تفاعل اليورانيوم مع حامض النيتريك
20	خلات الرصاص	Lead acetate	CaCooph	من تفاعل الرصاص مع حامض الخلليك
21	كبريتيد الصوديوم	Soadium suphide	NaS	في محلات المواد الكيماوية
22	كبريتيد الامونيوم	Ammonium sulphide	NH4)2S)	في محلات المواد الكيماوية
23	يوديد البوتاسيوم	Potassium iodide	KIN	في محلات المواد الكيماوية أو تبخير صبغة اليود
24	اليود	Iodine	I	تستخدم في محلات طلاء معادن
25	حديدو سيانيد البوتاسيوم	Potassium Ferrocyanide	K4Fe(CN)6	محلات زينة النساء
26	الأسيتون	Acetone	C3H6O	يستخدم في إزالة طلاء الأظافر
27	كبريتات الحديد	ferrous suphate	FeSO4	تفاعل برادة الحديد مع حامض الكبريتيك
28	حامض النيتريك	Nitric acid	HNO3	تفاعل حامض الكبريتيك مع النترات

29	حامض الكبريتيك	Sulphoric acid	H2SO4	تركيز ماء البطارية

لقد قام زكريا سيتشن بمجهود كبير لترجمة الألواح الطينية السومرية ،لكن ،ما الذي لم يقبله عقلي هو إدعاءه أن السومريين أصلهم من نوع آخر متفوق .فنحن الآداميين، كذلك ،أبناء السماء،لبست أرواحنا أجسادا لتقوم بمهمتها على الأرض ثم تعود إلى مكانها الأرفع.
ومن جهة أخرى قوله أن الآلهة (الأنوناكيAnunaki الفضائيون) هم من خلقوا الإنسان.وهذا يجانب الصواب لأن الإنسان خلقه الله ووضع فيه نفخة من روحه. من الممكن أن تقوم مخلوقات أخرى (جن،أناناكي ..) بالتلاعب بجينات الإنسان،كما وقع في قارة أطلنتيس ،كذلك بعد الطوفان وظهور نسخة آدمية la sizième raceأخرى ممن حمل نوح معه في السفينة

كثير من العلمانيين و اللادينيين ينظرون الى من يتبع الدعاة و الشيوخ انهم جهلة منومين يتبعونهم بشكل اعمى و هم أنفسهم يتبعون بشرا ملحدا لا رادع له ان كذب او افترى او تفوه بالخيالات (ما يدعى بحوث علمية او تجارب علمية او اكتشافات) بشكل اعمى خالص و كأنهم خاضوا معه جميع ما ذكر من قبل و كانوا على ذلك شهود

أما الأمراء والقادة من الأسرى فكانوا يغمرونهم في براميل ماء موثقين إلى قعر البراميل ولكن رؤوسهم تبقى طافية فوق الماء، ثم تدهن رؤوسهم بالعسل والحليب مراراً على مدى النهار والليل، ويجبرون على الأكل فيقضون حاجاتهم في برميل الماء، وهكذا تكون وجوههم ورؤوسهم عرضة للحشرات والطيور تأكل منها ما تشاء، فيما تدب الحشرات والجراثيم لتلتهم أجسادهم الغارقة بالفضلات. ويستغرق موتهم أسبوعا إلى أسبوعين في عذاب شديد.

أما ملوك الأعداء فكانوا يجبرونهم على تحطيم عظام ابناءهم بالقضبان كما تظهر الصورة، ثم يودعونهم السجن ليقضوا باقي عمرهم محطمي النفس إلى ابد، ويضمنون أيضا أن نسل ملوك الأعداء قد انقطع، وانقرض الأحياء منهم.

A HISTORIOGRAPHY ON THE MOROCCAN GNAWA BROTHERHOOD

"Kings brought those people {the Gnawas} from everywhere and redistributed them in palaces, and noble families, where they remained. This is how it happened for slaves. The slaves were subjugated by the kings to work in the palaces, under the Caïd or the chorfa {nobles}, but all the slaves were part of the Tagnawite. There are two sorts of Gnawa : ones are the children of lalla Krima and the others are Sidni Bilal's"[1]. Al Ayachi, Moqqadem in Marrakech[2], here tells the story of the Gnawas, how they got to Morocco, why they stayed there and what they became.

The Gnawa are a muslim brotherhood located in Algeria and Morocco[3]. In this paper we will focus on historiography concerning Gnawas in Morocco. The kingdom of Morocco, with a population of 34 millions[4], is a constitutional monarchy with an elected parliament and is ruled by Mohammed VI since 1999. It is located in the Maghreb region of North Africa. The official languages are Arabic and Amazigh (Berber) but the majority of the population speaks darija, a dialect derived from Arabic. The dominant approach of Islam in Morocco is sunni and follows the Maliki school[5] of law.

The term gnawa refers to black people from West Africa but also to their mystic religious order and musical style. They were mainly brought as slaves under the reigns of the sultans Ahmed Al Mansour (1578-1603) and especially Moulay Ismaïl (1666-1727) to build an army. Slavery ended progressively in Morocco under the influence of the French protectorate (1912-1956). However, the former slaves, residing in the country since the sixteenth century, remained there, adopted Moroccan culture and converted to Islam, even though most of them were muslims even before being brought to Morocco.

The first articles of research that we are in possession of do not directly tackle the Gnawas specifically but mostly the black brotherhoods present in Morocco. This knowledge originates from ancient testimonies of travelers such as Ibn Battuta in the 14th century. However, the first ethnographic studies date from the beginning of the 20th century with Westermarck's Ritual and Belief in Morocco[6]. Numerous articles and chapters in books are dedicated to Gnawas, with the ethnographer Emile Dermenghem[7] as the first author dedicating a full volume to black brotherhoods in the Maghreb

[2] interviewed in 1988 by Jacques Willemont
[3] We will focus here on the Moroccan Gnawi

[5] School of law attributed to Malik ibn Anas al-Asbahi in the eighth century in the Arabian Peninsula. Originally referred to as the School of Hejaz or the School of Medina. Predominant in North Africa and significantly present in Upper Egypt, Sudan, Bahrain, United Arab Emirates, and Kuwait. Characterized by strong emphasis on hadith; many doctrines are attributed to early Muslims such as Muhammad 's wives, relatives, and Companions. A distinguishing feature of the Maliki school is its reliance on the practice of the Companions in Medina as a source of law. The Oxford Dictionary of Islam

(1953). In the second half of the 20th century, Gnawa trance and music gained popularity amongst jazz and rock-and-roll musicians[8], writers and travellers[9] as well as anthropologists and ethnomusicologists. The psycho-sociologue Georges Lapassade began researching the Gnawa in the 1970's[10]. Viviana Pâques is a French anthropologue focusing on the Gnawa with a symbolistic approach[11] of their musical rituals. In continuation of Pâques' research, we can cite Deborah Kapchan[12] and Bertrand Hell[13]. Chouki El Hamel is also an important scholar on the topic and focuses mainly on the slave and racial history of the Gnawa[14].

This paper aims at offering a succinct overview of research carried out on the analysis of the Gnawa culture and history. For that purpose, we will first concentrate on ethnographic and anthropological studies that focused on the Gnawa cult, and especially on the religious ritual they execute. In a second part, research on the history of the Gnawa, their slave lineage and their "blackness" in an Arab and Berber country, will be presented. Lastly, and in a more contemporary approach to the Gnawa, we will emphasise studies concerning how Gnawa situate themselves in a globalised world. Through this paper, I hope to display the evolution of scholars' understanding of the Gnawa; it seems indeed that the analytic key shifted from "Gnawas as former African slaves and their trance rituals" to "Gnawa music and the fetish of trance in globalisation".

The authors discussed here are unfortunately mostly Westerners, with the exception of Chouki El Hamel[15], Abdelhafid Chlyeh[16] and Zineb Majdouli[17], who nonetheless received a western academic education. The debate whether research has to be performed by insiders or outsiders remains unsettled but I believe both situations have their perks and disadvantages. Translation from Moroccan Arabic is yet another limitation in this field of research as scholars do not all use the same retranscription models for words in darija, especially between anglophone and francophone scholars.

THE FIRST WAVE OF ANTHROPOLOGICAL RESEARCH 1970-2000

The first research carried out specifically on the Gnawa, mostly by anthropologists or sociologists, originally concentrated on their religious rituals. The lîla[18], also known as derdeba, is an important healing ceremony that happens at least once a year. The lîla takes place at night inside a house where people from the guild gather to summon healing spirits, dance to specific music and go into trance. The ceremony is inaugurated by an animal sacrifice.

Viviana Pâques was a French anthropologist, a researcher at the CNRS under Griaule and Lévi-Strauss and director of the Institute of Ethnology in the University of Strasbourg. She is one of the most famous scholars on the study of the Gnawa. Her studies are based on thorough field research; she was instructed for twenty years by the Marrakchi moqaddem Layashi Qemshish[19]. Pâques offers a symbolistic approach of the brotherhood and focuses on their metaphysical and cosmogonic conception of the world:

"The lyrics of the songs, seemingly seldom explicit, the dancing steps, the tempo of the music, everything is loaded with meaning, everything is codified, everything is a reference to a cosmogonic order (...)"[20].

Georges Lapassade[21] was a French psycho-sociologue and ethnologue who introduced ethnomethodology in France. From the 1970's onward he began research among the Gnawas of Essaouira[22]. He believed that personality was subdivided between divine and evil, but that, through the Gnawa trance ritual, this repressed aspect of one's personality could be publicly displayed[23] :

"In the phenomenon of {trance} possession, in its psychological root, there is a division within the personality (...)"[24].

[18] Literally "night" in Arabic.

[24] ibid : from the French "Dans le phénomène de la possession, à sa racine psychologique, il y a une division de la personnalité (...)"

Abdelhafid Chlyeh, in Les Gnaouas du Maroc (1997) follows Lapassade's psycho-sociological approach of the Gnawa brotherhood and maintains the focus on trance and possession by spirits.

The importance given to the sacrificial aspect[25] and the trance ritual is representative of a specific approach of the Gnawa brotherhood. It is generally the case with anthropologists and sociologists from the last half of the twentieth century. This type of research has offered a lot to scholarly research on the Gnawa, especially since it is the first wave of study. Nonetheless, in my opinion, its approach of the religious ritual could benefit from a more Islamic centered perspective - Gnawa present themselves as proud heirs of Islam - rather than a "pagan" cult. Analysis and comparisons with Sufis, as Cynthia Becker[26] has done for example, could help situate them more within the muslim world.

THE HISTORIAN'S NARRATIVE

Another important wave of research on Gnawas examines their past heritage as slaves and their "blackness" in an Arab and Berber country. Indeed, the word "gnawa" itself relates to their black ancestry and a lot of researchers have attempted to analyse the etymology of the term "gnawa" in order to obtain its true meaning. If Pâques and Lesage[27] believed that the term "gnawa" came from medieval Ghana (Sahelian kingdom north of Mali from the eighth to the twelfth century), Chouki El Hamel argues that it seems unlikely because of the way "g" sound, that doesn't exist in the Arabic alphabet, is transliterated in Arabic[28]. Rather, this denomination would come from the Berber word "gnawi" which means "black man"[29].

Chouki El Hamel, despite the few Moroccan written sources examining the slave history and because of the reluctance of the natives to discuss issues of slavery as a result of Islamic pride (argument that prejudices and oppression are absent in Islam), still managed to find important primary sources in records of libraries and archives of Morocco in Rabat. His work is considerable concerning writings on the history of slavery of Gnawas[30].

Moreover, the emphasis on oral tradition by the Gnawa could be a cause of there being so few written source. Through their songs, they tell and recreate their history as well as their original myth[31]. Chouki gives an example of songs where Gnawa tell their story[32] :

They brought from the Suda
The nobles of this country brought us
They brought us to serve them
They brought us to bow to them
They brought us Oh there is no God but God
We believe in God's justice

THE SECOND WAVE : CONTINUATION AND REFINING (2000 onwards)

The last important wave of research, corresponding historically to the beginning of the twenty first century, focuses on the Gnawas' place in the globalised world and their adjustment to it, as well as a deeper focus on the ethnomusical approach. Deborah Kapchan[33], in her book Travelling Spirit Masters : Moroccan Gnawa and Music in the Global Marketplace, aims at examining the specificity of Gnawa trance as well as its transcultural potential. She additionally tackles the popularity Gnawa music gained during the last fifty years and Gnawas' involvement in music festivals such as Essaouira's[34]. She believes it created a transnational notion of the sacred :

"The phenomenon of the sacred music festival draws on the religious sentiment evoked by ritual music in order to create a transnational (thus mobile) notion of the sacred, what I call the "festive sacred," that is in many ways a counterpoint to the specificity and ideology of more orthodox forms of religious practice."[35]

Zineb Majdouli[36] is another contemporary researcher focusing on the transformations of Gnawa music. Her work presents the displacement of the Gnawa and their music from a local and ritualised environment towards the World Music stage. Her aim is to show that the Gnawa evolve in a complex process which represents the tension between tradition and modernity in Morocco.

Indeed, with the interest that international musicians have given to Gnawa music, as well as the process of globalisation of the world, the traditional aspect of the brotherhood seems to have evolved into a more commercialised activity. The music that used to be played for religious trance rituals also became a proper profession.

Furthermore, in the twenty first century, ethnomusicology is given more space by researchers like Maisie Sum[37], Jean Pouchelon[38], but also Deborah Kapchan. In the past, very little attention was given to music itself in the analysis of musical processes and gesturing body in sacred ceremonies. Mostly, it was limited to brief or aesthetic descriptions of the instruments, melodies and percussions. Sum presents precisely and accurately the musical structure of the lîla rituals while also making herself understable to music amateurs : "Elements essential to Gnawa music include the evocative melodies of the guembri and entraining rhythm of the qraqab that continue in an unending series of pieces for up to an hour." Pouchelon, in his thesis, proposes a very complete description; from poetic analysis of the songs to dance choreographies, including a thorough description of the instruments as well as the different melodies and rhythms.

Through this paper we have seen that the study of the Moroccan Gnawa brotherhood has had different waves of limelight. Indeed, from the sixties and the seventies onwards, anthropological study began focusing on this specific guild. Pâques and Lapassade were pioneers in the anthropological and sociological description of the Gnawa rituals. Before the seventies, very little scholarly information was accessible on the Gnawa. There was however some research by Westermarck (1968) and also broad analyses on black brotherhoods in the Maghreb.

Thereupon, we focused on the place of historians in the research process on the Gnawa. Unfortunately, little place has been taken by historians, maybe as a result of the undocumented origins of the Gnawas. Not a lot of written sources are at our disposal and it is delicate to ask questions about the Gnawa's slave origins due to the ethical rejection of slavery by Islam. Furthermore, the Gnawas transmitted their history orally through their songs. They are the wardens of their history, hence the importance of anthropologists and sociologists in this field.

In a third and last part, I presented what we could name as the second wave of anthropological research. Developed mostly in the twenty-first century, the interest is centered on the Gnawa and their music in the global world. A distinction is made between the "authentic" Gnawas and the "show performing" (concerning the trance ritual as much as the music) Gnawas. Tradition and modernity are questioned.

There seems to have been an hindsight between the first generation and second generation of anthropologists and ethnomusicologists on the question of Gnawa; Gnawa rituals are less perceived as a distant and unknown pagan cult. Maybe Edward Said's Orientalism had something to do with it? Let's not forget that most of the researchers in this field are Westerners. Nonetheless, in the last decades, more scholars of Moroccan origins are studying the Gnawas, even if they remain westerners in their way of thinking and researching.

To put an end to this analysis of the interpretation of the Moroccan Gnawa brotherhood I would like to point out the lack of secondary sources on the muslim aspect of the brotherhood. I believe a deeper analysis of the importance of Islam for the Gnawa could beneficiate this field of research.

A Moroccan Kabbalist in the White House: Understanding the Relationship between Jared Kushner and Moroccan Jewish Mysticism

Aomar Boum

Few political pundits believed that Donald J. Trump would defeat a political giant like Hillary R. Clinton in the 2016 American elections. The mere image of Trump, a reality-television personality who found huge and unquestionable support among Christian evangelicals, in the White House excited derision in many liberal and conservative circles during the early days of the Republican nomination process. Like many, I had my doubts, although I also partly believed that Trump could win by riding the popular anger of many Americans, especially given his savvy populist messaging and familiarity with the television industry. Yet a number of Orthodox Jewish Moroccan informants with whom I spoke during and after the campaign never doubted that Trump would win the election. That the most significant Jewish support for Trump came from followers of the Shas Party in Israel, Chabad Lubavitch, and Orthodox and Hasidic Jews stirred my intellectual curiosity throughout both the primary and the national phases of the election. I wanted to understand why many Orthodox and ultra-Orthodox Moroccan Jews supported Trump as a candidate.

One of my Moroccan Jewish informants, Mordachai (informants' names are pseudonyms), a member of Shuva Israel (Return Israel; see below), noted that in Ashdod and other Moroccan ultra-Orthodox communities in Jerusalem it was widely believed that a miracle would cause Trump to win.[1] The popular opinion was that a well-respected rebbe had predicted Hillary Clinton's defeat.[2] In the end, the miracle of President Trump happened, and miracle-working rabbis associated with Jared Kushner, the president's Orthodox Jewish son-in-law, wasted no time claiming that they had had something to do with it. Rabbi David Pinto[3] and Rabbi Yoshiyahu Pinto,[4] two descendants of a long line of North African rabbis, are thought to have been among those miracle workers.[5] The Pinto Torah institutions are part of a global Jewish network led by members of the Pinto family to disseminate Torah in Israel (Ashdod and Jerusalem), France (Lyon and Paris), the United States (New York and Los Angeles), and Argentina (Buenos Aires).[6] Another of their followers, Yosef, told me that "the election of Trump does not only mean that there will be Shabbat candles every Friday night at the White House, but that Moroccan mystic kabbalists will bless the White House from Ashdod every Shabbat."[7]

On November 6, 2016, two days before the election, Ivanka Trump and Kushner, her husband, visited the Ohel, the grave of Menachem Mendel Schneerson located in the Old Montefiore Cemetery in Queens.[8] Since the unexpected death of the Lubavitcher rebbe in 1994, his grave has been a major destination for many Orthodox and ultra-Orthodox Jews, who come there seeking his blessing. Ivanka Trump converted to Orthodox Judaism before her marriage to Jared Kushner, and it is widely believed that she has maintained an Orthodox Jewish lifestyle since her conversion. In this short commentary essay, I reflect on the reasons that have driven Kushner, a Modern Orthodox American Jew, to seek a blessing at the Ohel without being an openly declared follower follower of the Lubavitch movement and its mystical version of Judaism and a believer that miracles happen through prayers mediated through a rebbe. I also discuss the larger religious context that makes it possible for a modern Jewish New Yorker like Kushner to believe in modern Jewish Orthodox theology and at the same time support Jewish mystics such as David Pinto, a descendant of Rabbi Haim Pinto of Essaouira, Morocco, in return for their blessings (see figure 1).[9] (I acknowledge that there is a historical tension and division among Ashkenazi and non-Ashkenazi Jews about secularism and belief in amulets and the power of tzaddiks, a clash that became obvious in the context of Israeli society.) Finally, I provide a tentative theoretical argument that helps us understand the comfortable attitude of Kushner and his family toward mystical folklore, folk magic, and beliefs that have long been ridiculed by Ashkenazi Jews as a phenomenon of the poor and "primitive" Jews of the Middle East, especially in the early years of Israel.

Between the early 1950s and the late 1970s, a large population of Moroccan Jews settled in Israeli development towns, or ayarot pituah (many originating as ma'abarot, transit or refugee camps). These communities brought with them their traditional beliefs and religious customs, including kabbalist and mystical rituals. Moroccan communities were strongly attached to the Zohar.[10] Moroccan and Ashkenazi Hasidic Jews have always been the largest group of pilgrims to the shrine of Rabbi Shimon Bar Yochai on Mount Meron, near Safed, and during the annual commemoration of his death, known as hilloula. Yoram Bilu posits that the contrasting cultural traditions of Moroccan and Hasidic Ashkenazi communities and their shared mystical beliefs make their gathering during the pilgrimage a Turnerian moment of "binding diversities" and "overcoming cleavages."[11] Aaron Tapper argues that one dramatic transformation of Hasidism as an Ashkenazi practice is its adoption by Moroccans, creating what is known as Moroccan Hasidism. Tapper notes that "during the twentieth century a Hasidic rabbi (who was Ashkenazi) named a Moroccan Jew his successor—thus birthing a new, non-Ashkenazi lineage of Hasidism."[12] It should be noted that despite their differences, North African beliefs and Hasidic hagiolatric traditions are imbricated in a complex of traditions that incorporate local and mystical teachings that Rabbi Isaac Luria preached throughout the Ottoman Empire. As a popular Jewish mystical tradition, Hasidism became one of the largest mystical movements. One of the most important aspects of both Moroccan and Hasidic Jewish traditions in terms of acceptance of religious beliefs is that they revolve around a charismatic figure. In addition, the intimate relationship with God is not only central but is the primary purpose of life.

In Israel, following years of discrimination and marginalization in politics and society, Moroccan Jews began to gain political relevance after they shifted their political allegiance and became regular voters for Likud beginning in 1977.[13] The founding of Shas in 1984, just before a Knesset election, was primarily a protest against meager Sephardi representation in Agudath Yisrael, which represented Orthodox Polish Jews before it became the party of Haredi Jews in Israel. Led by the Sephardi rabbi Ovadiah Yosef and also known as the Worldwide Sephardic Association of Torah Guardians, Shas was intended to be a counterweight to the Ashkenazi political and religious establishment. Shas also introduced its own government-funded network of religious schools, known as Ma'ayan Ha-hinukh Ha-torani (Wellspring of Torah Education), in 1988, to address the needs of Orthodox Israeli Sephardi families. Despite its early moderate views toward the Palestine-Israel conflict, Shas has shifted to the right not only in terms of settlements but also in its view of Zionism, which culminated with its joining the World Zionist Organization in 2010. In addition, members of the movement opted to internationalize their message, especially in the United States. In December 2011, an American affiliate group known as the American Friends of Shas was established in Brooklyn.[14]

Shas was able to mobilize and enlist thousands of poor and disenfranchised North African Jews for teshuvah, the return to strict religious practice.[15] Many schools and yeshivas started serving North African and Middle Eastern Israelis through governmental subsidies.

At the same time, intellectual and ritual exchanges began to take place between North African Shasniks and Orthodox Ashkenazis, including Hasidim. Ashkenazi Judaism in Israel began to benefit from the recruitment of Moroccan students, who were trained to adapt to European and American schools of Judaism and Zionism. It is in this context that Yoshiyahu Pinto emerged in Ashdod before moving to New York, where he fostered connections with Kushner's family.

Born in 1973, Yoshiyahu Pinto is the great-grandson of Israel Abuhatzeira[16] and a descendant of Haim Pinto,[17] making him the scion of two Moroccan rabbinic lines. Abuhatzeira, born in 1889 in Tafilalt, in southeastern Morocco, was believed to be a ba'al mofet, working miracles through prayer. After his death in 1984, his tomb in Netivot became one of the most important Jewish pilgrimage sites in Israel. Haim Pinto (1748–1845), also renowned for his miracles,[18] was a respected leader and venerated rabbinical judge in the Jewish community of the coastal city of Essaouira, where a synagogue still bears his name. Pinto's paternal descent is traceable to the sixteenth-century kabbalist Rabbi Haim Vital, a student of Isaac Luria. A four-day annual celebration of Haim Pinto, at his shrine (see figure 2), continues to attract thousands of Moroccan Jews from all over the world. Yet despite this Moroccan rabbinic heritage, Yoshiyahu Pinto veered away from Moroccan Jewish traditions and turned to Satmar Hasidism, one of the great Hungarian Hasidic sects that was all but destroyed by the Holocaust and reestablished in New York after World War II to become one of the largest Hasidic movements in the world. As a graduate of Haredi and Lithuanian yeshivas in Ashdod and Jerusalem,[19] Pinto, who is also a tsadik, became one of the most important rabbis of the American Israeli community. His rabbinical "brand" was linked to circles in Ashdod and New York, where he established many connections with Israeli and American political, business, and sports celebrities, including members of the Kushner family.

After he moved to New York, Pinto expanded his Ashdod yeshiva into a larger institutional network called Shuva Israel, which includes a network of Jewish institutions, yeshivas, synagogues, and community institutions. In Manhattan, Pinto gained numerous followers among members of the business community, who saw him as a "spiritual guide who makes wise judgments about business and the modern world, … advises them, endows them with 'energies,' and serves as a 'father figure,' along with giving their actions significance."[20] In the early stages of his residence in New York, Pinto mediated a multimillion-dollar business dispute between Charles Kushner, Jared's father, and his brother Murray Kushner. Pinto was also known to have offered services to many followers in the fields of business, politics, and sports, including the American professional basketball player Lebron James,[21] former Republican Congressman Michael Grimm, Israeli business magnate Yitzhak Tshuva, American entrepreneur Jay Schottenstein, Israeli businessman Nochi Dankner, and former Israeli foreign minister Tzipi Livni.

The veneration of a person like Yoshiyahu Pinto as a tsadik is not unusual among Jewish spiritualist traditions. However, it is rare to see Moroccan Jews breaking away from their own orthodox tradition of tsadikim to adopt versions deriving from Ashkenazi Hasidism. In North Africa, the celebration of Jewish saints takes place around the shrine of the deceased, whose spiritual power survives death. The Hasidic tsadik is a living pious man who "leads the community of adherents which assembles around him. The tsadik communicates with God through mysticism and can perform various miracles."[22] The tsadik bears the title admor (rabbi teacher), and charismatic authority is transferred from father to son over generations.

The relationship between Morocco and the Lubavitch movement began when Rabbi Menachem Mendel Schneerson sent his first emissary, Rabbi Michael Lipsker, to expand the movement among Moroccan Jewish communities in the 1950s.[23] The late King Hassan II (1929–99) allowed the movement to continue its services by maintaining networks of religious, educational, and charitable institutions in Morocco. In 1990, the Moroccan ambassador to the United Nations was received by Schneerson, who prayed for Hassan II's health in recognition of his support for Lubavitch institutions in Morocco. Today, images of the Lubavitcher rebbe are widely circulated among Jewish communities in Morocco. Though they maintain many cultural aspects of Moroccan Judaism, Moroccan Jews have also been influenced by Chabad to adopt Hasidic hats (borsalinos) and long coats (kapotot/kapotes). Furthermore, Moroccan Jewish thought shares certain beliefs with Chabad, in particular the concept of the rebbe as a miracle worker. Pinto, however, illustrates a more complex transformation within some circles of Moroccan Jews over the last decades, largely due to their interaction with Hasidism and other Ashkenazi schools of thought.

The European Ashkenazi community in Israel and the United States accepted Pinto because he appropriated and combined European and North African Jewish traditions, merging them into a kind of North African Ashkenazi Orthodox Hasidic Judaism. The Chevrot Pinto study center in the Upper West Side has received an annual contribution of between $10,000 and $50,000 from the Kushner Family Foundation since 2004. The Marisa and Richard Stadtmauer Family Foundation, run by Jared Kushner's aunt and uncle, has also donated about $529,000 to Pinto's institutions since 2009. These charitable connections highlight larger transformations and globalized networks underlying Jewish experiences in a secular world. The blending of Moroccan mystical beliefs, Hasidic rituals, and Lithuanian Orthodoxy has allowed Pinto's ministry to appeal to Jews in Israel and the United States.

According to Bilu, the interest in miracle-working rabbis among wealthy and politically minded Jews reflects a broad transformation among secular and religious people, who consult charismatic figures on personal issues. The casual visit and monetary donation to the rebbe provide people like Jared Kushner with an "instant redemption." [24] Equally important, Bilu contends, is the marketing of the rebbe as a miracle worker with supernatural powers, which are linked to a larger social and political anxiety in modern Israeli and American society, where politicians and business people "operate in a very stressful, unpredictable environment, and the whole society is in a permanent state of emergency."[25] At the same time, the broad support for Trump among Orthodox Jewish voters is widely linked to the powerful image of the strong leader and savior, which dominates Jewish communal belief. According to Yosef, my informant on Pinto, "Jews do not need to check if Trump's assertions are trustworthy or not, just like the rebbe's followers would never question his direct relationship to God. It is a matter of faith."[26] "How do you explain the support for Trump among Hasidic Jews?" I asked during a Skype exchange. With no hesitation, Yosef proceeded, "Trump has been blessed by our spiritual leaders. He might not be Jewish, but the fact that his daughter and her husband are Jewish is enough for us to trust that he will be surrounded with and blessed by the spiritual guidance of the rebbe." Weeks after the election, I asked Yosef to explain the rise of antisemitic incidents within the United States. Yosef did not show any concern over anti-Jewish incidents, claiming that when bad people have tried to hurt Jews in the past, miracle workers have ended up defeating them. "If Trump could win over the most powerful established bureaucracies," he stated, "the rebbe would not allow the powers of antisemitism to hurt Jews as well."

In his work on saint reverence among the Jews of Aleppo in Jerusalem in the early 1960s, Walter Zenner argued that belief in what William James called "piecemeal supernaturalism," according to which "the supernatural, or the divine, produces immediate effects in the natural world,"[27] among Hasidic and Sephardi Jews dominated Israelis' image of non-European Jews; even secularized Sephardim were prone to piecemeal supernaturalism.[28] The fact that many believers felt embarrassment and skepticism about these religious traditions, Zenner concluded, indicated that Sephardi supernatural mysticism was in decline.

Support for Trump among Orthodox and ultra-Orthodox Jews demonstrates the relevance of Jewish mysticism in the 2016 election. The election of Donald Trump was due in part to broad international support among Orthodox Jewish communities influenced by a growing body of spiritual leaders who can call on their followers to cast their votes for the politicians they believe promise a better financial and spiritual world. Our efforts to make sense of this phenomenon might usefully begin from a sense that people seek religious counseling to meet psychological needs in times of suffering and misfortune. The Kushner family's reliance on Jewish charismatics and kabbalists like Pinto may be a manifestation of this Weberian salvation: Pinto is "believed to possess supernatural abilities, such as the power to bless, to work miracles, to observe the invisible, and to predict the future."[29] The authoritative status and charismatic role of the tsadik is especially significant in times when people believe that the world is chaotic and in dire need of ordering.

During my conversations with many Moroccan Jewish followers and supporters of Pinto and Trump about the 2016 election, I was introduced to numerous examples of the mystical powers of David Pinto.

For instance, an informant named Moshe told me that Pinto played a key role in Ivanka Trump's marriage to Jared Kushner, after the couple struggled in the early years of their relationships. Ivanka maintained a close relationship with Pinto and adhered to Orthodox Jewish rules. In addition, during the early weeks of the general-election campaign, it was reported that Jared Kushner sought the advice of David Pinto in New York, as Donald Trump's campaign was struggling. Rabbi Pinto advised him to replace Corey Lewandowski as Trump's campaign manager; Lewandowski was fired and replaced by Kellyanne Conway.[30]

However, though many of Pinto's followers highlighted the Pinto-Kushner relationship, they were silent about a meeting between Hillary Clinton and Pinto that Pinto acknowledged in 2014. According to Kooker, a Haredi online newspaper, the former first lady had heard of Pinto and his miracles and paid a surprise visit to his home. Pinto described the encounter in his own words:

> I stood up and paced around the room and thought surely I would bless her, but why did she really come to me for blessings, as a Jewish rabbi? I asked her: "How do you want the blessings, orally or in writing?" She replied: "both orally and written so I will be able to preserve the written blessing." I did so and said, "May you have high standing in the White House, and you shall love the [people] of Israel [i.e. the Jews] and protect them."[31]

In 2014, Yoshiyahu Pinto was convicted and sentenced to a year in prison for bribery. Yet neither his stature nor the stature of other Pinto-family rabbis in France, Israel, the United States, or Argentina have been significantly damaged. For many Hasidic Moroccan Orthodox Jews, Trump and Pinto are strong political and moral leaders, regardless of any political lapses. If anything, these lapses ensure greater fervor and counterinterpretation of facts among believers. Just as Trump promises miraculous solutions to a perceived broken and failing society, Pinto not only foresees these miracles but is believed to be a force that will make them happen.

As a child growing up in southeastern Morocco, I was taught like many other local children to believe in the power of saints to save individuals and communities. In the 1970s, there were at least six shrines just in my village; one of them was believed to be to a Jewish saint. As children, we were cautioned never to disturb the shrine or desecrate it for fear of being punished or inflicting damage on the community. My mother once told me that Jewish saints could intervene for the purpose of making the world a better place and protecting children from disease and death. As my work on the Jews of southern Morocco has shown,[32] the power of saints is believed to be central to the protection and safety of local Jewish communities. This belief has remained an integral part of Moroccan Judaism today. One of the most poignant dimensions of the Pinto-Kushner-Clinton story is not only the globalization of Moroccan Jewish mysticism but also its growing connections to neoliberal capitalist networks and political establishments. The story of Pinto's family and its religious connections to Moroccan, Israeli, and now American politics highlights this globalization of a localized North African brand of Jewish mysticism from Essaouira to Ashdod and finally to New York.

Affaire Epstein: Ghislaine Maxwell, la dérive perverse d’une riche héritière

Par Adrien Jaulmes
Publié le 29/11/2021 à 19:48, mis à jour hier à 09:30

Ghislaine Maxwell (ici, en janvier 2015, à New York) a été arrêtée par le FBI l'été dernier dans une luxueuse propriété du New Hampshire, où elle vivait discrètement depuis la mort du milliardaire et prédateur sexuel Jeffrey Epstein. New York Daily News Archive/NY Daily News via Getty Images

GRAND RÉCIT - La fille du magnat des médias Robert Maxwell comparaît depuis lundi pour complicité avec son ex-compagnon Jeffrey Epstein, qui s'est suicidé dans sa cellule en 2019. Elle est accusée d'avoir été la perfide rabatteuse du financier pédocriminel.

Correspondant à Washington

Le procès de Ghislaine Maxwell, qui s'est ouvert lundi à New York, possède tous les ingrédients d'un bon feuilleton télévisé: des abus sexuels sur mineures, de l'argent et des célébrités, le tout assaisonné de quelques thèses complotistes.

Mais le procès n'est pas seulement celui de cette ancienne mondaine londonienne et new-yorkaise, habituée des avions privés et des résidences de luxe, membre du petit univers international des grandes fortunes et de la politique. Il est aussi celui, posthume, de son ancien compagnon, à la fois amant et employeur, le milliardaire et prédateur sexuel Jeffrey Epstein, retrouvé pendu dans sa cellule dans une prison de Manhattan le 10 août 2019. Le procès de ce dernier n'a jamais pu avoir lieu. Son fantôme risque cependant d'être présent à côté de Maxwell. Le monumental tribunal Thurgood Marshall, en plein Manhattan, à quelques rues de la prison où Epstein avait été retrouvé mort, a déjà accueilli plusieurs procès célèbres, comme celui

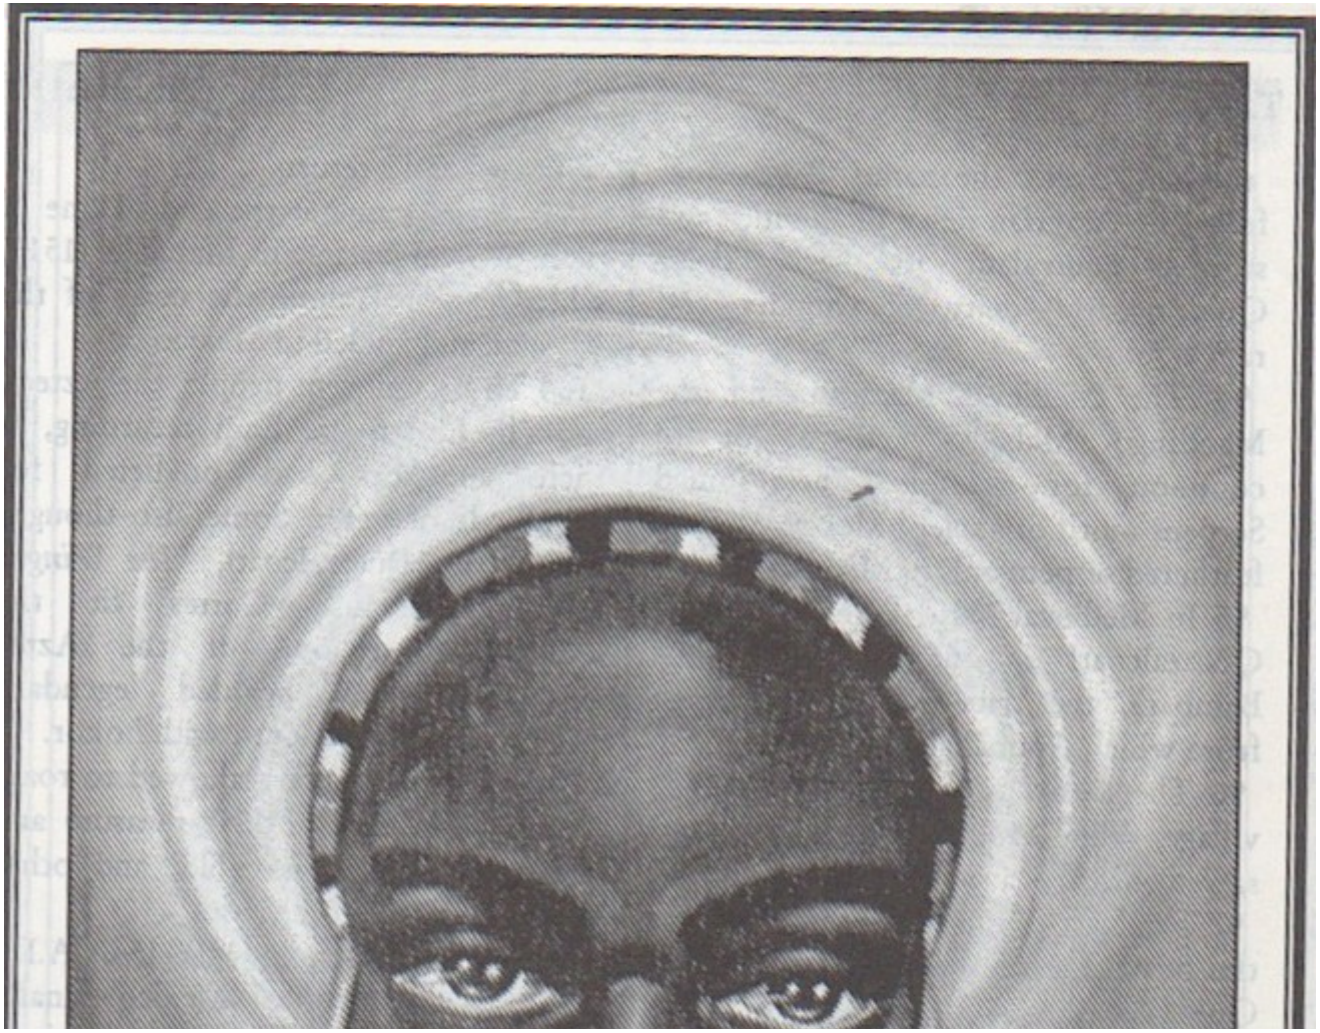
The African History November 10, 2020 History, Personality Profile



Share Messenger Whatsapp Tweet Like 451K

The Italian sailor / explorer Christopher Columbus has a renowned reputation as the discoverer of the new world in every simple history lesson. This has been globally recognized for over 500 years to date. Education has been in the possession of Europeans, who many believe have imposed what has enriched them while scorning or changing what has not been done.

As the waves of awareness begin to spread, several “European” expeditions have now seen their acclaimed achievements with doubt. One of those expeditions is the true ownership to the discovery of America.

Two large journeys across the Atlantic Ocean preceding the Columbus, referencing the book written by the renowned Egyptian scholar, Ibn Fadi Al-Umari, in 1342. One man, Abubakari, or to give him his full title, Mansa (King) Abubakari II, pioneered both expeditions.

Abu Bakari, Brother Of Mansa Musa

The general conception was at the time of the Malian Empire that the end of the world was at the other end of the Atlantic. From the then primitive Europe this delusion took hold. On the other side, Abubakari was far from convinced. The Atlantic Ocean must stop as the population lives along its banks if the Niger begins and stops. He also thought that this could be Mecca's sea root.

Abubakari sent 200 ships out with the search for information burning in him. Their obligation was to sail across the Atlantic, in order to find out what lay beyond. Just one of the ships returned, it was stated. When he saw the other ships vanish into the wild seas, his captain claimed to have turned around.

Abubakari wasn't convinced by the testimony of the captain. This further intensified his desire to find out what was lying on the other side of the ocean.

In Abubakari's time, Mali was a center of excellence in the 13th century, while it reached its height after its age when Timbuktu had the second oldest university at that time with more students than the University of New York.

In Timbuktu, courses such as mathematics, geography , history, astronomy, chemistry and Islamic studies had flourished. Mali was also a trading center, an exact place to meet anyone who made the world spin.

Abubakari designed ships off the coast of Senegambia with the assistance of ship builders from Egypt and Mali. In number, his ships were 2000. He was supposed to use it to explore the end of the ocean. Abubakari had been no coward. He requested that the ships be escorted across the ocean.

In 1311, Abubakari abdicated his throne to Mansa Musa. Not his son (especially in comparison to contemporary literature). Abubakari equipped the finest men, sorcerers, doctors, sailors, and navigators with 1000 of his ships. Every ship was attached to a supply ship. The number of ships amounted to 2000.

In order to last his team for 2 years, the other 1000 ships were filled with food, medicines, fruit and drinks. Abubakari was thought to have arrived in the year 1312 at the other end of the Atlantic. As the Malians renamed places after themselves, evidence of the Malian expedition can be noted in the names given to places in Haiti. Mandinga Port, Mandinga Bay and Sierre de Mali are examples of this.

A lot of other facts abounds and even more continue to unfold. There is also a folktale from Mali that gives reference to this great exploration.

How could this in Abubakari ‘s time be possible? The Atlantic is controlled from a scientific point of view by 2 currents, which typically remain the same regardless of month or season. These are the Canary Current and the Guinea Current. They both have currents that are strong enough to drag a ship from the West African coast to the Americas. You see the signs of a Negroid presence in the Americas at the end of these currents.

Therefore, Columbus would be accused of using similar knowledge of the currents of the Atlantic to sail across to the Americas. This could only have been possible with the assistance of someone who was familiar with the road. Therefore, it is more credible to speculate that Columbus was accompanied by an African, Pedro Alonso Nino, who helped him navigate the Atlantic. The fact that Columbus reported seeing blacks in America must be made clear.

Pedro Alonso Nino | Pinterest

He also documented seeing a mosque-like building. The Malians were Muslims and there is also a chance that Malians may have erected the mosque. Columbus also reported seeing a ship loaded with goods just leaving the Guinean coast and heading toward America.

In addition to the above, the words of Mansa Musa, the successor to the throne, are another evidence of this voyage. Upon his arrival in Egypt, it was clear that the Egyptians were awaiting the Hajj to see Abubakari. Mansa Musa was quoted while arriving in Egypt as describing how the throne of Mali ascended. Again, citing the manner in which King Abubakari gave up his throne to contribute to worldwide understanding. A trait lacking in the African rulers of today.

Thus, the presence of the Malians on American soil may be the cause, to name a few, for the presence of African crops such as banana plants and mango.

For all black educators, this incredible history of Abubakari ‘s adventure should be a great area of interest, particularly in rewriting world history that has concentrated on enforcing Eurocentric perspectives. Anything short of this will rob not only the black youth of true heritage, but the entire world.

Prior to drawing the curtains, we must add that this article is not intended to scorn Columbus. To date, Columbus ranks among the greatest explorers of all time. Christopher Columbus was fine, but King Abubakari II was responsible for the discovery of the Americas.

Город Бенин, столица государства, был окружен высоким земляным валом и глубоким рвом, опоясывавшими территорию довольно правильной прямоугольной формы, шириною около пяти километров. Через весь город, от одних городских ворот к другим, тянулись пересекавшиеся под прямым углом широкие, прямые улицы, обрамленные аккуратными рядами домов характерного архитектурного стиля. Дома эти строились из местного краснозема. Их внутренние стены образовывали открытый прямоугольный внутренний двор, посредине которого находилась впадина для стока воды в период обильных дождей. Кровля дома из пальмовых листьев со всех сторон нависала над двором, образуя своеобразную открытую веранду.

занимаемой владельцем дома. Среди божеств Бенина были главный бог, бог моря, бог железа, бог медицины, бог смерти, богиня плодородия и бог пророчества.

Индивидуальный характер религии бини выражался в том, что в каждом доме имелся алтарь, посвященный духам предков хозяина дома, с которыми советовались и которых глубоко почитали; чтобы умилостивить этих духов, совершались ежедневные обряды.

Чем влиятельнее был человек, тем обширнее был его дом. Например, жилище крупного сановника могло состоять из целого ряда зданий, обнесенных одной стеной, но всегда выстроенных по единому плану. Дворец оба, стоявший особняком от остальных домов, был самым большим и сложным зданием во всем городе. Он состоял из нескольких очень больших внутренних дворов, окруженных высокими стенами и галереями. В каждый двор вели ворота с высокой двускатной крышей, крытой дранкой и увенчанной большим бронзовым изображением змеи.

В помещениях, расположенных вокруг дворов, жили придворные чиновники, слуги и стража, охранявшая оба. Вокруг одного из дворов были расположены конюшни для царских лошадей, а в центре дворца находились недосягаемые для большинства посетителей покои оба и комнаты, где размещался его гарем. Значительное место во дворце занимали многочисленные святилища и алтари для совершения обрядов в честь богов и предков царя. Они были пышно украшены резными слоновыми бивнями и великолепно выполненными головами и фигурами из бронзы. Бронзовые барельефы, рассказывавшие о подвигах царей и героев, украшали также деревянные стены и колонны дворца.

Производство изделий из бронзы и железа, резьба по слоновой кости и дереву, обработка кожи, ткачество — все эти и многие иные ремесла были монополией специалистов, объединенных в высокоорганизованные цехи, каждый из которых располагался на отдельной улице. Цех имел свою особую иерархию званий, свою систему обучения и собственное общинное святилище. Некоторые из них, особенно цехи литейщиков и резчиков по кости, работали почти исключительно на оба и нескольких важных сановников. Таким образом, значительная часть населения города Бенина обслуживала нужды дворца.

Основой экономики Бенина являлись тяжелые налоги, которые оба взимал с подданных; кроме того, высокоцентрализованное управление требовало непрерывного притока рабов. Потребность в рабах, так же как и стремление к расширению государственных границ, была причиной постоянных войн Бенина с его соседями. Путем военной экспансии Бенин достиг вершины своего могущества. Еще в XVI веке оба сами возглавляли войско и руководили военными действиями. Позднее оба более строго соблюдали правило, предписывавшее им лишь в редчайших случаях покидать стены дворца, и ведение войны перешло в руки вельмож.

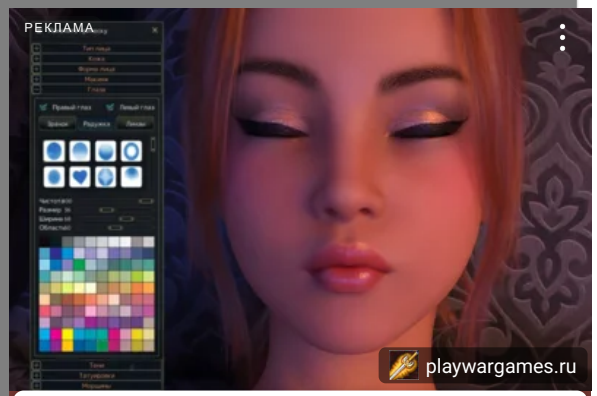
Бенинские воины, изображенные в бронзовой скульптуре, вооружены мечами, копьями и щитами. В начале XVI века один сильно теснимый врагами оба, поддавшись соблазну добыть огнестрельное оружие, направил своих послов в Португалию. Но так как папа запрещал католикам снабжать оружием неверных, оба был вынужден допустить в Бенин христианских миссионеров. В короткое время различным католическим миссиям, по-видимому, удалось обратить в христианство царевичей и сыновей вельмож и даже начать строительство церкви. Но потом оба либо перестал испытывать нужду в португальском оружии, либо начал опасаться, что переход к новой религии может подорвать веру в его сверхъестественную силу; во всяком случае, миссионеры были вынуждены покинуть Бенин.



Следует отметить, что период наибольшей экспансии Бенина совпадает с использованием португальского огнестрельного оружия в годы царствования Озолуа, Эсиге и Орхоба. Озолуа захватил обширные территории в районах Агбор, Кукуруку, Ора и Экити. Армия оба заняла такие отдаленные друг от друга пункты, как Идах, Лагос, Акотогбо, Икале и Агенебоде и подчинила эти области Бенину. Из сообщений португальских миссионеров известно, что они сопровождали оба в походе во время войны с Идахом в 1515—1516 годах. Группы бенинских эмигрантов, бежавших от притеснений на родине, селились в различных местах Южной Нигерии. Например, королевство Варри было основано бенинским царевичем Гинува во время царствования оба Олуа. Согласно бенинским преданиям, некоторые поселения в дельте Нигера и стране Урхобо были также основаны переселенцами из Бенина.

В течение ста лет после прихода первых европейцев к португальским торговцам присоединились французы, англичане и голландцы, скупавшие тысячи рабов для американских плантаций, перец и слоновую кость. Стремление оба удовлетворить растущий спрос невольничьего рынка и конкуренция со стороны других государств Западной Африки привели, по-видимому, к тому, что в конце XVI века могущество Бенина стало клониться к упадку. Безусловно, это сказалось и в вырождении искусства, о чем можно судить по резко ухудшившемуся качеству изделий из бронзы. Да и сам город не раз превращался в руины в результате гражданских войн.

Хотя могущество Бенина, по-видимому, заметно ослабело в последнее столетие его независимости, он сумел сохранить почти в нетронутом виде древние обычаи и культуру вплоть до своего окончательного падения. Эти обычаи и культура заслуживают внимательного изучения, ибо они подробно повествуют о самобытной цивилизации народов тропической Африки, которые, несмотря на неблагоприятные условия природного окружения, создали развитый политический и социальный строй, основанный на власти царя-жреца, чье господство распространялось на обширные территории. Эта культура заслуживает нашего внимания и потому, что лучшие произведения мастеров Бенина являются вдохновенным воплощением тех духовных ценностей, на которые опиралась их цивилизация.

Africa in the Reinvention of Nineteenth-Century Afro-Bahian Identity

KIM D. BUTLER

Over the course of the nineteenth century, the history of the capital city of Salvador was inextricably bound to dramatic demographic shifts in its Afro-Bahian population. West Africa, particularly the Bight of Benin, played a unique role in Salvador's history during this period. It was the source of a massive influx of captives early in the century that reinvigorated African-based nações (ethnic 'nations'). Out of these nações came the major slave-conspiracy of Islamic Africans in 1835, and the rebirth of new adaptations of religious traditions known collectively as Candomblé. Africa took on deep symbolic meaning by mid-century for both elites and the enslaved. For elites, Africa represented an 'other' against which a new national identity took shape as Brazil moved towards autonomy from Portugal and, eventually, an independent republic. For the enslaved, Africa became reference and authenticator for new identities as they moved into the rapidly growing free population of colour. The symbolic role of Africa in the shaping of new Bahian identities crystallized by the turn of the twentieth century, despite decreasing personal contacts between the two coasts, and the virtual disappearance of African-born persons in the capital's population.

This article examines how Africa was used by Bahians in the negotiation of power and prerogative that accompanied the dismantling of slavery. It points out that reality and historical accuracy were at times less important than the strategic manipulation of Africa as symbol and signifier. Focusing on the Afro-Bahian uses of Africa, it traces the processes by which Africa became the source of new post-emancipation identities. This was not the case elsewhere in Brazil, where new identities centred on colour and race rather than a distinct African cultural heritage.

In Bahia, Candomblé became an important vehicle and metaphor for shifting sociocultural relationships in the nineteenth century. By the turn of the twentieth century, Candomblé had gone from insular communities based on nação-specific African retentions, to a reinvented and institutionalized form. The leaders of the modern Candomblé proclaimed themselves to be preservers of authentic African traditions, especially those of the Ketu/Yoruba. Yet contemporary Candomblé did not result simply from direct African retentions, as is often portrayed by adherents and scholars alike. Rather, it may be better understood as a series of renegotiations of social power both in Brazil and in Africa. In Brazil it also served as an expression of self-determination in the post-abolition era. Through Candomblé, Afro-Brazilians claimed their right to embrace African culture despite overwhelming pressures from the elite to move towards cultural and genetic 'whitening', part of Brazil's prescription for its progress into modern civilization.

Africa and the Shaping of Elite Identity

Beginning in the eighteenth century, the rise of Positivism and the prospect of national independence led Brazilian elites into an extended and unsparing era of self-criticism and recommendations for improving Brazil's prospects for joining the international community of progressive societies. The intellectual currents of Positivism, social Darwinism, environmental and biological determinism, and Freemasonry flowed into Brazil to ignite the imaginations of its upper classes, primarily through the vehicle of fraternal organizations known as 'academias' and, later, Masonic lodges.[1] Two elements of European intellectualism particularly interested Brazilians. The first was an integrated theory of natural sciences permitting greater control and utilization of the physical environment. Brazilians had become acutely aware of the wealth of their vast land and its potential for development. Second, these new sciences dethroned divine agency, thus offering justification for creole elites to envision themselves in leadership roles. These two dimensions became critical components of an incipient republican nationalism in Brazil, as in other Latin American nations.

There was, however, an inescapable third component that held ominous implications for Brazil's elites. The evolutionary notion of progress maintained that humankind was progressing from African primitivism to European civility. Related to this was the concept of biological and environmental determinism, which held that the natural environment played a significant role in shaping distinct 'types' of people. By those standards, a predominantly mestizo (mixed-race) nation in the tropics could never hope for admission to the community of modern civilizations. Rubbing salt into the wounds of the elite's inferiority crisis, Count Arthur de Gobineau, French ambassador to Brazil and one of the most vocal advocates of social Darwinism, publicly dismissed Brazil as a backward nation. In 1869, he described Brazilians as 'a completely mulatto population, of polluted blood and spirit, and frighteningly ugly'. Noting that 'not a single Brazilian is of pure blood', he concluded that 'all this has produced, from the lower to the upper classes, a most sad state of degeneration'.[2] Such public ridicule exacerbated a crisis of national identity and a preoccupation with the prospect of social engineering in order to produce a population conducive to Brazilian progress as defined by European standards.

Optimism and faith in their power to change society marked the Brazilian elite's social philosophy of the nineteenth century. One of the hallmarks of Brazilian national identity was its conceptualization as a dynamic process subject to change, and not a fixed reality. Most contemporary writers referred to Brazilians as a people still in the formative stage, which implied that actions could yet be taken to direct the nation's evolutionary development.

These ideological trends resonated especially deeply in Bahia, where all indicators seemed to bear out the damning implications of being a tropical nation peopled overwhelmingly by descendants of the 'darker races'. Bahia, once the political and economic centre of Brazil, was rapidly sinking to backwater status with the concentration of government in Rio and the rise of the coffee and industrial barons in the central and southern provinces. The late eighteenth-century revival of the sugar industry, which lasted until the early 1820s, had led to a massive influx of African slaves who now constituted the majority of Bahia's population. The white population of the capital and the surrounding sugar zone was estimated at one-third of the total in 1798, but it had declined to 22 per cent by 1824.[3] To make matters worse for slaveholders, the newly arrived Africans were especially prone to organized revolts. A major conspiracy in 1807 was followed by numerous others, the most threatening of which was the attempted revolt of the Malês in 1835, led by slaves from the Bight of Benin.[4]

The official response to the uncovered conspiracy of 1835 revealed the shift amongst Bahian elites towards a perception of Africans and Africanisms as an encroaching presence in Bahian culture. Bahian historian João Reis notes the remarkable extent to which

> Africans and their cultures challenged the world-view, the daily habits, and even the psychological stability of many Bahians. The so-called African customs, which before had seemed so typically Bahian, suddenly emerge in the documents as alien and subversive and in need of prohibition and, if possible, extinction.[5]

Throughout the nineteenth century, and into the early twentieth century, Bahia's elites aimed to purge themselves of the African elements of Bahian cultural life. A record number of passports were issued to Africans 'returning' to the Bight of Benin in the wake of the 1835 revolt, and hundreds more made the journey until the early twentieth century.[6] However, in Bahia, the drive towards embranquecimento ('whitening') was articulated largely along cultural lines. The most notable fronts of these culture wars were popular festivals and the sites of worship for the Afro-Brazilian houses of Candomblé. The image of Africa, as well as African people themselves, became the 'other' against which Bahian elite identity shaped itself.

Candomblé presented a conundrum for those who wished to remove manifestations of African culture from Bahia. Long after the abolition of slavery and the precipitous decline of the African-born population, candomblés were providing an infrastructure for the re-creation of African identity. Raymundo Nina Rodrigues, a pioneer in Afro-Brazilian studies, documented a religious community in the 1890s that was flourishing despite decades of prohibition and police persecution. Banned instruments, songs, and vestments of Candomblé hung on with remarkable tenacity, appearing at Catholic festivals such as the Lavagem do Bomfim, popular festivals such as Carnaval, and public spaces such as the Elevador Lacerda.[7] By the 1990s, 100 years after Nina Rodrigues' observations, African-based culture had become Bahia's public persona and a central feature of its tourism industry. This article takes a closer look at how Afro-Bahians used Candomblé and, by extension, the image and concept of Africa, as an instrument of self-determination struggles in the African diaspora.

The Evolution of Nações

As late as the nineteenth century, the African community in Bahia was subdivided into ethnic groups known as nações, based on regions of origin in Africa. Other bases of identity played important roles in shaping Bahia's cultural landscape: Brazilian nationality vis-à-vis Africans or Europeans, colour distinctions between browns and blacks, and varying levels of acculturation all informed social and organizational life. Yet within the African-born community, nações were a primary basis of identity.[8] Although nominally specific, Afro-Brazilian nações were, in fact, regional clusters of people. The most prominent of these during the height of the Bight of Benin trade were Jêjes (Ewe/Fon), Nagôs (Yoruba), Tapas (Nupes), and Hausas, although Bahia also had a sizeable Central African contingent throughout the history of slavery.[9] It is important to recognize that the Brazilian incarnation of nações did not represent simple transfers paralleling African cultures. One of the oldest surviving Jêje communities, the Zoogodo Bogum Malê Rundo, describes its early composition as 'Fon (Jêje) peoples of old Dahomey, now the Republic of Benin, descendants of the cities of Mahis and Dassa', acknowledging that Jêjes were, in fact, a collective of people of distinct African origins.[10] Yoruba-speakers sometimes organized themselves along kingdom-specific lines, as exemplified by the Boa Morte sodality, which restricted its membership to people from Ketu.[11]

The Bight of Benin trade to Bahia created a confluence of two patterns of cultural reorganization in the diaspora. African diaspora communities tended towards ethnic insularity as long as they continued to be replenished with new arrivals but, once the slave-trade ended, they moved towards more pan-ethnic identities.[12] In Bahia, the influx of Africans from the Bight of Benin in the late eighteenth and early nineteenth centuries sharpened the articulation of West African nações within the slave community at a time when they might otherwise have been moving towards diffusion. Their experience may be contrasted with that of Central Africans. Early in the nineteenth century, some organizations continued to use the appellation 'Angola', but distinct nação identifications were less common in Salvador than in cities where the slave-trade continued to bring in new arrivals from Central Africa. One such city was Rio de Janeiro, where specific nação references such as Ambaca, Cabundá (Mbundu), Cassange, Loanda, Quissama, and Rebolo appeared in contemporary documents.[13] Thus, in Bahia, a 'new African' community dominated by young people from the Bight of Benin coexisted with an older African–Bahian population that was moving towards increased creolization. Of interest here is that, in Salvador, nações remained an integral part of Afro-Bahian identity in the early-nineteenth century, but their relevance was disproportionately centred on West African identities.

Nacões ultimately went from the imposed identities of enslavement to the assumed identities of diaspora. Diasporan identities involve ethno-nationalism of communities whose territories have little to do with physical space. This detachment allows for a remarkable tenacity depending on how that nation is constructed in the diasporan mind. The story of Ketu illustrates this point. Caught between the warring empires of Dahomey and Oyo in the nineteenth century, the kingdom of Ketu was eventually destroyed in 1885.[14] Yet the nação of Ketu in Salvador survived and flourished. The concept of belonging to the 'nation' of Ketu had undergone a fundamental shift in the diaspora. Whereas nações denoted an individual's approximate region of origin in Africa at the start of the nineteenth century, by the end of that century nação identity had come to indicate religious affiliation independent of actual birthplace. The salience of the religious component of nacão identity was especially significant, and was influenced in part by ongoing events in Africa. At the time of the Bight of Benin trade, conversion to Islam had begun to dissociate religion from cultural heritage. A Nagô in Bahia could thus be Muslim, Catholic, animist, or a follower of a combination of several spiritual traditions. As evident in the emergence of the Malês as a nação category, religion became increasingly important in reconceptualizing Afro-Bahian 'nationality'. This paved the way for nações to reorganize on the basis of religion as opposed to birthplace, which, in turn, helped to enable candomblés to survive. Candomblés became the primary vehicle for the continuity of Africanisms as a vital part of Bahian culture.

The Reinvention of Bahian Candomblé

In the latter half of the nineteenth century, Bahian Candomblé moved from what I have termed its 'African' phase to its modern Brazilian form. In its earliest incarnation, 'African' candomblés reflected the variations of remembered traditions as transferred by the individual members of specific communities. This was the essence of the nação. 'Brazilian' candomblés, on the other hand, were not the simple accumulation of cultural practices inherited from the days of slavery. They were characterized by a transition from predominantly African to predominantly Brazilian membership, and reflected the conscious choice of the Brazilian-born to maintain African culture as a source of moral and spiritual support.

The pivotal impetus for the change in Candomblé was the cessation of the transatlantic slave-trade and, with it, new arrivals to revitalize African traditions practised in Salvador. Once the trade ended, religious communities became the principal repositories of African cultural traditions. What enabled them to flourish was the fact that Candomblé provided an institutional basis for African-based culture and, thereby, continuity and formalization of its cultural components.

The establishment of the Ilê Iyá Nassô spiritual community around 1830 serves as a convenient marker for the beginning of Candomblé's shift to its modern form, although, in its earliest years, it was most likely typical of contemporary nação groups.[15] Known also as Engenho Velho or Casa Branca, it was a candomblé founded and led by women who assumed the mission of faithfully recreating, in a modern Brazilian capital, the traditions of the African nation of Ketu. Their focus on institution-building eventually established 'standard' elements of Candomblé by which others were measured, and which were imitated to varying degrees throughout Salvador.

Although Engenho Velho (one of the names by which the Ilê Iyá Nassô was popularly known) was the pioneer of this phase of Candomblé history, two offshoot congregations, Gantois and Opô Afonjá, influenced to an even greater degree the changes occurring in Candomblé as it moved into the twentieth century. They institutionalized modern forms of 'Ketu' Candomblé, based upon the traditions established at Engenho Velho. Though there are conflicting accounts of its early history, it appears that Engenho Velho was founded by African-born women from the nation of Ketu, perhaps with the assistance of a man named Baba Assiká. It is likely that the women were also members of the Boa Morte sisterhood, based in the Barroquinha parish church, one of hundreds of lay Catholic confraternities, and the only form of association to which Africans could legally belong until the late nineteenth century. The candomblé first functioned near this site.[16] Important elements in this history have yet to be clarified, such as the date(s) of their departure from Ketu, and whether the founders were free or enslaved.

It should be noted here that although the traditions set forth by the three principal Nagô houses (Engenho Velho, Gantois and Opô Afonjá) are popularly called 'Ketu', the priestesses of Gantois claim a blood lineage directly from Abeokuta, founded around 1830 by predominantly Egba and Owu peoples. Also, the name of Opô Afonjá suggests a link with Afonjá, an Oyo dissident who led the unsuccessful mutiny that touched off the Islamic jihad and the eventual destruction of Oyo Ilê.[17] The naming of a specific set of cultural practices as Ketu despite these references to other peoples and places suggests that the evolution of nação identity in Bahia followed principles other than actual state-formation on the African continent.

Other candomblés surfaced and flourished in the late nineteenth century. The Ketu house of Alaketu and the Jêje house of Bogum claim origins dating as far back as the seventeenth century. Houses from other traditions, including Kongo-Angola (Central African) and the candomblé do caboclo (syncretized with indigenous spirits), also became established and grew stronger towards the end of the nineteenth century and continuing into the twentieth. There were still a few Muslim congregations when Nina Rodrigues did his research, although their influence was limited. However, none engaged in as ambitious an effort to reinterpret African tradition in a Brazilian context as did the houses of Engenho Velho, Gantois and Opô Afonjá.

The degree to which Engenho Velho departed from earlier practices is unclear. The religious ritual itself, a matter restricted to the initiated priesthood, will not be discussed in detail here, but some features of the cultural transfer and reinterpretation are important to note. As senior priestesses, women were to play a pivotal role in the reshaping of Bahian Candomblé. Women's command of administrative and ritual power within the pre-eminent Candomblé houses established the perception in Salvador that the priesthood was traditionally women's domain. In Engenho Velho, the highest administrative and religious office was that of the Iyalorixa, who was assisted by several titled officers in the Candomblé hierarchy. These were lifelong positions restricted to women, and subject to confirmation through the Ifá divination system. Women's influence was further strengthened by their financial autonomy. African women had access to cash through their work as vendors and traders; domestic workers sometimes received gifts of jewellery, which could be pawned. Successful black businesswomen parlayed their resources into positions of philanthropy and patronage of Afro-Brazilian religious institutions, both Catholic and Candomblé. The women who secured the land for the three leading terreiros ensured themselves an institutional base for their own power and, because of their influence, set standards copied by other terreiros. Although men headed Candomblé houses, were initiated for possession rituals, and retained the exclusivity of the role of babalawô (Ifá diviner), they frequently faced charges of homosexuality for their exercise of what was coming to be viewed as a woman's role. Further research remains to be done on the institutionalization of women's power within Candomblé.

Second, Bahian Candomblé modified the concept of the African family by combining two central principles of social organization. In Yoruba tradition, the circumstances of birth determined many spiritual relationships and commitments. Also, prior to the advent of modern Candomblé, Africanity in Bahia referred exclusively to those born on the continent. The new Brazilian model combined and restructured these two principles through Candomblé's system of religious kinship. An initiate, regardless of his or her natal ethnicity, was 'born' into the Candomblé community. The subsequent relationships involved the initiate as a 'child' of both a specific orixá (deity) and a spiritual family. The initiating priestess became the 'mother' (iyá in Yoruba, mãe in Portuguese), the initiates became 'daughters' or 'sons', hence, siblings to each other. The initiation ritual entailed other spiritual relationships, such as those with assisting priests or with initiates of the same deity. Within the Candomblé, age was based upon the date of initiation and superseded chronological age in the determination of seniority. With such a structure in place, Engenho Velho began as a nuclear family. As its children matured and began creating their own spiritual families, it became a larger clan of interrelated units.

Internal differences within Engenho Velho led to the creation of two other pioneering candomblés, Gantois and Opô Afonjá. The process helped institutionalize new conventions. Gantois was founded as a result of a dispute over rules of succession, a debate that illustrated the trend toward the establishment of fixed procedures within Bahian Candomblés. At Gantois, Maria Julia da Conceição Nazareth restricted the title of Iyalorixa (senior priestess) to female blood relatives. She trained her daughter Pulcheria to succeed her upon her death in 1900.[18] In 1903, another member of Engenho Velho, Eugenia Anna dos Santos, left to create Opô Afonjá. Mãe Aninha, as she was best known, was born in 1869 to African parents of the Gurunsi nation, but had been initiated into the Nagô tradition at Engenho Velho.[19] It is significant that although she never disavowed her natal ethnicity, Aninha had assumed Nagô as a spiritual ethnicity. The parameters of ethnicity had been redefined such that one could become an African of a given nation by initiation into its cultural world. This helped Bahian Candomblés attract devotees of diverse backgrounds.

Another salient feature distinguishing this era of Brazilianization and adaptation of Candomblé was the reconceptualization of the candomblé as the institutional basis of an alternative culture. This phenomenon was significantly different from the perpetuation of African culture by African-born persons for whom it was their primary world-view. The Brazilian-born, and even Africans who had spent considerable time in Brazil, were sufficiently cognizant of Euro-Brazilian culture to choose between the two. Assimilation could bring measurable rewards – greater possibilities of upward mobility, social acceptance, more lucrative employment and, while slavery existed, even manumission. Yet succeeding generations not only opted for maintaining a distinct African cultural reference, they also moved in ever-increasing numbers towards the creation of alternative cultural spaces throughout the post-abolition period.

The terreiro embodied this trend, becoming a recreated African homeland in microcosm. Terreiros began as sacred spaces for specific ceremonies. As late as the 1890s, Nina Rodrigues commented that the use of terreiros was still largely restricted to special observances, noting: '[t]hey have, on the outskirts of the cities, special temples (terreiros) for the great annual festivals, and small oratorios or chapels in private homes for regular ceremonies and prayers throughout the year.'[20] Candomblé leaders of the post-abolition era (approximately 1888 through the 1930s) transformed the terreiro into an alternative cultural enclave, evolving, by the mid-twentieth century, into a multifaceted world in which one could live with only limited contact with mainstream Brazilian culture.

The terreiro was thus transformed from the groves and unclaimed spaces where the faithful gathered for special ceremonies to a new form as modern quilombos (maroon communities), where fugitives from the mainstream society could find sanctuary in a society of their own creation. In order to do this, the Candomblé had to move from a primary location of private homes to parcels of land devoted explicitly to this purpose. A terreiro typically included spaces for regular ceremonies and areas consecrated to specific deities. The larger terreiros even included houses where a small number of devotees lived on a permanent basis.[21] This new role was made possible only with the increasing financial security of the candomblé community. Although the majority of devotees had limited means, resources could be pooled once someone was able to make an initial investment of capital. Women such as Aninha were uniquely positioned to assume leadership roles in this regard. In Bahia, there existed a small number of women with sufficient disposable income to become critically important financial supporters of Afro-Brazilian organizations. Aninha, a businesswoman, was part of this group. She was a retailer of imported African products at the Mercado Modelo on the docks. Since the nineteenth century, Africans had been involved in commercial trade with Nigeria. She lived in the 'upper city', not far from the Mercado, on the Ladeira da Praça.[22] Later, she moved next door to the Church of the Rosário in Pelourinho, using her home as a retail outlet. By 1909, she had accumulated sufficient funds to purchase land in an outlying district named São Gonçalo do Retiro on which she would build Opô Afonjá. Aninha's story also sheds light on the means by which some Africans and their descendants on both sides of the Atlantic were able to break into, and profit from, the lucrative retail trade in goods between Salvador and the Bight of Benin. While the extent of Afro-Bahian commercial activity has yet to be fully documented, it is clear that profits from the Bight of Benin trade contributed to some extent towards the purchase and expansion of Candomblé terreiros.

Major principles of Yoruba culture informed developments within Bahian Candomblé. One of these was the importance of maintaining the cults of all the deities of the pantheon. Because certain towns and special sites, such as sacred rivers, had patron orixá, their cults were concentrated in diverse areas of the Oyo Empire. An empire of conquest, Oyo permitted tributary states to maintain their patron deities and often adopted them into their own pantheon. A consolidation of sorts was undertaken in Oyo when the relocated capital was divided into districts dedicated to various deities. Although the Alafin, and by extension Oyo itself, had its royal patron deity, the principal orixás of the empire enjoyed specially consecrated areas of the capital. Because of this specialization of ritual knowledge based on location, as well as the individual's devotion to specific orixás, it seems likely that the ability to reconstitute the full spectrum of Yoruba cosmology in the diaspora would have been greatly dependent on the particular knowledge and skills of individuals in a given community.[23] For example, the egungun ancestral rites and the babalawô priesthood represented specialized ritual knowledge reserved for men. It might be expected that those institutions would be lost in women-dominated terreiros. However, the terreiro founders dedicated themselves to creating as complete a Yoruba world as possible, incorporating both ancestor worship and divination in modern candomblés, even if their traditional institutional forms were sometimes modified. The terreiro thus became a world of spiritual harmony in the context of African cosmology.

Interestingly, it was Aninha, a Brazilian-born woman of Gurunsi descent, who went further than any other priestess in recreating Yoruba traditions, although it is unclear whether her terreiro specifically traced its lineage to either Oyo or Ketu. Although Aninha was not a Nagô by birth, she was, nevertheless, well grounded in Oyo language and history as a result of her collaboration over many years with Martiniano Eliseu de Bomfim. As an adolescent, Bomfim was sent by his parents to Nigeria, where he was educated in Yoruba language, philosophy and religion. When he returned to Brazil, he served as the principal consultant for Nina Rodrigues in the preparation of L'Animisme Fétichiste.[24] Over the course of several visits to Nigeria, Bomfim was initiated as a babalawô, becoming one of few Brazilians fully trained in the Ifa divination system. Together, Aninha and Bomfin set out to make Opô Afonjá an African village to the fullest extent possible. Aninha declared that Yoruba would be the official language of the terreiro, and all her initiates received instruction.[25]

The processes by which Opô Afonjá created its institutions demonstrate that the new candomblés did not evolve directly from remembered traditions. Mãe Aninha and Martiniano do Bomfim established a council called the Obas of Xango, which is among the clearest examples of the reinvention of African tradition in the diaspora. Martiniano do Bomfim himself explained the origin of the tradition at Opô Afonjá in a paper submitted to the Afro-Brazilian Congress of 1937. According to Bomfim, Xango was a praise-name of the third Alafin to succeed Abiodun, who ruled in the late eighteenth century.[26] A power struggle with two military officers prompted Xango to leave the world of humans and transform himself into a deity. Sometime later, a council comprised of the twelve ministers who had served him on earth was organized to maintain the cult of Xango on earth. 'Because of this', he wrote, > in the Centro Cruz Santa do Ache de Opô Afonjá, in São Gonçalo do Retiro, this year was carried out the festival enthroning the twelve ministers of Xango, chosen from among the eldest and most prestigious ogans [male officers] of the candomblé. This candomblé, erected in honour of Xango, is the only one in Bahia, and perhaps Brazil, to realize this festival, which brings back such good memories for the spiritual children of the African continent.[27]

Bomfim's understanding of this particular institution was probably based on his experiences in early twentieth century Nigeria. There is no reference to a ministerial council of Xango in Oyo's state structure (although it may refer to an exclusively religious priesthood structure), but its Brazilian version embodied important principles of Oyo's civil organization. Administrative councils were important in the cults of each deity, the egungun cult of the dead, and in state government through such structures as the Oyo Mesi and the Ogboni council in New Oyo. Using another Yoruba principle, the Ministers of Xango at Opô Afonjá were divided into those of the Left and those of the Right. From the earliest days of the Yoruba, lineages grouped themselves into a triadic pattern of Ono (the centre), Otun (the Right) and Ohi (the Left).[28] As had been the case with African-themed carnival groups in the 1890s, Afro-Brazilians were reaching to African history to establish an identity for themselves in modern Brazil.[29]

A key component of their sense of Africa was the concept that they were restoring traditional institutions, as opposed to reinterpreting traditional principles. In the assessment of Deoscóredes M. dos Santos, an initiate of Opô Afonjá: 'the re-establishment of the ancient tradition of the Obas de Xango gave still more prestige to Opô Afonjá and demonstrated the competence and knowledge of Iyalorixa Aninha Obá Biyi.'[30] On both sides of the Atlantic at this juncture, descendants of the Oyo Empire were claiming legitimacy based on tradition. The Yoruba in Africa were seeking to legitimize claims to leadership positions under British colonial government. These concerns, along with the proclivity of British observers to perceive all traditions as ancient, unchanging practice, would most likely have set a synchronic tone for Martiniano's instruction that resonated with the needs of Afro-Brazilians. In the quote above, dos Santos described the council as a 're-establishment'. Similarly, Martiniano do Bomfim was quoted as saying '[Aninha] really tried to study our ancient religion and reestablish it in its African purity'.[31] For Afro-Brazilians, this connection with an ancient past provided an anchor for a 'neo-African' ethnic identity via the candomblé. The accuracy with which they recreated African institutions is less relevant here than the effort itself, and the degree to which African principles were reinterpreted for a Brazilian context.

In fact, it appears that many Africans regarded the Brazilian candomblés with skepticism. In her travels to Bahia in 1939, Ruth Landes reported a conversation with Martiniano do Bomfim, who complained of the degree to which new candomblés diverged from African traditions:

> I can't bear to see it. Take Maximiana ... She's head of the oldest temple in Brazil, Engenho Velho – it must be nearly a hundred and fifty years old. Yet she gets everything wrong, and worst of all she tries to call the souls of the dead [egungun] into her temple! Now that's sacrilegious! ... Only men should look at the dead. But at Engenho Velho women look at the dead – and ask them questions! So I left.[32]

Nina Rodrigues noted that the Brazilian terreiros, through their incomplete understanding of African language and religion, had lost their 'primitive purity'. Even though some houses worked assiduously to be faithful to tradition, they failed to receive full acceptance by Africans. Nina Rodrigues recalled that

> [o]ne day I asked an old African woman watching the sacred dances at Gantois from afar whether she had made santo [been initiated] and

> why she didn't dance. She replied that her terreiro was of gente da Costa (Africans) and was located in Santo Antonio; that the terreiro of Gantois was of gente da terra (creoles and mulattoes).[33]

The divergence between the 'remembered' culture of the Africans and the 'reconstituted' culture of the Brazilians had clearly become evident by the turn of the twentieth century. Africans and Brazilians continued to interact in candomblés, not only as visitors, but also as the Brazilian-born children of African terreiros and the African forebears at Brazilian candomblés. However, whereas people could become initiated into a Brazilian terreiro, they could not be born into an African nação in its older guise.

The Brazilian candomblés flourished. They successfully cultivated an image of authenticity, which helped their stature within the Afro-Brazilian community. In addition, the Bahian candomblés seemed to share an ability to address the spiritual and social needs of the broad Afro-Bahian community. Though many were nominally West or Central African, or caboclo blends of African and indigenous traditions, they were open to all, and the interpretation of cosmological constructs was not as rigidly linked to specific nations as in the early-nineteenth century communities of recent African arrivals. The political strategies of Candomblé leaders were equally important in ensuring their survival in spite of the police repression that continued into the 1930s. Structural changes within Candomblé administrative bodies enabled priestesses and priests to cultivate strategic ties with influential people able to intercede with officials.[34]

The second Afro-Brazilian Congress, held in Salvador in 1937, may well be considered the final step in the transition to modern Candomblé. The Congress had several direct effects upon the Candomblé community. It helped give the struggle for religious and cultural freedom an ideological base by valorizing African culture. Its presentations favoured a synchronic conceptualization of African cultural traditions, promoting an emphasis on 'authenticity' as a means of legitimization amongst the houses. This coincided with the desire of cultural researchers to investigate 'primitive' cultures in their purest forms, thus providing the rationale for the sanctioning of the Candomblé houses. Another side effect of the Congress was the pre-eminence of Nagô culture. Carneiro persuaded Iyalorixa Aninha and Martiniano do Bomfim to host most of the Congress sessions at Opô Afonjá, and to present papers. This was the first time a Bahian terreiro, especially one of such prestige, had been placed on display to the international community. It led to important research by such scholars as Carneiro and American Donald Pierson undertaken at Opô Afonjá, and to a subsequent emphasis on Nagô traditions in the academic literature.[35]

A third repercussion of the Congress was the creation of the União das Seitas Afro-Brasileiras (Union of Afro-Brazilian Sects) in September 1937.

The Union was the brainchild of Edison Carneiro, who enlisted Martiniano do Bomfim to serve as its president. Sixty-seven candomblés of various nations enrolled in the organization, whose stated purpose was to 'fight for black people's religious freedom'.[36] The Candomblé leaders were each asked to identify their nação, and their responses are a testament to the fluidity and diversity of ethnic identity within the context of Candomblé (see Table 1). It is important to note that despite the subsequent pre-eminence of the Ketu/Nagô houses, 56 per cent of the União's membership was non-Yoruba in 1937. In Carneiro's estimation, the many designations were misleading. Observing the degree of cultural borrowing between supposedly distinct 'nations', he described the Amerindian caboclos as 'degraded forms of Jêje–Nagô candomblés' and noted in the Angolan candomblés only minor differences of dances, rhythms, and language, in what was essentially Jêje–Nagô ritual.[37] Thus, there existed an interesting counterpoint between increasing cultural similarities as more candomblés tended to assimilate a Yoruba-derived ritual on the one hand and, on the other, a resistance to homogenization as reflected in the diversity of self-described nações.

A possible reason for the proliferation of 'new' Candomblé nations was the potential for men to assume leadership roles outside the Jêje–Nagô houses. Male senior priests were the exception in the latter; most were concentrated in the Angola, Congo, and, increasingly, caboclo houses. Of the 67 houses participating in the Union, 37 were led by men. Carneiro, himself closely related to the Nagô terreiros, noted that the priesthood was considered a traditionally female role, and that male priests were derided either as homosexuals or as charlatans seeking to earn money for magical spells.[38] In the ritual itself, as practised in early twentieth-century Salvador, women held special positions as mediums for African deities. In the sacred dances invoking the presence of the deities, only women were expected to become possessed. A man experiencing possession was considered weak and unable to exert self-control. Many Jêge–Nagô houses discouraged certain areas of male participation, prompting some men to establish their own candomblés and, in the process, create their own 'nations'. The proliferation of self-anointed priests and a host of new houses paved the way for the popularization of Candomblé well beyond the African community. It also strengthened the emphasis on traditionalism in such houses as Engenho Velho, Gantois and Opô Afonjá. These developments led to further evolutions of Candomblé in the middle and late twentieth century, in subsequent phases of its modernization.

Conclusion

The African connection gave Afro-Bahians a range of options for expressions of self-determination not evident elsewhere in Brazil. With slavery's demise, Afro-Brazilians took a variety of steps to articulate new roles for themselves within the nation's social order. These ranged from strategies of integration to withdrawal from the oppressive aspects of mainstream culture via the creation of alternative spaces. Private social clubs, soccer teams, and samba parties in such cities as Rio de Janeiro and São Paulo developed in Afro-Brazilian communities as non-discriminatory sites shaped and controlled by Afro-Brazilians themselves (though open to non-blacks as well). Candomblé fell within this general type of post-abolition adaptation, but its particular trajectory was greatly affected by the dynamics of its relationship to Africa.

At the most obvious level, Candomblé was clearly the product of African traditions transplanted via the slave-trade. Yet Africa continued to affect Candomblé's development in diverse ways long after slavery ended. The cessation of the trade in the mid-nineteenth century, concurrent with a shift in the Afro-Bahian population from predominantly African and enslaved to predominantly Brazilian and free, led to a reconceptualization of the ethnic groups known as nações. African identity became an articulation of personal choice, rather than an indicator of birthplace.

African spirituality became institutionalized through Candomblé which, with the advent of terreiros, attempted to restore other cultural practices once kept alive by a constant influx of African-born persons to Bahia. Free persons claimed their right to practice the religion of their choice, despite severe police repression, and for the first time were able to purchase land on which to establish 'African' communities. By the early twentieth century, an individual of any ethnicity could, through Candomblé, become African and even live in a terreiro where the values, dress, language, and culture represented a significant alternative to mainstream life. An elderly black woman of limited means, whose social stature would be circumscribed by most Brazilian standards, could enter a terreiro and become a queen.

Perhaps one of the most significant aspects of the African connection that has yet to be fully explored is the role of the individuals who travelled between Bahia and Africa from the mid-nineteenth through the early twentieth century. Theirs was a specialized and highly influential interaction informing developments in the cultural, economic, and socio-political condition of the Afro-Bahian community. Afro-Bahian knowledge of Africa was not restricted to the memories of old slaves or the interpretations of non-Africans; it was a living connection to bi-cultural individuals that substantially affected both their material lives and ethnic identities.

To understand the impact of this interaction, it is essential that Africa be recognized as an inseparable component of Afro-Bahian history. For example, the priestesses born in Ketu who revolutionized Bahian Candomblé subsequently returned to Africa. The dramatic pace of events in Ketu, which has received relatively little scholarly attention, raises questions yet to be answered. Did these women leave on their own accord or were they captives? What contemporary knowledge of Ketu did they bring to Bahia? By what means did they attain freedom and the financial resources to acquire a terreiro? What informed their decision to return to Africa? What were conditions in Ketu at the time of the return, estimated to be within decades of its demise? Does the story of these women fit within the framework of other Brazilian 'returnees' in West African port cities, or did they experience a different type of re-adaptation to African life in the era of colonization?

The nature and extent of personal contacts across the Atlantic have yet to be fully documented. They were clearly multidimensional, including networks of trade that also helped finance the construction of terreiros. The travels of key figures in Bahian Candomblé underscore the influence of what may well have been a transatlantic 'community' of Afro-Bahian culture and identity. When Iyanassô, a co-founder of Engenho Velho, travelled to Ketu sometime in the mid-nineteenth century, she was returning to the land of her birth with her daughter Marcelina da Silva (Obatossi) and her granddaughter Madalena. Madalena returned to Bahia after a stay of seven years, with two children born in Africa, and pregnant with a third, Claudiana, the mother of Mãe Senhora (Maria Bibiana do Espirito Santo), an Iyalorixa of Opô Afonjá.[39] Decades later, Martinano do Bomfim was to make repeated trips to Africa, during which time he was initiated as a babalawô. The exact course of his travels, which to date remain undocumented, would yield valuable insight into the basis for Opô Afonjá's traditions. All of these individuals became pivotal figures in the reshaping of modern Bahian Candomblé. Travelling the same routes as their captive African forebears, these Afro-Bahians used their transatlantic connections to create personal and collective spheres of autonomy in the diaspora, informed by first-hand experience in Africa.

Equally important is what did not occur. Despite the proliferation of West African nações within Candomblé, the Islamic Malês were unable to flourish in Bahia. Repression in the wake of several attempted revolts early in the nineteenth century was undoubtedly a factor, but there are others to consider. Both contemporary and recent scholars have suggested that Candomblé came to incorporate significant elements of Islam in its role as the syncretic religious culture of Afro-Bahians.[40] It is also possible that the greater involvement of women in Candomblé than in Bahian Islam may have been a crucial determinant of the different trajectories of these spiritual communities. Recent research suggests that women's leadership was particularly important in black institutions, both formal and informal, during the post-abolition era.[41]

Africa, both as an image and in the person of its children, was an intrinsic part of the ideological and physical construction of the Americas. This article has focused on the centrality of Africa in the shaping of a city that came to be known as one of the most African in the Americas, in the largest nation of the African diaspora. It is important to recognize how people from a variety of backgrounds, and for diverse reasons, actively utilized representations of Africa in the construction of Bahian identities. There were some in Bahia who hoped to model its culture along European lines, as was apparently occurring in industrializing cities such as São Paulo. For them, Africa informed an oppositional identity. For others, Africa became the pillar of a new Afro-Bahian consciousness. Through Candomblé, and related struggles for cultural freedoms, Afro-Bahians pioneered the politicization of African-based cultures as an important aspect of their struggle for self-determination in the twentieth century.

6. Between 1835 and 1836, 742 passports were issued to Africans destined for the Gulf of Benin. Between 1846 and 1868, 1312 Africans obtained passports to travel to the coast. Travel continued at a steady pace throughout mid-century but, just after abolition, there was a sudden increase in departures. In 1889, the 227 Africans leaving Bahia represented an increase of 391 per cent over the previous year. Among the difficulties in determining exact numbers are the facts that the children and grandchildren of Africans were listed as brasileiros, and that travellers included those making multiple voyages to Africa: K.D. She points out that when enslaved Africans first arrived in Jamaica, those from numerically stronger national groups isolated themselves as a means of coping with a hostile environment. One such group was the Akan, which organized exclusively Akan slave-revolts throughout the eighteenth century. Towards the end of that century, a decrease in Akan arrivals, an increase in the Jamaican-born population, and the emergence of Myalism as a pan-African religious culture led to a shift from national isolation to pan-African cooperation. In 1789, Akan, Kongo and Mandinka people together took part in a slave revolt. When a new influx of Africans arrived as replacement labourers in the early nineteeth century and became situated within a predominantly Jamaican-born black population, their national ethnicities became subordinate to an overarching African identity.

15. The early history of Bahian Candomblé is difficult to retrace because of the paucity of written documentation. The research on the period 1890–1940 is based almost entirely on oral history and personal observation, which resulted in much conflicting or incorrect data. Edison Carneiro estimated Ile Iya Nassô's foundation as 1830, although he cited some who dated it as early as the mid-eighteenth century (E. Carneiro, Candomblés da Bahia, 3rd ed. (Rio de Janeiro: Conquista, 1961), p.61). His estimate is likely; iyalorixas generally assumed their position at an advanced age. There were two iyalorixas prior to 1849, making it probable that the candomblé was founded anywhere between 1800 and 1830. See also the succession chart in V. da Costa Lima, 'A Familia de Santo nos Candomblés Jeje-Nagos da Bahia: Um Estudo de Relações Intra-Grupais' (MA thesis, Universidade Federal da Bahia, 1977). Costa Lima's genealogy may be incorrect in this regard; he omits the eight-year reign of Maria da Gloria Nazareth at Gantois between 1918 and 1926.

19. There are many conflicting accounts of her spiritual kinship at Engenho Velho. Deoscóredes M. dos Santos claims she was the god-daughter of Maria Julia Figueiredo and the god-sister of Marcelina da Silva. However, this is unlikely because it implies that da Silva was named Iyalorixa prior to her own godmother. More recent oral tradition at Opô Afonjá says Aninha was the god-daughter of Marcelina: D.M. dos Santos, Axé Opô Afonjá (Rio de Janeiro: Instituto Brasileiro de Estudos Afro-Asiáticos, 1962), p.17; S. O WHO ARE THE AFRO BAHIAN

The Afro-Bahian people are a group of individuals of African descent who live in the Brazilian state of Bahia. They are descendants of enslaved Africans who were brought to Brazil during the transatlantic slave trade. Bahia has a significant Afro-Brazilian population, and it is considered one of the most important centers of Afro-Brazilian culture in the country.

The Afro-Bahian people have a rich cultural heritage that includes music, dance, cuisine, religion, and other traditions that have been passed down through generations. Many of these traditions have roots in African cultures and were adapted and transformed over time through interactions with indigenous and European cultures.

Today, the Afro-Bahian people continue to face social and economic challenges related to racism, discrimination, and poverty, but they have also played a significant role in Brazil's social and cultural history and continue to be an important part of the country's cultural identity.

O CAN I PROGRAMM COREL DRAW

Yes, you can program CorelDRAW using CorelDRAW's scripting language called CorelDRAWScript. This scripting language allows you to automate repetitive tasks, customize the application's interface, and create macros that can speed up your workflow.

CorelDRAWScript is based on the Visual Basic for Applications (VBA) language, so if you have experience with VBA, you may find it easier to learn CorelDRAWScript.

To access CorelDRAWScript, you can open the Visual Basic Editor in CorelDRAW by clicking on Tools > Macros > Visual Basic Editor. From there, you can create new modules and write code to automate tasks and customize the application's interface.

There are also third-party tools and plugins that allow you to extend CorelDRAW's functionality, such as the CorelDRAW SDK (Software Development Kit) and the CorelDRAW Automation API. These tools allow you to create custom plugins, add-ons, and applications that interact with CorelDRAW.

O Weather Station Using Arduino with Code & Circuit

Here is an example code and circuit for a weather station using an Arduino Uno board:

Circuit:

- DHT11 temperature and humidity sensor connected to digital pin 2 of the Arduino board
- BMP180 pressure sensor connected to the I2C pins (SDA and SCL) of the Arduino board
- LCD display connected to the following pins: RS to digital pin 12, EN to digital pin 11, D4 to digital pin 5, D5 to digital pin 4, D6 to digital pin 3, and D7 to digital pin 2
- 10k Ohm potentiometer connected to the contrast pin of the LCD display

Code:

Copy code

#include <Wire.h>          // Include the Wire library for I2C communication
#include <Adafruit_Sensor.h>   // Include the Adafruit Sensor library
#include <Adafruit_BMP085_U.h> // Include the Adafruit BMP085 library
#include <LiquidCrystal.h>     // Include the LiquidCrystal library
#include <DHT.h>               // Include the DHT library

#define DHTPIN 2           // Define the digital pin for the DHT sensor
#define DHTTYPE DHT11      // Define the type of DHT sensor
DHT dht(DHTPIN, DHTTYPE); // Create a DHT object

Adafruit_BMP085_Unified bmp = Adafruit_BMP085_Unified(10085); // Create a BMP objec

LiquidCrystal lcd(12, 11, 5, 4, 3, 2); // Create a LCD object void setup() {

  Serial.begin(9600); // Initialize serial communication dht.begin();        // Initialize the DHT sensor bmp.begin();        // Initialize the BMP sensor lcd.begin(16, 2);   // Initialize the LCD display lcd.clear();        // Clear the LCD display lcd.print("Weather Station"); // Print a message to the LCD display

void loop() {
  // Read temperature and humidity from the DHT sensor float humidity = dht.readHumidity();
  float temperature = dht.readTemperature();

  // Read pressure from the BMP sensor sensors_event_t event;
  bmp.getEvent(&event);
  float pressure = event.pressure / 100.0F;

  // Display the readings on the LCD display lcd.setCursor(0, 1);
  lcd.print("Temp: ");
  lcd.print(temperature);
  lcd.print("C ");
  lcd.print("Hum: ");
  lcd.print(humidity);
  lcd.print("% ");
  lcd.print("Press: ");
  lcd.print(pressure);
  lcd.print("hPa");

  // Send the readings to the serial monitor
  Serial.print("Temperature = ");
  Serial.print(temperature);
  Serial.print(" °C\t");
  Serial.print("Humidity = ");
  Serial.print(humidity);
  Serial.print("%\t");
  Serial.print("Pressure = ");
  Serial.print(pressure);
  Serial.println(" hPa");

  delay(2000); // Wait for 2 seconds

This code reads the temperature, humidity, and pressure using the DHT11 and BMP180 sensors, displays the readings on the LCD display, and sends the readings to the serial monitor every 2 seconds. The LCD display shows the temperature, humidity, and pressure, while the serial monitor shows the readings in Celsius, percent, and hectopascals.

Note that you will need to install the Adafruit BMP085 and Adafruit Sensor libraries before uploading this code to your Arduino board.

Aicha Kandicha, la légende et le démon – Zamane par Maati Monjib — 13 avril 2020 2

Kandicha est un être culturel schizophrénique. en effet, la belle Aicha relève à la fois de la légende historique et du monde des démons. Voyage au pays des mythes.

Tout le monde au Maroc, et même dans une bonne partie de l'Algérie, a entendu parler d'Aicha Kandicha. Mais plus on se rapproche de l'Atlantique plus le mythe est vivace dans le langage quotidien et les contes populaires. Femme séductrice et adultère, démon aux pieds de chamelle, Aicha Kandicha hante nos cauchemars d'enfants, sans qu'on sache trop pourquoi, ni comment elle s'est introduite dans notre imaginaire collectif.

Une légende, plusieurs versions

Une légende, plusieurs versions

La première version du mythe veut qu'Aicha Kandicha soit une comtesse portugaise. Il s'agirait d'une femme noble d'origine portugaise tombée follement amoureuse d'un notable marocain de la ville de Safi. L'histoire se belle : cheveux soyeux et très noirs, yeux noisette et visage très blanc, les hommes qui la croisaient dans les rues de la ville en tombaient tous amoureux. Certains en perdaient la raison. D'où la légende.

Dans une deuxième version, Aicha Kandicha est présentéecomme une Marocaine très belle de la région d'El Jadida. Elle jouit grosso modo des mêmes caractéristiques que la comtesse. Mais il s'agirait ici d'une résistante qui se serait juré de venger son mari tué dans un affrontement avec les Portugais qui occupent la ville. Cette Aicha nouvelle version se faisait passer pour une fille de joie. Et sa beauté aidant, elle séduisait les officiers portugais et les persuadait de la suivre la nuit dans un coin isolé. Puis ellesortait son couteau pour les égorger. Par moquerie envers sa vie dissolue, les Portugais l'aurait surnommée la Comtesse.

Bien entendu, il ne subsiste aucune preuve historique déterminante de la véracité de cette légende, mais ces deux premières versions contiennent plusieurs indices qui rendent son existence plausible : les Portugais occupaient bel et bien plusieurs points de la côte atlantique suite à

La «condessa»

Il y a également un indice linguistique troublant : « comtesse » se dit en portugais « condessa », dont la version arabe aurait évolué vers « Kandicha » ; de même, il n'y avait pas que guerres et affrontements entre Portugais et Marocains de la côte mais également commerce et échanges humains multiples. D'ailleurs, le mythe d'Aicha Kandicha traduit bien la nature ambivalente des relations maroco-portugaises à cette époque.

La troisième version parle d'une Aicha Kandicha tout aussi belle et intrépide que les précédentes. Mais le récit la présente ici aux prises avec les occupants français dans les montagnes de l'Atlas. Donc en toute logique approximativement durant la période de l'Entre-deux-Guerres. Aicha aurait été une chef des guérilleros qui tendaient des embuscades nocturnes et sanglantes contre les soldats de l'armée française et ses collaborateurs marocains. Sa beauté rare, sa jeunesse, son courage physique et le fait que

êtres invisibles pour le commun des mortels, qui marchent sur le sol sans ombre et sans laisser de trace. Aicha, aux pieds de chèvre ou de chamelle, fait partie plus précisément de la Famille des Jaunes qui constituent avec six autres règnes (les Rouges dont le maître est Sidi Hammou, les Bleus dont le roi est Sidi Moussa, maître des plans d'eau etc…) le panthéon démoniaque marocain. Aicha Kandicha y occupe une place de choix.
Car il s'agit d'une créature dont la puissance de fascination est sans limite. Elle est mariée à Hammou Keou mais ne lui est pas fidèle. Elle cherche avec une insistance maléfique à avoir des rapports sexuels avec les hommes qu'elle rencontre dans des endroits isolés. Ils en perdent la raison. Il existe toutefois des antidotes qui pourraient contrecarrer ses effets aliénants : on peut réciter des versets coraniques spécifiques ou, quand on est directement attaqué, planter une lame de couteau dans la terre. De fait, Aicha craint comme les autres démons le fer, l'acier et le feu.

Dans certaines régions du Maroc comme dans les zones amazighophones du Sud-Ouest, Aicha se confond avec d'autres êtres qui peuplent l'imaginaire populaire. Il en est ainsi de Tassardount Iyassamdal(la Mule des cimetières).

elle court, ses sabots font un bruit de métal infernal tout en envoyant des étincelles. Avec ses seins allongés, elle étrangle les hommes qui osent la fixer.

Ce personnage mythique, que l'histoire situe grosso modo au niveau de la ville d'El Jadida, porte en tout cas un nom composé: moitié marocain et musulman (Aïcha), moitié portugais (Condesa, soit Comtesse). Nous, marocains qui alimentons ce mythe, avons prononcé ce deuxième composant, écrtit « Condesa » et prononcé /condécha/ en portgais, comme nous croyons l'entendre: « qandicha » (en arabe), « qandoucha » en amazigh tachelhit.

BARTEL, Bruno Ferraz. A ambiguidade do sagrado: o culto a Aisha Qandisha na vila de Sidi 'Ali, Marrocos. Niterói: Dissertação de Mestrado em Antropologia, PPGA – UFF, 2013.

Résumé

Cette thèse porte sur le culte de la femme jinn[1] Aisha Qandisha dans un village rural appelé Sidi 'Ali, situé dans la région de Meknes-Tafilalet au Maroc. L'analyse proposée indique les conditions et les éléments nécessaires pour construire un système de communication rituel sous forme de pèlerinages, des offrandes et des sacrifices d'animaux, en plus des rituels de transe et de possession, effectués par des individus qui cherchent, dans la figure de cet agent religieux, à réaliser leurs désirs et ambitions liées à des moments de crise de la vie[2], et à résoudre leurs conflits et malheurs personnels. L'obtention d'un emploi, la réalisation d'un mariage, la maternité, ou simplement la guérison de toutes les maladies font partie des thèmes privilégiés, principalement par les femmes, dans la vie religieuse quotidienne à Sidi 'Ali.

Parmi ces individus, ceux qui reconnaissent la puissance (ou force religieuse) de Aisha Qandisha, qui est capable de transformer le statut individuel et social à travers la notion de baraka[3]. La question générale de ce matériau ethnographique traite comment une telle puissance immanente (baraka) dans l'entité religieuse peut refléter un caractère d'ambiguïté[4], par rapport au sacré quand les individus se mettent en contact, via rituel, avec sa personnalité. Bref, j'étudie comment l'idée du rapprochement avec la sphère du

[1] Le jnun (jinn – sing) sont des êtres invisibles faits de feu et qui composent l'univers symbolique de la religion islamique (Boudjenoun, 2009; Rausch, 2000). Le mot jnun au Maroc est le pluriel du mot djinn, qui est également utilisé dans d'autres pays qui ont l'Islam comme code et discours culturel. Un être féminin de ce type devient, parfois, le nom de jinniya.

[2] "C'est un point important dans le développement physique et social de l'individu, comme la naissance, la puberté et la mort (Turner, 2005 : 35)".

[3] Bénédiction émanant d'un être qui peut avoir un effet miraculeux dans la vie d'une autre personne (Crapanzano, 1973; Rausch, 2000). Cependant, l'idée de la puissance et la force de cette catégorie et liée à la personnalité d'Aisha Qandisha, assure l'effet de transformation sur une situation.

[4] Le double rôle de ce pouvoir peut être compris comme une forme d'ambiguïté.

sacré peut produire, d'un côté, des bienfaits et des bénédictions désirées par les individus et d'un autre côté, les mettre en danger (par exemple, peut les rendre fous), compte tenu des impuretés qui, selon la croyance locale, sont associées à la figure d'Aisha Qandisha et qui peuvent donc être soulevées dans cette expérience avec le "sacré".

L'univers ethnographique de la recherche est lié à l'ensemble des croyances et des rituels associés à jnun[5] au Maroc. La croyance en ces êtres, si répandue parmi la population marocaine, révèle la question du danger des rituels développés en partenariat avec ces agents religieux à cause de la dimension de l'imprévisibilité de ses effets, puisqu'ils reconnaissent les multiples formes de l'agence[6] de jnun. Toutefois, il est à noter qu'il y a une demande de ces agents religieux pour diverses raisons par des particuliers. En ce sens, la notion de risque, au cours des développements rituels, me semble plus approprié pour décrire ces relations impliquant un contact possible avec jnun.

L'accent mis sur la notion de risque cherche à aller au-delà de confirmer le caractère transformateur de l'expérience avec le sacré, en tenant compte de l'imprévisibilité active dans les forces religieuses sur les individus, ce qui permet de repenser le rôle des ambiguïtés générées et prises comme causes des dégâts. En cas ethnographique en question, Aisha Qandisha est reconnue par sa capacité à causer la perte de la rationalité[7] des individus durant la réalisation de leur culte, en les exposant à cela pendant une période de temps prolongée. Les rites du pèlerinage, des offrandes, des sacrifices d'animaux et des rituels de transe et de possession non seulement construisent une relation des individus avec cet agent religieux, mais ils constituent aussi un moyen à travers lequel la notion du danger fleurit entre les individus.

Le risque se rapporte au développement de la folie causée par Aisha Qandisha comme une forme de punition des individus, généralement associée avec le temps de leur exposition à sa personnalité. La notion de folie[8] produite par l'entité religieuse est représentée par une possession continue de l'esprit et est constituée comme une possibilité d'être considérée par les individus qui établissent leurs relations avec cette source d'inspiration de la peur (terreur) et en même temps, de l'enchantement (fascination). La manifestation de la folie acquiert de la valeur quand on perçoit une vidange des relations des individus dans leur monde social, tandis qu'une plus grande présence de la figure d'Aisha Qandisha est perçue dans leur vie quotidienne.

[7] Le caractère rationnel se réfère à discerner les contours de la réalité sociale qui assurent le calcul des actions efficaces en cours de pratique par les individus (Eickelman, 1985).

Sur le niveau théorique, cette thèse contribue à l'exposition des limites à la construction de l'expérience avec le sacré en vue de la dynamique du culte d'Aisha Qandisha à travers la notion du risque. À cet égard, il est important pour cette discussion la proposition développée par Mary Douglas (1992), qui cherche à comprendre comment les gens réfléchissent sur les causes de leurs malheurs, tout en reconnaissant la capacité des communautés à s'organiser autour d'une ou plusieurs formes d'explication de l'origine de leurs conflits.

En cas d'échec dans la capacité de contrôler les forces du mal mobilisées pour la suspension des conflits vécus par les individus, à travers la mise en place d'un ordre, la question de l'ambiguïté gagnerait des proportions pertinentes. Selon Douglas (1978) la perception du risque ne serait pas régie par des traits de personnalité, des besoins, des préférences ou des propriétés contenues dans les objets qui causent des menaces. La perception est socialement, ou mieux encore, culturellement construite comme un phénomène. Ce qui est vu et perçu comme dangereux possède des références dans les tableaux d'adhésion culturelle et dans les processus d'apprentissage social.

L'alternance des valeurs attribuées au pouvoir (baraka) d'Aisha Qandisha est ce qui constitue la production d'une ambiguïté en ce qui concerne le monde du sacré. D'une part, la manifestation de ce pouvoir est expliquée en termes d'impureté, compte tenu du rôle attribué au jinn-féminin comme responsable de la folie de l'individu comme une conséquence de l'immersion totale dans le monde du sacré. En ce sens, la notion de terreur associée à la figure de l'entité religieuse a comme marque la soumission des individus à leurs volontés, représentées plusieurs fois dans les discours à Sidi 'Ali en termes de personnes qui sont isolées de leur vie sociale, puisque la question du contrôle de leurs formes de culte nécessite une attention particulière aux règles spécifiques de cette pratique.

De l'autre côté, la figure d'Aisha Qandisha évoque aussi l'idée de fécondité[9], à travers la reconnaissance de la puissance intrinsèque qui lui est associée par la notion de baraka. Cette force ou puissance aurait une efficacité sur les conflits et malheurs personnels confrontés par les individus qui décident d'accepter les risques de cette relation, en se soumettant, de cette manière, au culte de ce jinn-féminin. En outre, le développement des rituels liés au culte exige une capacité des individus à mesurer les situations (ou contrôler ses forces) considérées en même temps comme impuretés et donc perçues comme dangereuses.

La notion de baraka associée à ces deux pôles (la peur et l'enchantement) contribue pour que la figure d'Aisha Qandisha fonctionne comme une divinité des marges, avec le double pouvoir de préparer les passages nécessaires dans la vie actuelle des individus (phases liminaires) et de préserver strictement ses frontières, même quand elles seraient croisées. Alors, dans ce sens, pour les pèlerins qui cherchent, lui attribuer un caractère sacré. De cette manière, il convient de reconnaître comment sont elles produites les expériences qui négocient avec telles forces sacrées vue que de nombreuses sociétés humaines cherchaient et maintenaient leur solidarité avec le chaos (Berger, 1985).

La configuration de ces limites avant d'être religieuse, parfois aussi dangereuse et parfois aussi efficace, il est essentiel à la capacité des rites de se présenter comme une manifestation liée à ce genre de "sacré" au cours de la production de son culte. Le contexte marocain présente des dossiers portant sur les risques possibles d'avoir des relations avec jnun. (Crapanzano, 1973, 1980; Maarouf, 2007; Rausch, 2000; Westermarck, 1926). Dans ce cas, ce qui serait en jeu, serait l'attitude religieuse qui ferait encore ce que les hommes cherchent dans une union avec les forces ou les êtres provenant de la sphère du sacré, afin

La méthode utilisée pour la production d'ethnographie a été l'observation participante, qui consiste à l'implication du chercheur dans les activités du groupe social étudié afin d'acquérir les principes conceptuels et les pratiques qui organisent les expériences de ses membres. Concrètement, cela signifie que je suivais les gens, avec leur autorisation, dans les visites à la grotte d'Aisha Qandisha, afin d'analyser deux aspects rituels. Tout d'abord, les échanges symboliques[12] représentés par des offrandes d'éléments (végétaux et minéraux) sous forme d'un plat de paille entouré d'un tissu coloré, en fonction des jours de la semaine ou des nuances qui impliquent des préférences d'un jinn particulier. Une partie de ce matériel a été livré aux responsables de la grotte comme une forme de paiement pour l'utilisation de leur espace, l'autre partie a été lancé sur le mur construit à l'intérieur de la grotte, visant à la destruction d'objets (bougies, parfums et encens) par le feu, en plus de servir comme espace pour les libations et la livraison des objets investis de la baraka.

[11] Pas nécessairement une lila doit être organisée par un moqqadim (leader) d'une confrérie. Celui-là peut être invité à organiser le rituel avec ses membres (musiciens) par le biais d'une personne qui n'est pas murid (disciple/dévot) d'un saint, mais cela nécessite des services de la confrérie dans le but de se débarrasser de la mauvaise action causée par un jinn sur une personne de connaissance.

Deuxièmement, la symbolique du sang des sacrifices d'animaux (coqs, poules, boucs, chèvres, moutons et brebis), immolés dans un espace propre à la grotte d'Aisha Qandisha. En outre, j'ai également fréquenté, avec l'autorisation appropriée, les résidences louées ou empruntées par les pèlerins pour accomplir les rituels de transe et de possession avec l'aide de spectacles musicaux exécutés par un groupe lié à l'une des confréries religieuses disponibles le jour du pèlerinage à Sidi 'Ali. Dans ce cas, l'objectif était de vérifier les causes attribuées à Aisha Qandisha pour la production des états corporels présentés par les individus (principalement les femmes).

Le premier chapitre de la thèse se réfère, en général, aux représentations des jnun dans l'univers islamique et construit un panorama analytique de ces êtres au Maroc. Est présenté également le mythe d'Aisha Qandisha en cherchant de l'associer avec les "cultes féminins" qui lui sont liés, ayant comme référence les pratiques quotidiennes dans le village de Sidi 'Ali. La dernière partie explore la notion de baraka au Maroc en indiquant comment cette source de pouvoir contient des ambiguïtés à partir de l'intervention de jnun dans la réalité. Mon argument est que la notion de baraka acquiert une double fonction à travers la personnalité d'Aisha Qandisha. En premier lieu, le concept de la baraka comprend une notion de charisme lié à cette jinn, depuis que sa logique indique tantôt la distribution de bénédiction et tantôt l'admission de son caractère imprévisible de sa circulation. Deuxièmement, la baraka associée à Aisha Qandisha acquiert un rôle opposé, précisément pour représenter une forme de punition pour les individus. La folie dans ce point, serait une manifestation de cette puissance par le contact avec la personnalité de l'entité religieuse.

De manière générale, et loin d'être séparée en deux sphères radicalement opposées, la figure d'Aisha Qandisha, ainsi comme d'autres jnun, cohabite la réalité sociale des humains. Le maintien de ces relations ne se traduit pas seulement par la croyance en un plan visible (connu) et invisible (inconnu), mais surtout à travers les expériences de "présence" et "enlèvement" à partir du contact avec des personnes atteintes de baraka. Ce qu'indique l'expression de ces contacts sont précisément les potentiels existants dans l'acquisition de ce pouvoir, par le biais de ces agents religieux, en tenant compte des risques qui sont assumés et traduits sous forme de folie. En ce sens, la préoccupation pour les impuretés dans la conduite des rites liés au culte d'Aisha Qandisha acquiert une référence dans les représentations développées par des individus qui se rapportent à ce jinn femelle.

La triade exprimé par la personnalité d'Aisha Qandisha (jinn féminin / sainte femme / femme qui a envie d'un mariage) exprime la complexité de ses "masques" dans le développement de son culte, ce qui contribue à la pérennité des trames mythiques qui entourent le village de Sidi 'Ali. Cependant, il faut reconnaître le rôle joué par Lalla Aicha[13] dans l'imagination et aussi dans les pratiques féminines d'organiser ces expériences. Le contenu ethnographique a cherché à élargir la notion de "culte féminin" comme un moyen de garder également en perspective les dynamiques développées par des hommes qui ont fait preuve d'une communication significative avec l'entité religieuse.

Le deuxième chapitre de la thèse explore le pèlerinage dans le village de Sidi 'Ali et étudie les modes relationnels entre les individus et la figure d'Aisha Qandisha. Les crises de la vie que mènent les gens dans le village finissent de mobiliser les différents symboles qui sont déclenchés parmi les pèlerins comme une forme d'exprimer leurs conflits ou les malheurs personnels. Par ailleurs, on cherche à comprendre comment la force (baraka) investie et reconnue chez Aisha Qandisha cesse d'avoir une valeur efficace dans la résolution des conflits et des problèmes, ou au moins l'atténuation de leurs conséquences pour les individus. Mon argument est que l'obtention de la baraka devient quelque chose de nécessaire pour arriver à un accord effectué par le pèlerin lui-même et en même temps, avec le monde (Fartacek, 2012). La baraka provenant d'Aisha Qandisha joue un rôle important dans les processus de la résolution des crises de vie et des conflits personnels des pèlerins, dans la mesure où elle participe et aide d'autant à clarifier des problèmes, des valeurs et des buts, qu'aggraver ou accentuer encore plus ces situations vécues par des individus.

Le culte d'Aisha Qandisha considère le pèlerinage comme une forme d'ouverture rituelle dans le système de communication existant. L'organisation d'un voyage pour obtenir sa baraka devient quelque chose de nécessaire pour la médiation d'une relation du pèlerin avec lui-même, et en même temps, avec le monde dans lequel il s'insère. Cependant, il faut reconnaître à la fois l'aggravation de certaines de ces situations vécues entre les pèlerins. Ce qui a marqué précisément la plupart de ces expériences, qui présentent des caractéristiques ambiguës, par le contact avec la force (baraka) souhaitée dans ce système rituel ont été les conséquences de l'effet double proportionné par l'action et l'intention (agence) d'Aisha Qandisha.

Le troisième chapitre décrit le système de communication rituel avec Aisha Qandisha par l'offrande des objets et des sacrifices d'animaux effectués dans sa grotte, affirmant une soumission des individus aux volontés et des préférences du jinn féminin. Ce premier contact entraîne des conséquences dans les trajectoires des individus qui cherchent d'entretenir et négocier une relation avec Aisha Qandisha. En outre, le rôle de couleurs (blanc, noir et rouge) et substances (le feu, la fumée et le sang) met en évidence l'univers symbolique de jinn. Mon argumentation part de l'idée que la baraka de la figure Aisha Qandisha fournit les éléments symboliques qui produisent ces changements de pouvoir, puisqu' ils contribuent d'une certaine façon à l'évolution de l'état religieux sacrificiel, dans ce cas, représentés par les pèlerins au cours de leurs activités rituelles tout au long du culte.

En ce sens, la transformation par l'effet moral entre les pèlerins a atteint son apogée à travers les symboles contenus dans les objets rituels (les animaux, les plantes, encens etc.) et surtout, à partir du système de couleurs agissant sur la dynamique du rituel. La logique de la distribution et de la transmission de la baraka dans la grotte d'Aisha Qandisha se réalise par le maintien d'un cadre de règles. La condition sine qua non de sa pratique implique la restriction immédiate de tout élément considéré comme impur sous le risque de perdre l'investissement rituel développé par des individus à partir de leur système d'offrandes.

Enfin, le quatrième chapitre de la thèse porte sur les rites de transe et de possession organisés par au moins une confrérie populaire marocaine, dans le cas où Hamadsha, qui réaliserait son pèlerinage au village de Sidi 'Ali. Soulignons la centralité de la personnalité d'Aisha Qandisha dans la construction d'un système de communication rituel reconnaissant une valeur exprimée par les individus à travers des rituels "d'effervescence collective". La performance corporelle des participants aux rituels de transe et de possession présuppose la conduite (agence) d'un agent religieux, dans le cas d'Aisha Qandisha. Mon argument est que la possession[14] ne constitue pas un état d'altération de conscience typifiée comme une "extase"[15], mais comme une conséquence des effets de la baraka de l'agence d'Aisha Qandisha sur les individus.

Cette situation indique le degré de proximité et d'appartenance des individus par rapport à l'entité religieuse qui se manifestent sous forme de possession par sa façon d'expression et de communication. L'expérience du sacré, à travers la figure de l'entité religieuse, est ambigüe puisque la même force (baraka) qui est souhaitée par les individus à travers le développement rituel qui marque l'alliance avec Aisha Qandisha, peut conduire, sur le même niveau relationnel à la folie de ces individus. Le risque de cette situation a été représenté par l'affichage de la notion de personne chez les individus au cours du développement de ses phases rituelles et performantes.

Contrairement au modèle proposé par Émile Durkheim (2008), qui considère comme étant isolés les éléments qui forment la notion du sacré, notamment à travers les valeurs produites par un groupe social particulier, l'idée que la force (baraka) contenue dans le sacré peut offrir une potentialité au sujet de leurs phénomènes connexes (dans ce cas, la représentation, le pèlerinage, le sacrifice et la possession dans le culte d'Aisha Qandisha) il me semble plus approprié pour l'étude de la vie religieuse des groupes sociaux impliqués dans le village de Sidi 'Ali. Même s'il est reconnu que la caractéristique de l'ambiguïté présente dans cette notion du sacré durkheimienne, les limitations à percevoir des connexions possibles, qui assurent la formation d'une expérience de ce sacré, restreignent les observations de la dynamique des processus à partir des idées et surtout , des actions menées par des groupes sociaux. Et si le sacré joue toujours une valeur importante dans l'organisation des collectivités, le rôle joué par la baraka d'Aisha Qandisha sur les mentalités, et encore, sur les pratiques sociales, ne peut être ignoré sans faire une attribution nécessaire à sa perspective culturelle.

En ce sens, l'effet double produit par la figure d'Aisha Qandisha (fascination et terreur) sur les individus, et qui se présente dans les formes propres à leur culte (représentation, le pèlerinage, le sacrifice et possession) partant de l'évocation de sa personnalité, me semble-t-il convenable de mettre l'accent sur le rôle des expériences du sacré suggéré par Rudolf Otto (2007). Les expressions symboliques contenues dans leur culte sont imbriquées dans leurs rites associés, précisément pour sa capacité à fournir les éléments nécessaires qui caractérisent les "états d'effervescences rituels" réfléchis sur les conduites et sur la dynamique des individus dans la construction de leurs expériences.

La personnalité d'Aisha Qandisha apporte des valeurs et aussi des pratiques par lesquelles les individus cherchent à se mettre en relation avec le monde. Son expérience ambiguë avec le sacré est présente dans la notion du double effet de la baraka du jinn sur les individus. La tension qui peut découler de cette polarité a un impact significatif sur l'organisation de la vie religieuse qui partage sa logique, aussi sur ce qui donne un rôle clé à ce domaine faisant partie du champ religieux islamique; par l'intervention des jnun dans la réalité humaine.

Aisha Qandisha, pour ainsi dire, est présente dans les marges et les interstices de la vie sociale. Le croisement de ces limites devient possible à partir des dispositifs rituels existants, en raison de la capacité des individus à maintenir un système de communication efficace avec l'entité religieuse. La performance dans la conduite de ces rituels est le facteur déterminant dans l'expérience de cette ambiguïté du sacré.

Ali a trouvé la clef de sa prison

Il est des destins qui méritent d'être vus au grand jour tant ils nous rappellent à l'essentiel de ce qui devrait faire nos vies.

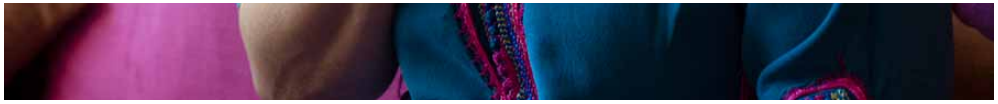
L'histoire d'Ali vient nous montrer que la fatalité de l'existence, qu'elle nous emmène vers le bien comme vers le mal, n'est finalement qu'une affaire humaine et que l'alternative entre ce bien ou ce mal souvent n'est qu'une affaire de geste, et donc de choix entre le geste qui fait du bien et celui qui fait du mal.

Ali a 9 ans aujourd'hui, et cela fait 9 années qu'il vit dans l'orphelinat de Ouarzazate. Il a été abandonné dès sa naissance dans une ville voisine de la manière la plus expéditive qui soit : calé dans un sac en plastique et ainsi déposé dans la rue. Une fois recueilli, il est venu rejoindre les autres enfants qui peuplent en permanence l'unique foyer pour orphelin de la région Sud Est du Maroc, géré par l'association Basma et sous l'autorité des services de la santé. L'orphelinat est toujours plein mais les enfants abandonnés, alors encore bébés, trouvent rapidement une famille d'accueil.

Ali cependant n'avait pas le visage comme les autres enfants. Il est de peau noire et semblait être atteint d'un léger handicap, ce qui bien évidemment ne facilitait pas ses chances de sensibiliser les adultes de passage en quête de parentalité.

C’est ainsi qu’Ali vit partir un à un les enfants avec lesquels, de son âge alors, il avait fait son monde. Et c’est ainsi qu’il grandit, d’année en année, et toujours entouré de ces mêmes bébés aux sourires coquins qui sans tarder lui faisaient signe de la main pour s’en aller entre des bras chaleureux.

Comme un petit animal enfermé seul dans un enclos



Mais Ali restait là, entre les murs de l'orphelinat de Ouarzazate et au fil du temps passé, il allait devenir quelqu'un d'encombrant dont on ne sait plus quoi faire. Il ne parlait ni l'arabe ni l'amazigh, car personne ne lui parlait. Il poussait des petits cris stridents et dès que l'on faisait montre de s'intéresser à lui, il s'agrippait aux jambes. A ce jour, toutes ses dents sont cariées car personne ne les lui lavait. Il entend mal, semble ne pas voir grand chose, il ne sait donc ni lire ni écrire, et porte les signes physiques d'une malnutrition sérieuse. Tout cela faisait qu'Ali, dans son monde, avait pris l'habitude de sentir tout ce qu'il voulait découvrir comme un petit animal enfermé seul dans un enclos. Ses seules sorties était pour rejoindre une crèche, peuplée d'autres petits enfants, et lui le grand aux oreilles ouvertes aux vents retournait chaque soir entre les barreaux de son petit lit. Prochainement, et parce qu'il commençait vraiment à être trop grand, il devait quitter l'orphelinat pour rejoindre l'institut pour adolescents délinquants d'Agadir, seule structure disponible.

Et puis un jour, Ali vit quelqu'un passer un peu de temps avec lui, quelqu'un qui restait et puis surtout qui revenait.

Dominique était en quête d'un enfant. La maternité, elle connaissait bien pour l'avoir vécue par quatre fois déjà dans sa vie et ce choix d'adoption s'inscrivait dans une autre logique. Depuis la France où elle vit, elle entendit parler de lui et vint donc à Ouarzazate en 2009 pour le rencontrer. Elle se dit que oui, c'était lui.

Le coeur n’a ni frontière ni religion

Depuis cette date, Dominique a eu tout le temps de réfléchir à son choix de s'occuper d'Ali en dépit de tous ses problèmes. Elle rencontra de nombreux obstacles qui faillirent empêcher cette heureuse issue pour Ali. Le débat récent au sujet de la kafala ouverte ou pas aux personnes étrangères a failli bloquer cette délivrance. Dominique a tenu bon avec l'aide tenace de son avocate et le soutien d'autres personnes, notamment dans l'administration, qui avaient bien compris que la solidarité, et donc le coeur, n'a ni frontière ni religion.

Il y a deux semaines, Dominique est venue officiellement récupérer Ali au tribunal. Pour la première fois, il avait le sourire plein et de sa main vibrante, le regard fier, il ne cessait de saluer le monde, de dire au revoir à jamais à ces murs maussades.

Ali et Dominique se préparent à partir pour la France cet été. Peut être vont-ils revenir en septembre pour s'installer à Ouarzazate où Dominique pense à lancer un projet économique. Peut être vont-ils rester en France. Dominique sait qu'avec Ali, cela va se vivre au jour le jour. Le défi est au quotidien.

Tour de la

Quand on lui demande pourquoi elle a fait ce choix si radical, elle répond avec évidence :

0:00 / 3:31

Dominique sait que son choix doit être pragmatique, aussi précis que l'étaient ses gestes quand elle exerçait la mission de pompier, après ses nombreux autres métiers. L'enjeu est d'amener Ali à maîtriser sa communication avec le monde. Orale et écrite.

0:00 / 0:48

La raison d'être profonde du choix de Dominique est donc simplement le besoin de se sentir utile, de savoir qu'elle sert à quelque chose dans ce monde où règnent encore l'égoïsme et la violence. Ali à peine sorti à l'air libre, a déjà croisé la triste médiocrité de l'humain. Des jeunes, bien sur eux, se sont déjà moqués de sa démarche bancale et des crachats l'ont déjà atteint.

Ali n'a rien remarqué et c'est tant mieux. Ou peut être a-t-il déjà tout vu de l'humain. Il n'a que faire de ces poussières du temps. Il sait qu'il a trouvé sa clé. Elle s'appelle l'amour. Et cela, pour lui, c'est l'essentiel.

J'ai vu partir des Youness, Abdelatif, Rabab, Bilal, Medhi,….. mais j'ai une pensée particulière pour ceux qui, comme Ali, restent à l'orphelinat parce que différents des autres enfants . N'oublions pas les Nohaila, Meryam, Simo, ils sont comme Ali condamnés à rester à l'orphelinat parce qu'ils n'ont pas eu la chance de croiser le chemin d'une Dominique.

J'espère qu'il y aura encore et encore des enfants qui quittent cet orphelinat mais souhaitons aussi que les mentalités évoluent pour aider les mamans célibataires plutôt que de leur jeter la pierre et retrouver les enfants dans la rue.

Un clin d'œil aussi à Cécile qui repart avec Nidal.

Il faut beaucoup de courage à ces futurs parents qui doivent subir les tracas administratifs et rester bloqués à Ouarzazate de longues périodes pour obtenir la Kafala.

Au nom de tous les enfants, je peux et je dis BRAVO à tous?

2009 – 2014 ! quelle incroyable patience !

Sa photo dans “la cité orpheline” m’avait attristée, savoir qu’il était encore là-bas, nulle part.
Et pourtant, je n’aurais pas eu cet amour-défi là. Il fallait donc être Dominique, que votre route à tous deux soit embellie.

Mais je pense aussi à tous ces enfants abandonnés sous quelque prétexte sociétal plus que religieux.
Et si l’arme la plus efficace était l’amour des mères, des pères qui n’abandonneraient plus jamais leurs enfants ?

Bravo à cette dame courageuse.

Je salue et je m'incline devant sa décision qui n'est pas du tout aisée ni temporaire. Dominique a choisi le difficile et le compliqué cela me laisser deviner son caractère et sa personne. Je pourrais dire, elle est tenace, forte mais aussi sensible, humaniste et peut être fragile. Fragile, car c'est la seule qui a succombé devant l'atroce situation de ce pauvre Ali. C'est son coeur qui a été chagriné par la souffrance de Ali.

La vie se porte encore bien puisqu'il y a encore des Dominiques.

Réjouis-toi cher Ali avec ta nouvelle maman. Elle n'est pas comme tout le monde, elle est authentique, elle est un ange. je suis vraiment contente pour cher Ali.

On peut se laisser aller à douter de tout dans le monde d'aujourd'hui : toujours davantage de misère, de malheur, de haine. Les messages de paix semblent noyés dans les flots continus d'une actualité vide de sens. Nous nous sentons petits, insignifiants, écrasés entre les étaux des puissances financières, économiques, politiques, etc.

Et tout à coup, deux visages, un écrit, des paroles… et tout s'illumine, tout reprend vie. L'espoir est de nouveau possible, car une femme a ouvert son cœur et ses bras à un petit garçon perdu.

Dominique, vous êtes comme un miracle qui permet de croire encore en l'humanité, qui nous redonne notre place ; votre exemple donne à chacun la possibilité de se redéfinir en tant que sujet capable d'agir pour le bien d'autrui.

Merci à sud-est-maroc.com d'être là pour relayer ce message, Continuez à nous parler de celles et de ceux qui oeuvrent dans la discrétion et nous rappellent que nous sommes sur terre pour nous aimer, simplement.

Merci Madame,votre histoire est très touchante et a fini par payer, en dépit des difficultés de parcours rencontrées. Le petit Ali a enfin trouvé la maman qui lui a jusqu'à présent manquée, qui va certainement très bien s'occuper de lui pour que peut être un jour il lui succédera pour devenir un Grand Général, non pas de guerre, mais de sapeurs pompiers et contribuer ainsi à éteindre les foyers de feu qui embrasent aujourd'hui par çi par là notre pauvre petite planète.

التهامي المزواري الكلاوي (بالأمازيغية: تهامى اكْلاوّو) (1878–1956 م) كان باشا مراكش وزعيم قبيلة كلاوة بجبال الأطلس الكبير. انتقل من خدمة العرش العلوي والمخزن، إلى أبرز المتمردين عليهما زمن الحماية الفرنسية. شارك في مؤامرة 20 أغسطس 1953، عندما خُلع السلطان عن العرش ونفي بمعية عائلته الملكية وأخذ محمد بن عرفة مكان السلطان محمد الخامس. استمد قوته من زعامته القبلية التي جعلته يكتسب قوة التعاون التام مع الفرنسيين، وهو تعاون بوّأه منصب الباشا. وقد حكم مباشرة (35 سنة) أو من خلال أبنائه طيلة 44 سنة، وخضع له عدد كبير من السكان فاق المليون نسمة، وذلك إلى غاية سنة 1955.

ولد في دار كلاوة بتلوات، التي جعل منها والده محمد أبيبط سنة 1870 مقرا للإقامة داخل القصبة، وشبه ثكنة عسكرية، يحيط بها سوق أسبوعي. وكان جده أحمد المزواري يتولى منصب أمغار (شيخ) على قبيلة تلوات، وكان يعتمد في تدبير معاشه على ما كان يصله من « فتوحات» من قبائل اعتقدت صلاحه وقدرَه، وبدأ الازدهار المالي لعائلة المزواري بعد اكتشاف معدن الملح بأزرود، الذي ورّثه لابنه، الذي عمل على التقرب من السلطان مولاي عبد الرحمان. فولد في وقت أخذ فيه نجم المزواريين يصعد في سماء القبيلة. فتلقى تعليما دينيا بكتّاب تابع لقبيلة تلوات وفي مدرسة لوركة، ثم بزاوية سكر بأوريكة القريبة من مراكش، فحفظ القرآن إلى جانب بعض المتون الدينية واللغوية. لكن الاضطرابات التي عرفتها البلاد حالت دون مواصلته التحصيل، كما حصل على تكوين أولي عن أساليب الحرب. وكان للصعوبات التي واجهتها أسرة الكلاوي، وبخاصة والده محمد أبيبيط في مسعاه للتقرب من المخزن وفرض سيطرته على عمق ورزازات والاستيلاء على قصبة تاوريرت، أثرٌ في تربية وتكوين التهامي منذ بلوغه الرابعة من عمره، حيث أصبح في بداية شبابه يتابع بشغف الشؤون القبلية والمخزنية. وبعد سبع سنوات على ولادته، توفي والده سنة 1886، ليتكفل به شقيقه الأكبر، المدني الكلاوي، الذي عاش معه حياة الترحال، في «الحركات المخزنية» في بلاد السيبة، حيث كانت تربط عائلتهم علاقة قوية بين السلطان مولاي عبد العزيز.

- القيادة والباشوية :

وفي 1324هـ/1906م قام بمحاربة القائد الكندافي بمعية المتوكي فأرغم الحاج الطيب الكندافي على التخلي لفائدة قبائل كلاوة عن أونين وأزيوا، متحولا إلى اليد اليمنى لأخيه المدني الذي كان مشغولا بمحاربة السلطان مولاي عبد الحفيظ، فتخلى عن قيادة قبائل كلاوة لأخيه التهامي سنة 1327هـ/1909م.
وفي سنة 1328هـ/1910م توفي الحاج إدريس القائد بأولاد يحيى فاستغل التهامي الفرصة وأصبح يتدخل قي شؤون بلاد السوس، فبعث بحركة لمحاربة حيدا أوميس باشا تارودانت، وبعد مفاوضة عسيرة بينه وبين التهامي، وقع الاتفاق على تسليم القائد ناصر بن التهامي قيادة قبائل أولاد يحيى، في حين أصبحت قبائل سكتانة تابعة لأهل كلاوة. وبعد استقرار السلطان مولاي عبد الحفيظ بفاس، قرر سنة 1329 هـ/ 1911م تجريد الصدر الأعظم المدني وكل أفراد أسرته من مهامهم السياسية والإدارية، بسبب شكايات عديدية قدمتها القبائل بحق آل كلاوي. وفي نهاية 1330هـ/1912م، بعد التخلص من حركة المجاهد أحمد الهيبة وطرده من مراكش، أصبح التهامي الكلاوي الحليف الرئيسي للحماية الفرنسية شمال وجنوب الأطلس، فاستعاد آل الكلاوي مواقعهم في الجهاز المخزني بدعم من سلطة الحماية في نفس السنة. وفي عصر السلطان مولاي يوسف تم تعيين المدني صدرا أعظم (وزير الحرب) سنة 1327هـ/1927م، حصل التهامي على ظهير تعيينه باشا مراكش، وكان عمره يقل عن 30 سنة، فأظهر صرامة وشدة في ممارسة سلطته، وأطلق يديه على الأطلس وسوس. وقاد الباشا التهامي الكلاوي، وابن أخيه القائد حمو الكلاوي حملة ببلاد تودغة، ضد أتباع التوزونيني وبلقاسم النكادي، الذين بدأوا يهددون تلك المنطقة

وفي سنة 1923 عين الكلاوي الشيخ محمد بلحسن الدباغ لتدريس أبناءه المهدي وإبراهيم. ورافقهما الدباغ إلى باريس لإتمام دراستهما سنة 1925. وتَمَّ تَعْيِينُ الدباغ سنة 1930 إماما وخطيبا لمسجد باريس باقتراح من الكلاوي وكان يعقد به مجالس علمية.

- الخلاف مع السلطان :

يوم 23 ديسمبر 1950، بمناسبة حفلات عيد المولد النبوي، تجاوز الكلاوي حدود اللياقة أثناء مخاطبة السلطان. حيث عاتب الكلاوي السلطان بلهجة غاضبة على الدعم الكبير الذي كان يبديه لحزب الاستقلال، حسب زعمه، مخاطبا إياه : «لستم إلا ظل سلطان، لم تعودوا سلطان المغرب، أنتم سلطان حزب الاستقلال».
والذي أشعل الخلاف بينهما هو حدث استقبال السلطان لوفد حزب الاستقلال الذي طرد من مجلس الحكومة من قبل المقيم العام؛ وهو الاستقبال الذي لم يستسغه الباشا.

فوكل محمد الخامس مهمة لصهر الكلاوي الصدر الأعظم محمد المقري، وهي إخبار التهامي الكلاوي بأنه غير مرغوب به في القصر حتى إشعار آخر.
وبعد الخصام والطرد من القصر، أقدم الباشا على صرف وفود قبائله التي جاءت لتجديد البيعة للسلطان. وشرع في حشد الدعم داخل مناطق نفوده، بتعاون من الحماية الفرنسية، وأطلق فرسان القبائل التابعة له للزحف نحو فاس والرباط، وعرف هذا الحدث بأزمة العرش الأولى، التي اندلعت مع بداية سنة 1951.

في 12 يوليو 1955 طرح جلبرت غرانفال فكرة عقد «مائدة مستديرة» فكان جواب الكلاوي بأنه لا يرى مانعا ليجلس ممثل عنه مع باشا صفرو السابق امبارك البكاي، ولكن الكلاوي أصر على استبعاد حضور أحمد بلافريج وغيره من القادة الوطنيين الآخرين.

بعد صدور لائحة المتعاونيين مع الاستعمار ورد اسم التهامي الكلاوي، وابنيه إبراهيم واحماد، ضمنها، وحكم عليهم بعدم الأهلية الوطنية لمدة 15 سنة مع مصادرة أملاكهم. وترك التهامي الكلاوي في قصره، عندما مات، حوالي 100 امرأة بين خادمة وجارية، وأرملة واحدة هي والدة عبد الصادق الكلاوي. وكان الباشا قد تزوج شرعا خمس سيدات، خلف منهن 9 أبناء أحياء لحظة وفاته، لا تضع بينهم شريعة الإرث فرقا سواء كانت أمهم جارية أم زوجة شرعية. وعند تنفيذ الحجز على ممتلكاته في حوز مراكش سنة 1958، كان مجموع الملكيات القروية المسجلة في الحوز وحده يغطي مساحة تبلغ 11.400 هكتار مسقية، وكان من بين الأملاك أيضا 25.000 من الأراضي التي ليس لها رسوم، وأراضي زيتون تصل إلى أكثر من 660.000 شجرة، تم لاحقا ارجاع لعائلة الكلاوي جزء كبير من أملاكها.
توفي يوم اثنين من سنة 1956م على الساعة الواحدة بعد الظهر، ودفن صباح الثلاثاء بضريح ابن سليمان الجزولي، وحضر جنازته وفد من الحكومة المغربية برئاسة الوزير لحسن اليوسي مبعوث الملك محمد الخامس.
- اهتماماته وأنشطته:

كان له اهتمام بالفلاحة من زراعة وغراسة وكسب وغيرها. والتهامي الكلاوي من أوائل من جرب زراعة القطن بالمغرب، فقد جلب لها فنيين مصريين قصد التجربة. كما كان له ولع كبير بالرياضة، مارس الرماية، وأول من جلب رياضة الجولف للمغرب (1924م)، حيث كان له ملعب كبير بمراكش بلغت مساحته 90 هكتار، وشارك في مباريات عديدة في انجلترا وفرنسا وسويسرا وغيرها. ومن أسفاره الكثيرة للخارج، الدعوة التي تلقاها لحضور احتفالات زواج ملكة بريطانيا العظمى إليزابيث الثانية باعتباره في مقام رجل دولة، وارتباطاته الوثيقة برئيس الوزراء البريطاني وينستون تشرشل الذي حل مرارا ضيفا على الكلاوي في مراكش.

وكان للكلاوي اهتمام كبير باقتناء الكتب، إذ امتلك خزانة كبير تعد من كبريات الخزائن بالمغرب، تضم مطبوعات ومخطوطات نادرة. وقد طبع على نفقته الخاصة الكثير من الكتب الدينية والعلمية. صادرها جيش التحرير في قصر الكلاوي أوائل سنة 1956 وتم إنقاذها وحفظها في أقبية الأمانة الملكية الخاصة.

وكانت تربطه صلات بأدباء من أمثال الروائية سيدونيه غابرييل كوليت والموسيقي موريس رافيل، وحتى إرنست همنغواي ، الذي واظب على لقائه خلال تواجده في باريس.

- الشعر :
بالإضافة إلى الأشعار الكثيرة لمحمد بن إبراهيم التي قيلت في الباشا الكلاوي، والتي تضمنها ديوانه روض الزيتون الذي جمع وطبع بأمر من الملك الحسن الثاني، ألف أحمد متفكر سنة 2007 كتاب نظم القوافي في الباشا الكلاوي إبان ولائه للعرش العلوي وهي مجموعة شعرية وثروة أدبية مغربية تؤرخ لمرحلة من تاريخ المغرب الحديث، تجمع أشعار ثلة من شعراء المغرب والمشرق، تعود علاقة الباشا الكلاوي بهم إلى بداية العشرينيات والثلاثينيات والأربعينيات، يوم كان الكلاوي من خدام العرش العلوي الأوفياء، فكانوا يلجؤون إليه من أجل العطاء.

- الدعارة :

وكتب الشاعر المصري بيرم التونسي قصيدة عن الكلاوي نُشرت في جريدة "المصور" عدد 3 سبتمبر 1953، يصف فيها أملاك الباشا من دور الدعارة: "رأيته في باريس يشبه/ صبي فران. لا هو عربي ولا هندي/ ولا إنسان. جلاوي كل أملاكه/ بيوت وفجور.

رغم ذلك كان صارما مع البنات الأخريات، حيث يذكر أنه منع يوما بنات عدد من كبار المسؤولين والأعيان المغاربة من حضور زفاف في مراكش بلباس اعتبره أوروبيا ولا يتماشى مع التقاليد المغربية.

ارتبطت هذه الحلوة بازدهار صناعة السكر بالمغرب الأقصى منذ العهد المرابطي والموحدي و المرينيي والفترة الذهبية في عصر السعديين باعتبار ان المغرب كان أول مصدر عالمي لهذه المادة لأوروبا ولدول المشرق حسب كتاب " نزهة الحادي بأخبار ملوك القرن الحادي " للمؤرخ محمد الصغير الإفراني المتوفي بداية القرن الثامن عشر والذي روى على أن السلطان أحمد المنصور الذهبي كان يزن الرخام القادم من إيطاليا بوزن السكر رأسا برأس أثناء تشييده قصر البديع بحيت كانت منطقة السوس مزدهرة بمزارع القصب ومصانع استخراج السكر.

ومنذ ذلك الوقت تعتبر صناعة الفانيد والأشفافول اختصاص مغربي سواء في الولائم والحفلات العائلية أو في المواسم والأسواق والمناسبات الدينية وبحكم تلاقح الثقافات وكون المغرب بلد استقبال لكل الحضارات القديمة فقد تأثرت هذه الصناعة بتقاليد واعراف الأمم المنصهرة بنسيجه الاجتماعي وبالتالي نجد الفانيد والاشفافول العبري والاندلسي والفيلالي والصحراوي والجبلي والعربي وفانيد دار المخزن وأهل فاس والتركي العثماني لكن تبقى رمزيتها وحضورها الأنثروبولوجي وارتباطها بالذاكرة والتراث الشعبي أكثر فائدة وقيمة من الجانب التاريخي.

الصورة تعود لفترة الدخول الفرنسي لمدينة مكناس لكون هذه الحلقة امام باب المنصور العلج تتكون من نساء ورجال فرقة القناصة السنغاليين بلواء الشرف بالجيش الفرنسي المعسكر على هضبة حمرية بالمخيم الابيض ومخيم الزيتون منذ نهاية سنة 1911 الى حدود سنة 1916.
ومن خلال تفحص الصورة يبدو انه احتفال خاص على الطريقة السينغالية المحلية نساء وسط الحلقة يرقصن و ينشدن ويحيط بهن الجنود السود ربما احتفال بمناسبة خاصة في غياب حشود الاهالي والمعمرين .
لكن مايهمنا هو الحالة الاصلية للسور والبرج القريب من رحبة بين البيبان الحديثة العهد والتي فتحت خلال عملية الترميم والاصلاح الكبرى بمكناس سنة 1926 ، حيت تم فتح ميضاة عمومية وبوابتين لدخول ساحة للاعودة وتحويل محكمة الباشا الى البناية القريبة من هذين البوابتين أمام باب سعيد المعروفة خطأ بباب عيسي .
الصورة تبين البرج والبناية القديمة على حالتهما الاصلية .

Ancient Mural Painting In The Nubian Pyramids Depicting A Giant Carrying Two Elephants!

If you drive north from Khartoum along a narrow desert road toward the ancient city of Meroë, a breathtaking view emerges from beyond the mirage: dozens of steep pyramids piercing the horizon. No matter how many times you may visit, there is an awed sense of discovery.

In Meroë itself, once the capital of the Kingdom of Kush, the road divides the city. To the east is the royal cemetery, packed with close to 50 sandstone and red brick pyramids of varying heights; many have broken tops, the legacy of 19th-century European looters. To the west is the royal city, which includes the ruins of a palace, a temple and a royal bath. Each structure has a distinctive architecture that draws on local, Egyptian and Greco-Roman decorative tastes—evidence of Meroe's global connections.

A brief history of the "Land of Kush"

The first settlers in northern Sudan date back 300,000 years. It is home to the oldest sub-Saharan African kingdom, the kingdom of Kush (about 2500-1500 BC). This culture produced some of the most beautiful pottery in the Nile valley, including Kerma beakers.

Sudan was coveted for its rich natural resources particularly gold, ebony and ivory. Several objects in the British Museum collection are made of these materials. Ancient Egyptians were attracted southward seeking these resources during the Old Kingdom (about 2686-2181 BC), which often led to conflict as Egyptian and Sudanese rulers sought to control trade.

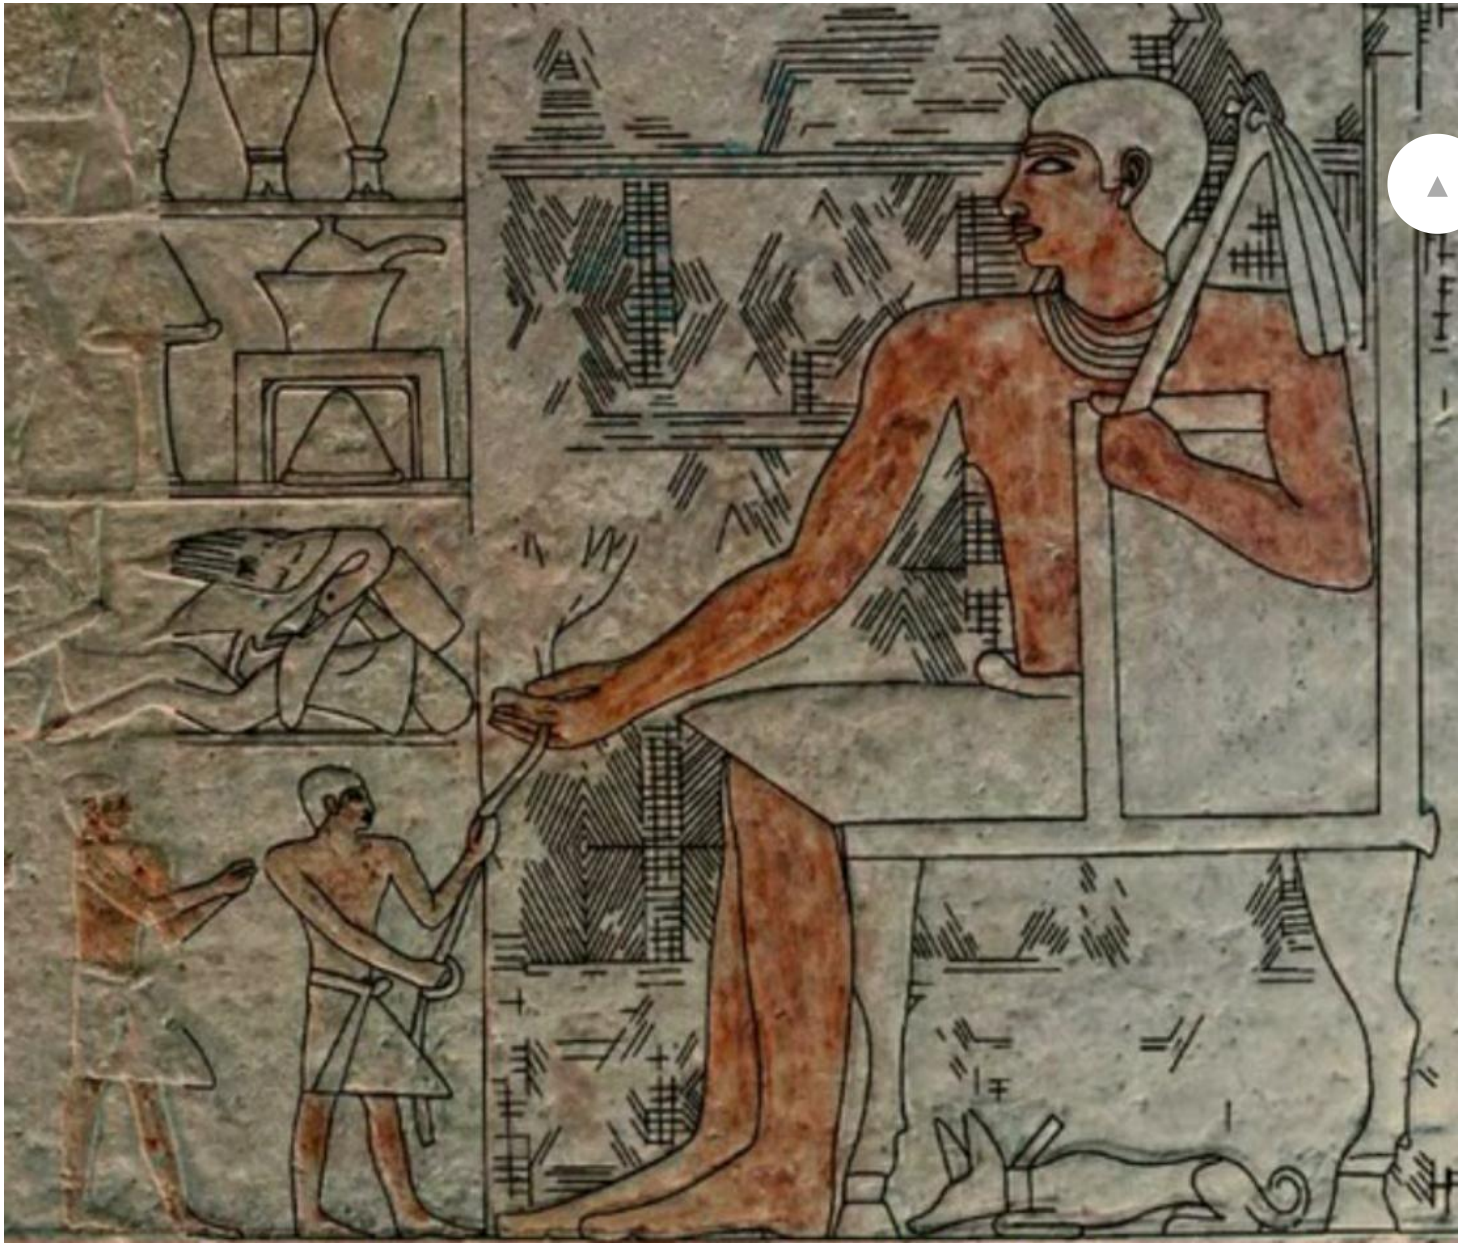
Kush was the most powerful state in the Nile valley around 1700 BC. The conflict between Egypt and Kush followed, culminating in the conquest of Kush by Thutmose I (1504-1492 BC). In the west and south, Neolithic cultures remained as both areas were beyond the reach of the Egyptian rulers.

The city of Meroë and the strange mural painting of a giant carrying elephants

The city of Meroë is marked by more than two hundred pyramids, of which many are in ruins. They have the distinctive size and proportions of Nubian pyramids.

The site of Meroë was brought to the knowledge of Europeans in 1821 by the French mineralogist Frédéric Cailliaud (1787-1869). The most interesting objects found were the reliefs and paintings on the walls of the sepulchral chambers. One of the paintings depicts a giant of enormous proportions carrying two elephants.



His features are not Nubian but caucasian and his hair is light in color. Will this mural painting be proof of the existence of a race of red-haired giants with six fingers in antiquity?

In the distant past, did giants really roam around the Nile valley?

In 79 AD, the Roman historian Josephus Flavius wrote that the last of the race of Egyptian giants did live in the 13th century BC, during the reign of King Joshua. He further wrote that they had huge bodies, and their faces were so unlike ordinary humans that it was amazing to look at them, and it was scary to listen to their loud voice which was like a lion roar.

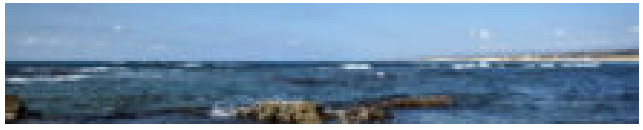
Moreover, many of the wall paintings of ancient Egypt depict the builders of Pyramids a “Giant People” by the size of 5 to 6 meters tall. According to experts, these giant people were able to lift 4 to 5 tons of blocks individually. Some of those ancient mural paintings showed giant kings ruling ancient Egypt, while some depicted comparably little-sized servants under the giant people.



In 1988, Gregor Spoerri, a Swiss entrepreneur and a passionate admirer of the history of Ancient Egypt, met with a gang of robbers of ancient burials through one of the private suppliers in Egypt. The meeting took place in a small house in Bir Hooker, a hundred kilometres northeast of Cairo, where Spoerri witnessed a giant mummified finger wrapped in rags.

The finger was very dry and light. According to Spoerri, the incredible creature to which it belonged should have been at least 5 meters (almost 16.48ft) in height. To prove the authenticity, one tomb raider showed a photo of an X-Ray of the mummified finger taken in the 1960s.

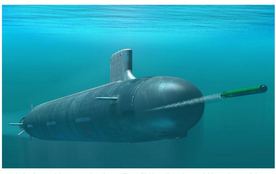
André Rebouças, inventeur de la torpille et champion de l'abolition de l'esclavage

Au 19e siècle, cet homme immense révolutionnait l'industrie de l'armement et contribuait grandement, à mettre un terme définitif à l'esclavage en Amérique. Ces réalisations de géant lui valent aujourd'hui d'être surnommé l'ingénieur de la liberté.

André Rebouças

Au 15e siècle, les portugais arrivent en Afrique et commencent la traite négrière européenne. Ils détruisent très violemment les royaumes Swahili, l'empire du Monomotapa et surtout l'empire Kongo; kidnappant et déportant des membres de la famille royale pour les mettre en esclavage au Brésil.

C'est Zumbi, un Kongo originaire de la royauté, qui va mener la plus emblématique des résistances contre l'esclavage au Brésil. Il sera défait et l'asservissement des Africains y continuera pendant des siècles encore. Le Brésil est le pays qui a reçu le plus grand nombre d'Africains déportés. Ils entraient surtout par la région côtière de Bahia.



André Pinto Rebouças naît à Bahia en 1838. Sa mère est une femme noire. Son père est un métis libre et autodidacte, devenu avocat et politicien très puissant. André Rebouças reçoit une éducation de pointe aux écoles militaires de Rio de Janeiro et de Praia Vermalha. A 22 ans, il est diplômé de physiques et de mathématiques et fait lieutenant. En 1861, lui et son frère Antonio, boursiers, voyagent pour l'Europe et se voient refusés de terminer leur formation, en raison de leur couleur de peau.

Retourné au Brésil, André Rebouças travaille en tant qu'ingénieur à l'amélioration de ports et de fortifications. En raison du racisme, il est payé trois fois moins que ses collègues blancs. En 1864 commence la guerre contre le Paraguay, la plus terrible guerre de l'histoire de l'Amérique latine. C'est durant ce conflit qu'il va moderniser la torpille.

L'invention de la torpille automobile

Avant les années 1860, le terme torpille désignait une arme explosive qui agissait comme une mine à la surface de l'eau ; ou qui était lancée par des moyens rudimentaires. André Rebouças va mettre au point en 1865-1866, un mécanisme permettant à la torpille d'être propulsée automatiquement dans l'eau par une mise à feu, principe utilisé pour toutes les torpilles jusqu'à nos jours.

Les documents de l'époque laissent apparaitre que sa torpille autopropulsée est inventée peu avant la torpille autopropulsée de Robert Whitehead créée en 1866. Whitehead est pourtant connu aujourd'hui comme le seul inventeur de la torpille moderne.

Le principe de propulsion automatique des torpilles, utilisé jusqu'à nos jours, a été inventé par André Rebouças

Après la guerre, André Rebouças voyage encore pour l'Europe et les États-Unis où il subit le racisme. Son retour au Brésil va le voir s'atteler de nouveau à la réalisation de projets civils majeurs. Il dirige la construction de nombreux ports et voies ferrées. Il construit un système d'approvisionnement en eau pour Rio de Janeiro, alors en proie à une sécheresse, qui fera des centaines de milliers de morts dans le pays.

Devenu très haut cadre de l'administration impériale, il enseigne les mathématiques, la physique, la botanique et la géologie à l'école polytechnique de Rio de Janeiro. Riche et influent, il est très ami et écouté de l'empereur Pedro. Il va dès 1880, se consacrer à l'œuvre de sa vie : la fin de l'esclavage.

L'abolition

André Rebouças cofonde la Société Brésilienne contre l'Esclavage et la Société Abolitionniste. Il organise le mouvement abolitionniste et y investit sa fortune. Il conseille ses collègues activistes, parmi lesquels Joaquim Nabuco, un Blanc, militant le plus connu à ce jour, mais qui pensait que libérer les Africains-Brésiliens mis en esclavage, serait un moyen de limiter l'impact de l'infériorité de leur race sur le Brésil. Rebouças émerge pendant la lutte, comme la plus importante voix noire contre l'esclavage, aux côtés de Luiz Gama ou José de Patrocinio notamment.

Il publie des pamphlets dont Abolição Immediata (abolition immédiate) et s'oppose à l'indemnisation des esclavagistes. Sincèrement humaniste et visionnaire, pour lui, libérer les Noirs mis en esclavage ne sera pas suffisant. Il se démarque en développant surtout le concept de démocratie rurale, qui consisterait après l'esclavage, à donner des terres et des conditions de vie descentes aux anciens esclaves et aux pauvres, afin de créer une société véritablement égalitaire.

Le travail de tout le mouvement abolitionniste fini par porter ses fruits. Le 13 Mai 1888 l'esclavage est aboli au Brésil, marquant la fin totale de près de 400 ans de mise en esclavage des Africains dans toute l'Amérique.

L'empereur Pedro confie des missions gouvernementales à André Rebouças mais la royauté est renversée et l'ingénieur suit son fidèle ami le roi en exil au Portugal. Il y travaille comme journaliste avant d'aller vivre en Angola, Ruinée et malade, André Rebouças va vivre sur l'île portugaise de Madère, où son corps est retrouvé au bas de la falaise près de sa maison. Il meurt à 60 ans. On pense qu'il s'est suicidé.

André Rebouças est un des plus grands Africains-Brésiliens de l'histoire. Au-delà de l'invention de la torpille moderne, c'est la proéminence et surtout l'humanisme sincère de son combat victorieux pour en finir avec l'esclavage, qui font de lui un homme d'exception.

Angelina Jolie admet avoir participé à « d'horribles rituels sanguinaires des Illuminati »

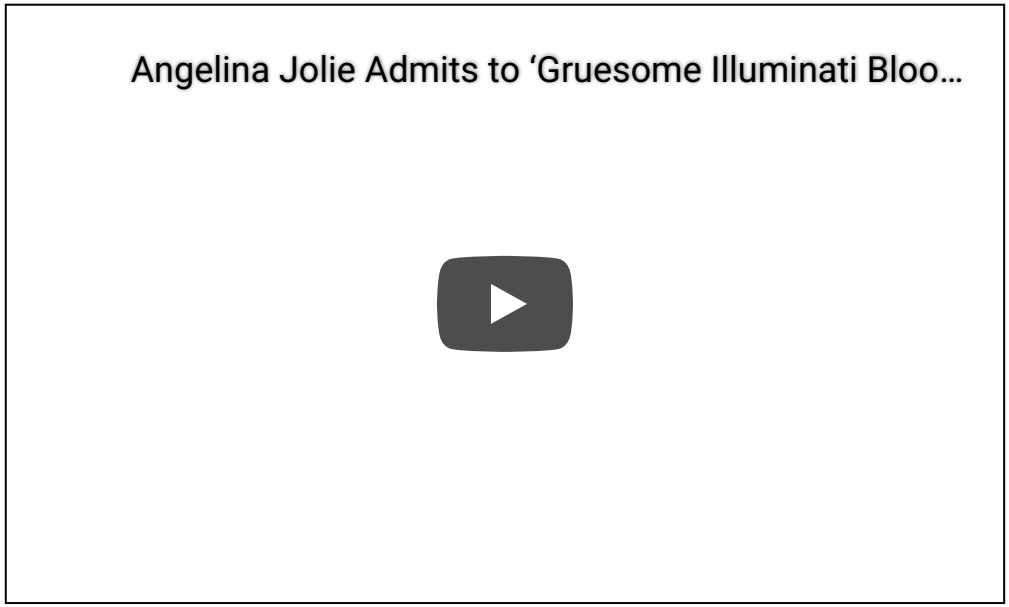
On a longtemps prétendu que les stars d'Hollywood et d'autres célébrités devaient rejoindre les Illuminati pour atteindre le sommet de l'industrie du divertissement, mais peu de gens en dehors du cercle intérieur des Illuminati comprennent vraiment ce que cela signifie.

Cela a commencé à changer, car les célébrités qui ont été soumises au système des Illuminati craquent et divulguent des informations internes qui exposent les véritables rouages d'Hollywood et de l'industrie du divertissement.



La pop-star Britney Spears a récemment décrit en détail les abus « sataniques » qu'elle a subis aux mains de ses manipulateurs Illuminati pendant les 13 années de sa mise sous tutelle, notamment des rituels sexuels répugnants, des transfusions sanguines hebdomadaires et des expériences médicales MK Ultra.

Britney n'est pas la seule star à se dévoiler et à nous donner un aperçu de ce qui se passe derrière le rideau.

Une vidéo étonnante a fait surface dans laquelle Angelina Jolie, 23 ans, révèle les véritables rouages d'Hollywood en décrivant à des amis ses expériences de participation à des « rituels secrets illuminati ».

Angelina semble parfois folle et possédée lorsqu'elle décrit les expériences qu'elle a vécues avec la société secrète des Illuminati. Elle explique qu'elle a tué un serpent en guise de sacrifice et qu'elle a été tatouée, ou marquée au fer rouge, dans le cadre du rituel d'initiation.

L'enregistrement révèle également que Jolie avait déjà montré un enregistrement d'un rituel Illuminati à l'une de ses amies. Son amie, parlant à voix basse, décrit le visionnage de la séquence en disant :

Rien n'a changé depuis qu'Angelina Jolie était une jeune femme tentant de percer dans l'industrie du divertissement. Megan Fox a récemment laissé entendre qu'elle participait à d'effroyables rituels sanguinaires des Illuminati.

En parlant à Glamour UK de sa relation avec la marionnette Illuminati Machine Gun Kelly, Fox a déclaré :

« Ce ne sont que quelques gouttes, mais oui, nous consommons le sang de l'autre à l'occasion, uniquement à des fins rituelles*. »*

De quoi ont besoin les jeunes stars pour réussir à Hollywood et dans l'industrie du spectacle ? Le physique ? Du talent ? Un travail acharné ? Non. Ils doivent vendre leur âme au diable. Et pas au sens figuré. Et c'est exactement ce qu'ils font.

Prenons par exemple le cas de la pop star anglaise Charlie XCX. Pendant des années, Charli XCX a travaillé sans relâche pour monter dans l'industrie musicale. Depuis 2013, elle a sorti cinq albums salués par la critique tout en remportant des trophées de l'industrie. Cependant, malgré son succès relatif, Charlie XCX ne pouvait toujours pas être qualifiée de « pop star majeure ».

Que lui manquait-il donc ? Elle n'avait pas encore vendu son âme au diable et rejoint les Illuminati.

Tout a changé en 2021 et CharlieXCX s'est hissée au sommet des charts et est devenue une « pop star majeure ».

tell ps about Aqua Tofana~The 17th Century Serum That Killed Hundreds Of Husbands

Aqua Tofana was a toxic concoction believed to be a poisonous liquid that was notorious for its use as a deadly poison in the 17th century. It was purportedly used by women to murder their husbands or other unwanted individuals, hence the moniker "the 17th century serum that killed hundreds of husbands." However, it's important to note that much of the information surrounding Aqua Tofana is based on legend and historical accounts, and its exact composition and usage remain unclear.

Legend has it that Aqua Tofana was created by a woman named Giulia Tofana, who lived in Palermo, Italy, during the 17th century. She was said to have been a professional poisoner who sold the toxic potion to women seeking to rid themselves of abusive or unfaithful husbands. The exact ingredients of Aqua Tofana were supposedly a closely guarded secret, but it was believed to contain toxic substances such as arsenic, lead, and other poisonous compounds.

Aqua Tofana was said to be a colorless and odorless liquid, making it difficult to detect when mixed with food or drink. It was reported to have been sold in small vials and was often administered in small doses over time to avoid suspicion. The slow-acting poison was believed to cause symptoms that could be mistaken for natural illnesses, making it difficult to trace the cause of death back to Aqua Tofana.

It's worth noting that there are varying accounts of Aqua Tofana's potency and effectiveness. Some sources claim that it was a highly potent poison that could kill within hours or days, while others suggest that it was relatively mild and might have taken weeks or even months to cause death. Nonetheless, its alleged use as a murder weapon and its reputation as a "husband killer" earned Aqua Tofana infamy during its time.

It's important to note that murder, including the use of poison, is illegal and unethical in all circumstances. The use of Aqua Tofana or any other toxic substances to harm others is highly unethical and criminal, and should never be condoned or emulated. Historical accounts of Aqua Tofana and similar substances serve as a reminder of the dangers of toxic substances and the devastating consequences of their misuse.

Западный Судан

В культурно-историческом плане Западный Судан - одна из самых интересных, богатых событиями частей Тропической Африки. Со времени Карфагена Западный Судан поддерживает связь со всеми странами Средиземноморья. Эти связи усиливали контакты с берберами и арабами. Именно здесь, вблизи верхней излучины Нигера, в широкой полосе саванн, между южной оконечностью Сахары и верхней границей тропических лесов, возникали обширные державы Гана, Мали, Сонгай, государства моей и другие. Уже в XI-XV веках здесь существовали такие крупные экономические и культурные центры, как Гао, Кумби-Сале, Томбукту, упоминание о которых содержится в описаниях средневековых арабских путешественников, географов и историков Ибн-Хаукаля, аль-Бекри, Ибн-Баттуты и других.

Несмотря на то, что этот район со времени средневековья оставался открытым влиянию ислама, культура народов Западного Судана не утратила своей самобытности. К моменту европейской колонизации местные земледельческие народы бамбара, догоны, моей, сенуфо сохранили родоплеменную структуру, автохтонные религии, фольклор и традиционное искусство.

Народы Западного Судана, искусство которых здесь рассматривается, принадлежат к языковой группе нигер-конго, к подгруппам вольтийской (гур) и манде (см. 8, 551). К первой подгруппе относятся догоны, моей, курумба (или фульсе), бобо, лоби, сенуфо и другие; ко второй - бамбара, малинке и другие (см.: 53, 289-292; 6, 46-47). Эти народы бли тическом отношении. Их образ жизни, материальная кул огия, фольклор, верования и обряды позволяют гов общности (см. работы М. Селения догонов располагаются террасами на склонах холмов у подножия скалистых осыпей, на которых возвышаются конические постройки их легендарных предшественников - теллем. В своих церемониях догоны используют восемьдесят различных масок. Причем все они при большом разнообразии форм и сюжетов сохраняют черты одного стиля. В каждом из ритуалов принимает участие определенный набор масок. Некоторые из масок догонов сохранились только в музеях. С другой стороны, отмечено появление новых типов, сохраняющих основные признаки местного стиля (ил. 104).

Почти во всех масках подчеркнута вертикальная ось, и большинство из них имеют два композиционных центра: одним из них является личина, то есть часть маски, закрывающая лицо, другим - навершие, представляющее собой самостоятельную пластическую структуру. Стиль догонов характеризуется прямолинейными "кубистическими" объемами, резкой ограненностью форм, прямоугольными сочленениями, четкими, без полутонов границами света и тени. Антропоморфные, как правило, маски догонов всегда дополнены чертами различных животных (обезьяны, антилопы, зайца, гиены и т. п.). Самая распространенная и одна из наиболее почитаемых масок - канага. Плоское лицо с отверстиями для глаз разделено пополам тонкой вертикальной перегородкой носа, упирающейся в нависающий в виде трехгранного карниза лоб. Навершие имеет форму лотарингского креста с отогнутыми концами перекладин. Различные вариации этой формы, напоминающей схематическое изображение человеческой фигуры в так называемой позе лягушки, встречаются в первобытном и традиционном искусстве повсеместно: в наскальной живописи Австралии, Восточной Испании, Скандинавии, Закавказья, в искусстве канадских индейцев и т. д. (см. 47, 170-173) (ил. 106, рис. 35).

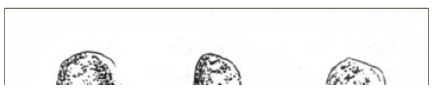
Рис. 35. Маска канага. Дерево. Догоны, Мали. Музей Человека, Париж

Символическое значение этой формы, венчающей маску канага, интерпретируется по-разному. М. Гриоль считает ее символом равновесия между землей и небом, символом космического порядка; другие видят в ней священную птицу с распростертыми крыльями, фигуру верховного божества в акте созидания; по Кьерсмейеру, это символ крокодила, на спине которого, по преданию, догоны переплыли Нигер во время их исхода из "Страны манде".



Маска сириге, или, как ее еще называют, "многоярусный дом", отличается от канага главным образом своим навершием. Лицевая же часть этой маски (как и многих других) в общих чертах повторяет лаконичную антропоморфную схему канага. Навершие сириге представляет собой ажурную доску или плоский шест высотой от трех до пяти метров, символизирующий гинна - дом огона, религиозного вождя и правителя догонов. Покрывающая шест резьба в виде повторяющихся геометрических форм отражает космогонические представления догонов (ил. 105).

Лицевая часть зооморфных масок, как правило, сохраняет ту же пластическую структуру: плоский прямоугольник, разделенный на две части узкой вертикальной перегородкой. Маска может быть увенчана прямыми или изогнутыми рогами (валу - маска антилопы), длинными ушами (дьомо - маска зайца) или имеет монолитную обтекаемую форму ("черная обезьяна" - маска бабуина). Навершия в виде человеческой фигуры (например, маска Ясигине)(Ясигине (или Ясиги) - мифическая женщина парная женская ипостась Йуругу, укравшая секрет масок и потому посвященная в ава. По преданию, с этого времени некоторая категория женщин имеет право выступать в ритуальных танцах под маской Ясигине) или фигурки обезьяны, как правило, менее геометризованы, а иногда почти натуралистичны. Причем в этих случаях лицевая часть полностью лишается изобразительных элементов, превращаясь в плоскость, на которой вертикаль обозначена лишь как перегородка между прямоугольными глазными отверстиями (ил. 108-112).

Матерью всех масок считается маска имина на - "великая маска", сочетающая в себе особенности обоих типов: антропоморфный характер лицевой части, геометрический орнамент навершия (достигающего десятиметровой высоты) и более реалистическую трактовку змеиной головы с открытой пастью, венчающей навершие. Эту маску можно видеть лишь на церемонии Сиги (ил. 121).

Каждой маске соответствуют специальный костюм и украшения, скрывающие танцора с ног до головы. Большая часть костюма состоит из растительных волокон. Из тех же волокон изготовляются и маски, изображающие людей, например женщин фульбе (Фульбе считались прежде врагами догонов, и их ньяму следовало нейтрализовать точно так же, как и ньяму убитых животных). Непременный аксессуар этой маски - женская грудь из двух половинок плода баобаба. Вообще же маски догонов изготовлены из мягкой древесины и поэтому сохраняются лишь относительно короткое время. Это обстоятельство (исчезновение образцов), возможно, содействует ускоренной эволюции масок - их стиля и формы - по сравнению с круглой скульптурой (Ж. Деланж видит причину ускоренной эволюции в том, что изготовители масок здесь чаще всего их носители - члены ава, а не кузнецы, которые являются потомственными ремесленниками и по установившейся традиции наряду со своим основным делом обычно занимаются изготовлением скульптуры).

Скульптура, собранная различными экспедициями в районе Бандиагара, принадлежит к числу наиболее самобытных памятников африканского традиционного искусства. В то же время часть ее относится к весьма немногочисленной группе деревянной африканской скульптуры, возраст которой измеряется несколькими (по крайней мере, двумя) столетиями. Это скульптура, приписываемая догонами полулегендарному народу теллем. Выше упоминалось о том, что, по преданию, догоны переселились в район Бандиагара из "Страны манде". Это событие относят примерно к XIII веку (см.: 200, 46-47).

В мифах и легендах догонов сохранились воспоминания о низкорослых людях андумбулу, которые были постепенно вытеснены людьми нормального роста - теллем. После прибытия догонов в район Бандиагара теллем покинули свои селения, оставив в пещерах святилища и захоронения с различными культовыми предметами, включая скульптуру. Скульптура теллем высечена из очень твердого дерева и покрыта окаменевшей коркой жертвенной смеси, состоящей из крови и рисового отвара. В большинстве случаев это мужские и женские статуэтки, а также фигурки гермафродитов. Их отличительная черта - сочетание обобщенных монументальных форм с экспрессивной динамичной композицией. Патетические жесты, странные позы резко контрастируют со строгими, прямолинейными ограненными формами, четко вписанными в объем заготовки - обрубок древесного ствола (На этом принципе основан опыт классификации скульптуры догонов, принадлежащий Ж. Лоду. В результате стилистического анализа ста шестидесяти четырех статуэток он нашел возможным распределить их на несколько групп в зависимости от степени соответствия фигуры первоначальному, объему заготовки (см.: 197)). Обратим особое внимание на строго вертикальные фигуры с вытянутыми вверх руками - эта поза повторяется в более поздних статуэтках и рельефных украшениях на бытовых предметах. По-видимому, та же фигура лежит в основе навершия маски канага, а возможно, и сириге. Этот сюжет один из самых архаичных в искусстве догонов. Фигуры с поднятыми руками встречаются иногда в сочетании со скульптурными или рельефными изображениями животных (отдельные статуэтки, резные изображения на табуретах и культовых предметах). Кроме названных среди статуэток теллем имеются стоящие и сидящие фигуры (иногда парные) с руками, сложенными на животе, прижатыми к ушам, коленопреклоненные, верхом на животном. Теллем также принадлежат отдельные фигурки животных. Почти все скульптуры теллем были найдены в пещерах, которые, судя по находящимся там скелетам, служили долгое время местами захоронения. Экспедиции, тщательно обследовавшие пещеры, обнаружили помимо скульптуры деревянные резные подголовники, фрагменты тканей, плетения, гончарные изделия, бронзовые и железные браслеты, наконечники стрел и копий и многие другие предметы (ил. 113-115, рис. 36, 37, ил. 116).

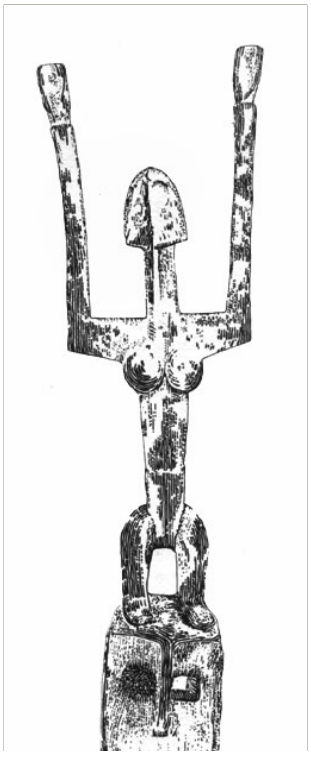

Рис. 37. Маска. Приписывается теллем, Мали. Галерея П. Матисса, Нью-Йорк

Проблема авторства и возраста скульптуры теллем считается до сих пор не решенной. Дальше всего в ее разрешении удалось продвинуться Ж. Лоду, которому принадлежит серия работ, посвященных стилистическому анализу, классификации и вопросам датировки искусства теллем и догонов. Возраст этой скульптуры Лод считает "безусловно преклонным". В подтверждение он, в частности, приводит сведения, сообщенные П. Ланглуа, о местонахождении серии статуэток, обнаруженных в труднодоступной пещере, вход в которую был завален оползнем. "Хорошо защищенные от непогоды, влаги, насекомых каменными пещерами, а также толстым слоем жертвенных возлияний, эти статуэтки могли сохраняться весьма продолжительное время. Кроме того, их охраняла легенда. Догоны считают эти пещеры священным местом. Они никогда не отваживаются их посещать: эти могилы и святилища им не принадлежат" (см.: 200, 48).

Несмотря на все это, многие авторы считают, что скульптура теллем принадлежит догонам и представляет раннюю фазу развития их искусства. Действительно, скульптура теллем имеет так много общего с современным традиционным искусством догонов, что эти явления можно рассматривать как разные этапы развития одной художественной традиции.

Наиболее убедительное разрешение проблемы искусства теллем-догонов было предложено Ж. Лодом, который не ставит под сомнение существование в прошлом народа теллем, считая теллем предками современной народности курумба, в чьей культуре обнаруживаются некоторые элементы, родственные догонам (Лод также приводит свидетельство Е. Крамер о том, что в некоторых местах, как, например, в Йоро, еще и теперь живут люди, которых догоны называют либо теллем, либо курумба (см.: 200, 46)). Лод считает, что имеется много подтверждений тому, что после прихода догонов теллем не сразу и лишь частично покинули этот район. Причем во многих местах они долгое время уживались с догонами и укрепляли связи, в частности, в результате межплеменных браков. Приспосабливаясь к новым условиям, догоны должны были воспринять некоторые элементы местной культуры. Лод даже делает предположение, что в момент прибытия у догонов вообще не было собственной скульптуры и традиция ее изготовления была целиком воспринята от теллем.

Как бы там ни было, глубокое родство обеих традиций бесспорно. Независимо от того, являются ли скульптуры теллем-д огонов созданием одного или двух народов, нет никакого сомнения в том, что в традиционном художественном творчестве догонов находят свое развитие те самые сюжетные и пластические формы, которые составляют основу искусства теллем. Особенно наглядно это проявляется уже в том, что существует довольно большая группа памятников, органически сочетающих в себе стилистические признаки той и другой скульптуры. Таким образом, мы имеем редкую возможность проследить развитие форм традиционной скульптуры на обширном материале, имеющем солидную хронологическую перспективу. В случае же выявления более глубоких истоков скульптуры теллем-догонов этот материал следовало бы признать совершенно уникальным (ил. 117-119, рис. 38, ил. 503).

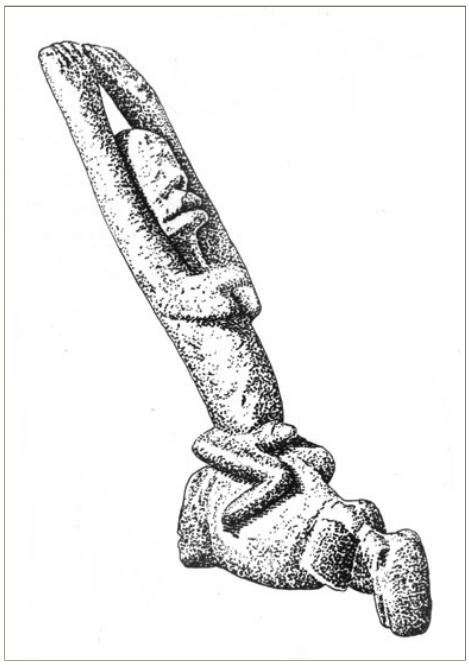

Рис. 38. Номмо. Дерево. Теллем или догоны, Мали. Музей Человека, Париж

Насколько известно, проблема происхождения искусства теллем до сих пор не затрагивалась. Однако уже имеется материал, позволяющий коснуться этого вопроса.

В конце 50-х годов в догонском селении Санга была обнаружена многофигурная каменная статуэтка (Находится в коллекции П. Тишмана, Нью-Йорк (см.: 200, фиг. 1)), ценность и особенность которой заключается в том, что она является пока что единственной каменной скульптурой, найденной у догонов. Обладая стилистическими чертами искусства теллем-догонов, она в то же время обнаруживает общие черты с каменными статуэтками помдо. Это обстоятельство заслуживает особого внимания, поскольку известно, что киси, так же как и догоны, выходцы из "Страны манде".

В плане генезиса традиционного искусства догоны представляют особый интерес также и потому, что они чуть ли не единственные в Западном Судане продолжатели древних традиций наскальной живописи. Наскальные изображения догонов, нанесенные красной, белой и черной красками, находятся в местах совершения обрядов посвящения молодежи. Примитивно намалеванные схематические фигуры людей и животных, а также прямоугольники и другие нефигуративные изображения иногда отдаленно напоминают формы масок, чаще всего - навершие маски канага. Упрощенная техника, степень схематизма и характер стилизации этих изображений соответствуют заключительной фазе наскального искусства Сахары. Эта архаическая форма сосуществует с самыми разнообразными видами прикладного искусства. Украшение деревянных бытовых предметов, деталей архитектуры, музыкальных инструментов круглой скульптурой, рельефом, резным и графическим орнаментом, конечно, не следует рассматривать как чисто декоративное оформление. Каждый или почти каждый элемент декора связан с теми или иными мифологическими, религиозными, магическими представлениями и имеет конкретный смысл и определенное назначение (ил. 120).

Рельефные женские и мужские фигуры на опорных столбах мужского ил. 122 дома - тогуны, ряды антропоморфных изображений на дверях амбаров, статуэтки всадников и фигуры предков на крышках сосудов и катушках ткацких станков по стилю почти не отличаются от культовой скульптуры. В прикладном, как и в культовом, искусстве догонов довольно часты изображения животных, особенно лошади (танцевальные трости, кубки, подголовники, а также статуэтки, изображающие животных (Назначение этих фигурок - охранять рисовые поля и сады от воров)) (ил. 124).

Наименее известным видом искусства догонов до недавнего времени оставались кованые железные антропоморфные фигурки, венчающие ритуальные жезлы, устанавливаемые на могилах и алтарях. Между этими фигурками и деревянной скульптурой догонов существует определенное сходство, однако не настолько значительное, чтобы можно было согласиться с предположением У. Фэгга, объясняющего особенности стиля деревянной скульптуры догонов влиянием кузнечной техники.

Формы деревянных статуэток четко огранены, угловаты, их трехмерность выявлена резкими контрастами света и тени, причем трактовка основных деталей точно соответствует методу изъятия - технике резьбы, в то время как формы кованых фигурок, более плавные, текучие, как и сама ковка металла, больше соответствуют технике лепки. Предположение Фэгга, по-видимому, основано не столько на сравнительном стилистическом анализе, сопоставлении деревянной и металлической пластики, сколько на том, что изготовление деревянной, так же как и металлической, скульптуры догонов по установленным традициям является делом кузнецов (как, впрочем, и у подавляющего большинства народностей Западной Африки). Профессиональные ремесленники, специализировавшиеся в одной определенной области (литье и ковка металла, резьба по дереву и т. д.), существовали в Африке главным образом в условиях относительно развитой социальной структуры. Чаще же все функции ремесленника, художника, а также часто знахаря, колдуна, жреца и даже вождя осуществлялись деревенским кузнецом. Жена кузнеца, как правило, занималась гончарным делом, вся семья принадлежала к особой касте (то есть браки заключались только между семьями кузнецов). У догонов, сенуфо, бамбара и других народностей кузнецы живут в некотором отдалении от деревни или в особом квартале. Двойственное отношение к ним, в котором преобладают то страх и отчужденность, то почтительность и уважение, объясняется их ролью арбитров в спорах между членами общины, а также посреднической ролью между миром живых и мертвых. Это положение отражает материальный аспект: кузнец изготовляет не только все необходимые для общины орудия (топоры, ножи, мотыги, стрелы, копья и т. д.), но также и культовые предметы: статуи, барабаны, ритуальные кубки, жезлы и другие предметы, используемые в религиозных церемониях (рис. 39).

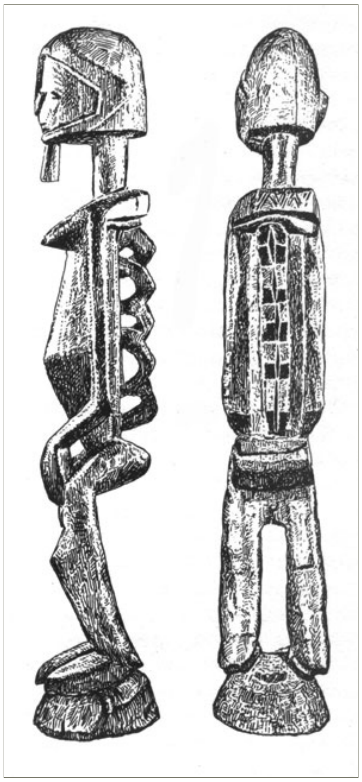

Рис. 39. Культовая статуэтка. Дерево. Догоны, Мали. Частная коллекция, Нью-Йорк

Кузнецу отводится большое место в африканской мифологии и фольклоре. В мифологии догонов кузнец занимает одно из центральных мест. Именно он, по представлениям догонов, принес на землю ковчег с плацентой, содержавшей в себе зародыши всего сущего. Подобные мифы существуют и у других народов Западного Судана. "Принимая во внимание, что он является потомком демиурга и играет важную роль в мифах, учитывая также то, что он владеет техникой и обладает всеми необходимыми орудиями, кузнец больше чем кто-либо другой годится для выполнения роли скульптора. Все же связь между кузнечным делом и скульптурой не везде так прочна и очевидна, как у народов Западного Судана. В Конго, например, эта связь, по-видимому, не проявляется", - пишет Ж. Лод в книге "Искусство Черной Африки" (199, 126).

Среди народностей Западного Судана, чье искусство мы относим к кругу догонов, заметное место занимает народ моей. По численности и социально-экономическому развитию они значительно превосходят своих соседей. Моей, численность которых составляет более двух миллионов человек, населяют обширную территорию в верховьях рек Красной и Белой Вольты. В местных преданиях говорится, что они прибыли с востока (или северо-востока) в начале II тысячелетия н. э., подчинили себе большинство местных племен и создали три государства с центрами в Уагадугу, Ятенге и Фада-н-Гурме. Относительно высокая военная организация моей позволяла им не только удерживать значительные территории, но и совершать глубокие рейды в пределах таких могущественных государств, как Гана и Сонгай. Благодаря эффективной административной системе, при которой местные власти пользовались большой свободой, поставляя верховному правителю - моро-наба - воинов и определенную дань, государства моей успешно отразили натиск ислама и ко времени европейской колонизации, в конце XIX века, управлялись той же династией и занимали те же территории, что и пять веков назад.

Несмотря на все это, художественная культура моей рассматривается здесь как вторичная по отношению к культуре догонов, менее развитых в социально-экономическом отношении. В историческом плане это объясняется следующим. После прибытия в район Верхней Вольты моей, гораздо менее многочисленные, чем покоренные ими народы, слились с ними, восприняв их язык, религию, художественную культуру. Наиболее адекватные формы этой первичной культуры сохранили местные племена, не участвовавшие в процессе ассимиляции. К таким племенам относятся догоны, населявшие в прошлом этот район, но после прибытия моей покинувшие его ради сохранения независимости и переселившиеся в неприступные ущелья Бандиагары.

Скульпторы, их изготовляющие, и танцоры, выступающие в этих масках, принадлежат к народностям фульсе (иначе - курумба) и ниониосе. Фульсе, особенно многочисленные в Ятенге, населяли район Вольты еще до прибытия моси.

Они не покинули его, как другие, обосновавшиеся в скалистых местностях Бандиагары и Хомбори и образовавшие народность догон. Их старейшины-тингсоба, или "хозяева земли", - являются хранителями важнейших традиционных форм, которые вобрала в себя феодальная мифология моей.

Памятники искусства дают неоспоримые доказательства древней связи между автохтонными обществами Вольты и племенами, населяющими в настоящее время горные районы в излучине Нигера. Существуют явные стилистические параллели между этими масками, которые обычно фигурируют как изделия моей, масками сириге догонов и масками гурунси с вертикальным навершием" (123, 20)).

Возможно, в какой-то мере это объясняется тем, что городская культура моей подверглась исламизации гораздо раньше и в значительно большей степени, чем принято думать (по крайней мере, в настоящее время в городах моей мусульмане составляют большой процент). Но, может быть, существуют и другие, более глубокие причины, так как при ближайшем рассмотрении оказывается, что маски, бытующие в сельской местности, изготовляются не самими моей, а местными ремесленниками народности курумба (или фульсе).

Искусство моси-фульсе представлено двумя типами масок. Одна из масок мужская, другая - женская. Обе маски имеют одинаковые личины в виде плоского или вогнутого овала с треугольными глазными отверстиями, образующими ромбовидную фигуру, пересеченную сверху вниз узкой вертикальной планкой с зазубринами. Как и на большинстве масок догонов, рот не обозначен. В верхней части личины - небольшие рога антилопы коба (в соответствии с полом - прямые или изогнутые). Мужская маска имеет навершие в виде высокого (до двух метров) плоского шеста, иногда украшенного резным орнаментом и раскрашенного красной, белой и черной красками. Навершие женской маски - вандо - представляет собой женскую статуэтку, которая опирается либо непосредственно на личину, либо на невысокую резную доску.

Статуэтки-навершия имеют округлые формы и в целом менее условны, чем личины. Если мужская маска по форме аналогична сириге догонов, то женскую можно, по-видимому, рассматривать как прототип гораздо более условной маски канага.

Маски используются в погребальных обрядах на похоронах вождей и старейшин. Так же как у догонов, танец масок исполняется под аккомпанемент барабанов и флейт и сопровождается пением и некрологом на секретном языке (ил. 125, 126, рис. 40).

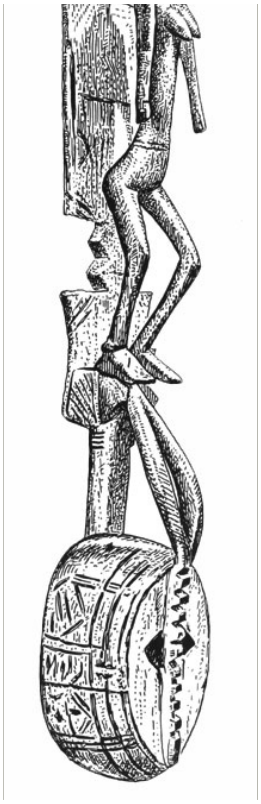

Рис. 40. Маска (женская). Дерево. Моси-фульсе, Верхняя Вольта.

На севере Верхней Вольты, в районе Арибинды и Белехеде, вблизи малийской границы, основное население составляют курумба. Они изготовляют особый тип масок-наголовников, основной частью которых служит стилизованная голова антилопы. В европейских коллекциях искусство курумба представлено почти исключительно этими раскрашенными головами с округлой, слегка выгнутой шеей, прямыми рогами и ограненной вытянутой мордой. Так же как у догонов и других народов Западного Судана, маски курумба используются для изгнания духов во время церемонии снятия траура. По преданию, маска воплощает культурного героя, который изгнал злых духов во время первых полевых работ.

Известно всего около десяти подлинных масок-наголовников курумба, все они попали в европейские коллекции до 1935 года. Позднее, в 60-х годах, в Европе появились разнообразные варианты этой маски, большая их часть, по-видимому, была изготовлена специально на экспорт, то есть представляет нечто среднее между традиционной культовой скульптурой и продукцией местных художественных промыслов (ил. 130).

Бобо - западные соседи курумба - также относятся к коренному населению Верхней Вольты, существовавшему здесь до появления моей. Земледельцы, рыбаки, охотники и отчасти скотоводы, бобо делятся на несколько подгрупп, бобо-финг, или черные бобо, бобо-уле - красные бобо (бва), бобо-гбе - белые бобо; общая численность около четырехсот пятидесяти тысяч человек.

Искусство бобо представлено в основном масками бобо-финг из района Диуласо и бва из района Хунде. (Бобо-финг живут также на территории моей, в районах Сан и Кутиала.)

Общим элементом культуры, связывающим две подгруппы бобо, являются одноименные культ, общество и божество До, которому посвящено большинство рассматриваемых здесь масок. Среди масок бобо различаются три основных типа:

1. зооморфные, объемные;
2. зооантропоморфные, плоскостные;
3. антропоморфные, объемные.

Зооморфные маски, чаще всего изображающие буйвола и барана, умеренно стилизованы, иногда очень близки к натуре. Зооантропоморфные крайне условны: личина в виде плоского диска, на котором нарисованы или врезаны глаза в виде двух концентрических кругов и рельефный круглый или ромбовидный рот, который служит танцору смотровой щелью. Личина имеет высокое навершие в виде резной доски, украшенной геометрическим орнаментом, состоящим из зигзагов, треугольников и шашечниц (последние встречаются в районе Хунде). Доска часто завершается полумесяцем с усеченным треугольником посередине. Эти наиболее известные маски бобо называются "нво" (местное название птицы калао). Круто изогнутый клюв, нависающий над личиной, - такой же неизменный элемент маски, как и навершие, отдаленно напоминающее сириге догонов. Среди масок типа нво есть варианты с горизонтальной доской, образующей подобие крыльев бабочки по обе стороны личины. К тому же зооантропоморфному типу можно отнести и маску змеи - "байири". Ее личина напоминает одновременно голову птицы и человека, а длинное и узкое навершие имеет ту же волнообразную форму, что и навершие Большой змеи догонов. Ближе всего к пластике догонов сравнительно редкие объемные антропоморфные маски до. Личина - стилизованная голова, с выпуклым, нависающим лбом, плоским лицом, с тонким прямым носом. Рот и глаза имеют характерную форму "кофейного зерна". От лба к затылку голову делит пополам невысокий гребень. Маски обычно имеют навершие в виде женской статуэтки или фигуры хамелеона. В районе Сан существуют маски коро, изготовленные целиком из листьев и волокон (ил. 127, ил. 128).

Каждая деревня, каждый род имеют свою маску особой формы. Маски чаще всего изготовляются кузнецами. Они используются в погребальных обрядах, играют важную роль на ежегодном празднике мертвых (в мае). После совершения обрядов маски десакрализуются, но, если маска ломается во время танца, ее с почестями хоронят, а танцора, виновного в поломке, считают убийцей и подвергают соответствующему наказанию.

В отличие от плоских масок типа нво, с контрастным цветным орнаментом (красная, черная или белая и голубая краски), объемные маски часто изготовлены из твердых пород дерева, раскрашены скупо или совсем не раскрашены. Лучший образец этого типа хранится в Британском музее.

Помимо масок бобо изготовляют прямоугольные табуреты с резным скульптурным декором, украшения: металлические кольца, браслеты, подвески. Немногие известные образцы деревянной скульптуры - столбообразные статуи - близки к скульптуре моей, а также лоби, южных соседей бобо.

Материальная культура земледельцев лоби (около двухсот пятидесяти тысяч человек) считается одной из самых примитивных в Тропической Африке. Деревянные головы и статуэтки лоби, хранящиеся в европейских и американских собраниях, имеют правильные пропорции, обобщенные округлые формы, в целом довольно близкие к естественным. Натуралистичны также головки, украшающие трехногие скамейки, которые иногда служат подголовниками. Эти скамейки-подголовники - наиболее известные из художественных изделий лоби. Обычно их изготовляют в период подготовки к ритуальной церемонии дьоро, которая связана с культом воды и земли (проводится раз в семь лет). О назначении статуэток известно только то, что они устанавливаются в особых местах на деревенской площади, им приносят жертвы, испрашивая их помощи в случае кражи, болезни, семейных неурядиц (ил. 129,131).

Как и другие племена, соседствующие с ашанти и перенявшие у них технику литья методом утраченной восковой модели, лоби изготовляют различные украшения, фигурки змей и хамелеонов, напоминающие аналогичные изделия ашанти. Помимо названных здесь сравнительно развитых пластических форм у лоби встречаются очень примитивные статуэтки, представляющие собой почти бесформенные куски дерева.

Ядром другого художественного центра Западного Судана является искусство бамбара. Бамбара (бамана, самоназвание - бамананке) - этническая группа мандинго, крупнейший народ языковой подгруппы манде (более двух миллионов человек) - составляют основу современного населения Мали.

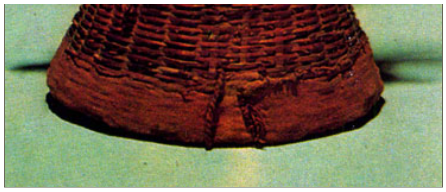
Искусство бамбара отражает представления о душе, духах и культурных героях и связано с деятельностью местных религиозных обществ (см.: Приложение 5). Хотя социальное и религиозное значение других обществ превосходит скромную роль общества чивара, именно его маски-наголовники в виде стилизованной фигуры антилопы создали громкую славу искусству бамбара. Чивара - имя мифического персонажа, а также название общества молодых земледельцев, участвующего в организации ритуальных церемоний, посвященных началу полевых работ и уборке урожая. Антилопа - символ культурного героя Чивара и в то же время одна из ипостасей духа воды - божества, от которого берут начало все кланы племени. Таким образом, изображение антилопы не только олицетворение духа, но и эмблема племени. Маска чивара не имеет личины. Она состоит из скульптурного навершия в виде фигуры антилопы или сложной композиции из нескольких фигур, среди которых центральное место всегда занимает стилизованная голова антилопы с особо подчеркнутыми рогами и гривой. Иногда навершие состоит из одной только головы с длинными прямыми рогами. Подставкой скульптуры служит небольшой деревянный цоколь, прикрепляемый к плетеной шапочке-корзине, которая надевается на голову и пристегивается подбородочным ремнем (ил. 132-134).

Образ антилопы воплощается в самых различных формах - как по степени условности, так и по характеру стилизации. Одни фигуры довольно живо воспроизводят облик четвероногого (в этих случаях голова антилопы присоединяется к туловищу собаки, крокодила или хамелеона), другие представляют собой сложную абстрактную композицию. Большая часть фигур дана силуэтно, в виде резной ажурной доски, но есть и такие, которые вписаны в цилиндр. Существует несколько определенных типов композиции, но и внутри них вариации бесконечно разнообразны. В европейских музеях и частных собраниях в настоящее время находятся сотни масок чивара, но среди них нет и двух, композиции которых были бы полностью идентичны. Типологические особенности позволяют разделить маски-наголовники на несколько групп (ил. 135-140).

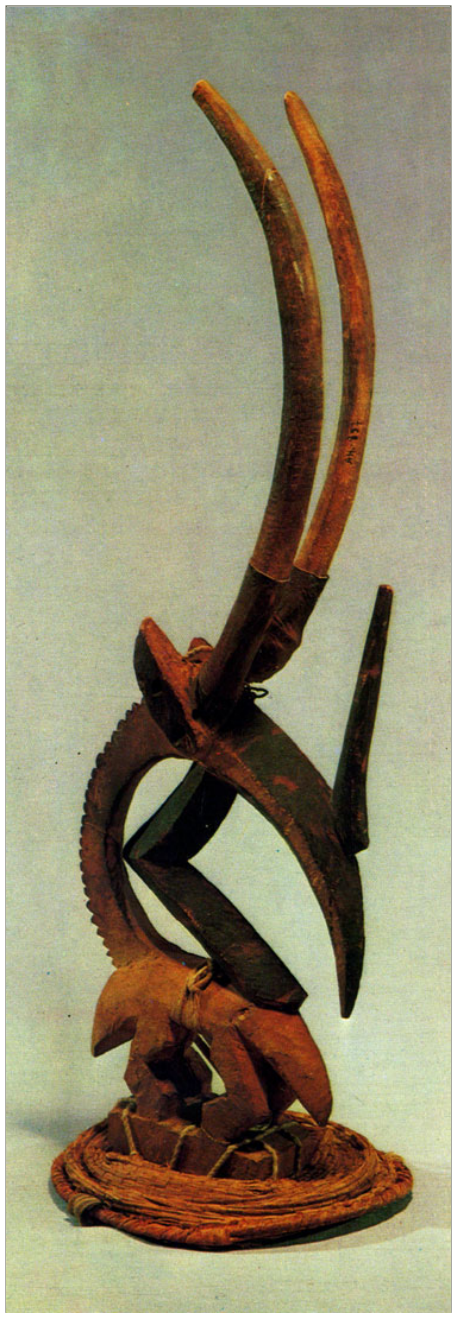
Различаются мужские и женские маски чивара, то есть изображающие самца и самку антилопы. Самка иногда имеет на спине детеныша. Мужские наголовники, как правило, большого размера, с четко обозначенными признаками пола, мощными прямыми рогами, с ажурной, украшенной зигзагообразным орнаментом гривой. Наголовники чивара распространены в районах Бамако, Бугуни, Сегу, Сан, Кутиала, Кенедугу. Существуют некоторые местные стилистические особенности. Наиболее четко различаются два типа композиции - вертикальный и горизонтальный. Вертикальный тип распространен в районах Бугуни, Сегу, Сан, Кутиала, горизонтальный - главным образом в районе Бамако. Характер композиции определяется положением головы и наклоном рогов, но этим признакам сопутствуют и другие. Фигурки с рогами, вытянутыми вдоль туловища, менее условны, они имеют округлые формы, длинный хвост, вытянутый или закрученный спиралью, и ноги, изогнутые в виде буквы Z. Голова с открытой пастью чаще всего лишена антропоморфных черт.

VIII. Маска чивара (горизонтальный тип). Дерево. Народность бамбара, Мали. МАЭ, Ленинград

Фигуры с вертикально стоящими рогами, выгнутой шеей и опущенной мордой считаются более архаичными. Туловище имеет форму примитивной скамьи на четырех коротких ножках, зато шея и голова, расчлененные на отдельные геометризованные объемы, выполнены с величайшей тщательностью. Отдельные элементы - уши, рога, грива переработаны в чистые пластические формы, ритмичное сочетание которых образует чеканный динамичный силуэт. В фас голова напоминает определенный тип суданских антропоморфных масок, в частности масок догонов, моей, марка. Иногда между рогами помещается небольшая женская статуэтка, изображающая, по-видимому, инфернальное мифическое существо, подобное Йуругу догонов. Некоторые маски этого типа, крайне геометризованные, превращаются в строгие пластические идеограммы, в которых естественную форму сохраняют только рога, "стилизованные" уже самой природой. Графическая идеограмма антилопы (в частности, в узорах на ткани, плетении) принимает полностью отвлеченный характер и непосредственно воспринимается только посвященными. Самое общее смысловое значение пластической идеограммы антилопы можно определить как идею возрастания, увеличения, роста. Основание наголовника - туловище антилопы представляет собой статичную инертную массу, из которой берет начало раскручивающаяся спиралью напряженная дуга шеи, выбрасывающая вверх, как побеги, узкие, удлиненные уши и еще выше - стремительные формы острых винтообразных рогов. Нарастающее движение иногда подчеркивается изображением не одной, а нескольких пар рогов, последовательно увеличивающихся в размерах. Идея роста, возрастания, произрастания должна занимать особое место в сознании земледельческого народа (VIII-XI).



IX. Маска коре. Дерево. Народность бамбара, Мали. МАЭ, Ленинград



По сравнению с масками, представленными очень широко и разнообразно, другие виды скульптуры развиты значительно меньше. Статуэтки изображают женские фигуры с гипертрофированной грудью и столбообразным туловищем. Наиболее условны статуэтки из района Бамако. Они как бы составлены из отдельных самостоятельных геометризованных объемов: согнутые в коленях ноги опираются на два прямоугольника, изображающие ступни, цилиндрическое туловище заканчивается плоской, широкой грудью, свободно свисающие руки не имеют кистей; цилиндрическая шея и голова, составленная опять-таки из отдельных ограненных объемов: плоское лицо, массивный, резко очерченный нос, верхняя часть головы в виде трехгранного гребня (ил. 141-144).

X. Маска чивара (вертикальный тип). Дерево. Народность бамбара, Мали. МАЭ, Ленинград

В Сегу и других районах существует и не столь геометризованная скульптура. Чаще всего это изображение сидящей женщины с ребенком или такой же сидящей фигуры, поддерживающей руками грудь. Формы этих статуэток округлы, что делает их менее условными. Отдельные части фигуры не противопоставляются друг другу, моделировка лица смягчена, и его пропорции близки к естественным. Скульптура, как и маски, бывает украшена резным или выжженным зигзагообразным узором, металлической инкрустацией, медными кольцами и заклепками, бусами и раковинами. О назначении этих статуэток известно немного. Судя по тому, что это главным образом женские фигуры с увеличенной грудью, а также по зигзагообразному орнаменту (символ воды), можно думать, что они связаны с культом плодородия. Среди других, более редких сюжетов - всадники, стоящие мужские фигуры, супружеская пара, изображающая мифических первопредков, статуэтки близнецов. Бамбара называют статуэтки "нунумани", что означает "маленькие человечки кузнецов". Кузнецы изготовляют не только статуэтки и маски, но также и металлическую скульптуру - небольшие кованые антропоморфные фигурки, венчающие ритуальные жезлы. Скульптурой и орнаментом украшаются и бытовые предметы: деревянные амбарные запоры, крышки сосудов, мебель, музыкальные инструменты- флейты, цитры, барабаны. В районах Сан и Мопти популярны деревянные марионетки, напоминающие по стилю антропоморфные маски нтомо (ил. 145).

В целом для скульптуры бамбара характерно сочетание округлых и ограненных форм, комбинация прямых и изогнутых линий, плоских и выпуклых поверхностей.

Художественное влияние бамбара распространяется далеко за пределы их территории. Особенно сильно оно ощущается в искусстве минианка (северная ветвь сенуфо), марка, хасонке, малинке. Вертикальные чивара минианка практически не отличаются от описанных выше наголовников этого типа, а зооантропоморфные маски марка построены по той же схеме, что и некоторые маски - личины бамбара. Особенностью масок марка является широкое использование тонких листов меди или жести, которыми покрывается вся лицевая часть маски. Сидящие женские фигуры малинке, поддерживающие грудь, отличаются от аналогичной скульптуры бамбара лишь большим примитивизмом и не столь четкой архитектоникой (ил. 146, 147).

Сенуфо (самоназвание - сиена), более двух миллионов человек принадлежащие к той же языковой подгруппе, что и догоны, - населяют территории между типичной саванной и влажными вечнозелеными тропическими лесами в пограничном районе между Мали, Гвинеей, Верхней Вольтой и Берегом Слоновой Кости. Культура земледельцев сенуфо отражает этот маргинальный характер, совмещая с элементами, типичными для Западного Судана, некоторые особенности, свойственные культуре народов Гвинейского побережья. Искусство сенуфо в стилистическом отношении можно рассматривать как промежуточное звено между художественными школами Западного Судана и Гвинейского побережья.

Согласно легенде, сенуфо прибыли с северо-востока около четырех веков назад. К моменту европейской колонизации они жили в условиях децентрализованной социальной структуры, обособленными селениями. Во главе совета старейшин, управляющего делами общины, стоит вождь, имеющий титул "хозяина земли". Общественную структуру цементируют тайные общества, выполняющие различные религиозные и социальные функции. Важнейшим среди них является общество ло (поро, гпо-оро). Члены этого общества проходят три ступени посвящения. Каждый период длится семь лет. Прошедшие все три ступени становятся членами совета старейшин. Каждое селение имеет свою священную рощу, где совершаются ритуальные церемонии и находятся дома, в которых хранятся маски, статуи, музыкальные инструменты и другие предметы, используемые в обрядах. Еще недавно вход в эти места для непосвященных был запрещен под страхом смерти.

Традиционные зооморфные маски сенуфо остро экспрессивны. Имеется несколько широко распространенных типов масок, принадлежащих различным тайным обществам. К числу наиболее известных относятся так называемые пониуго (Этот тип масок в литературе часто фигурирует под названием гбон, кагба, носсоло (названия ритуалов, в которых используется маска пониуго)) - большие зооморфные маски-шлемы, используемые обществом ло в культе гбон - обряде, имеющем целью изгнание духов, пожирателей душ. Такие маски появляются на ночных церемониях, изрыгая огонь и трубя в рог. Танцор вооружен бичом и полностью скрыт под специальной одеждой. В масках пониуго синтезированы черты различных животных - буйвола, антилопы, кабана, обезьяны, крокодила. Глаза с надбровными дугами и нос часто антропоморфны, форма головы ближе всего к буйволиной, приоткрытая пасть с оскаленными зубами напоминает пасть крокодила, в ее верхней части торчат кабаньи клыки; уши и рога - антилопы. Маска иногда имеет навершие в виде небольшой фигурки животного - хамелеона, змеи, птицы. Эти фигурки являются кастовыми эмблемами (ил. 149, 150).

Существует сдвоенный вариант этой маски: в последнем случае шлем снабжен двумя оскаленными мордами, обращенными в противоположные стороны. Аналогичные маски ваниуго отличаются только тем, что имеют в верхней части шлема небольшую чашечку для магической смеси ва. Предполагается, что сочетание различных зооморфных элементов символизирует первоначальное хаотическое состояние мира, до того как он был упорядочен созидательным актом верховного божества.

Довольно близки по форме к пониуго маски коробла (корубла), выполняющие те или иные функции в зависимости от общества, которое их использует (у ло коробла участвует в погребальных церемониях, у диели - в обрядах инициации). Коробла имеют ту же конструкцию, что и пониуго, но более лаконичны, скупы в деталях. Они часто не имеют рогов, верхних клыков и навершия. Основание шлема сохраняет округлую форму, а личина приобретает черты гиены или бабуина. (Последний вариант бытует у диели - общество кожевников.) От описанных зооморфных масок резко отличается шлем-наголовник дегеле, бытующий у сенуфо-киембара (район Корхого). Эта маска состоит из гладкого деревянного куполообразного шлема, полностью скрывающего голову танцора, и навершия в виде столбообразной антропоморфной статуэтки с кольчатым торсом без рук. Мужская и женская маски дегеле выступают парами. Женская статуэтка-наголовник имеет выраженные признаки пола, за спиной мужской фигуры - колчан. Считают, что кольчатая форма торса связана с образом питона, занимающего известное место в мифологии сенуфо. Однако наличие аналогичной формы в скульптуре менде, ашанти и других позволяет сделать предположение, что кольца вокруг торса и шеи имеют такой же конкретный характер, как и колчан, и воспроизводят украшение - медные шейные кольца-ожерелья. Маски дегеле, воплощающие мифологических персонажей, принадлежат высшей ступени общества ло и используются в погребальных обрядах (ил. 148, рис. 41, ил. 151).

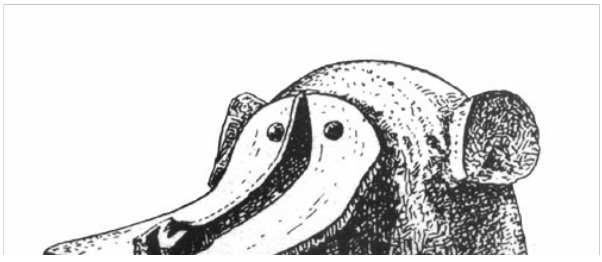

Рис. 41. Маска-шлем. Дерево. Сенуфо, Берег Слоновой Кости. Музей г. Сиэтла

Единственным типом антропоморфной маски-личины у сенуфо является гпелие (известная также под названием когелие, кулиу), упрощенные варианты которой размножены тысячными тиражами сувенирной промышленностью. Маска, небольшого размера, плоская, овальной формы, изображает умеренно стилизованное человеческое лицо с узким удлиненным носом, щелевидными глазами и овальным, выдвинутым вперед ртом. Вокруг рта и под глазами - татуировка, по бокам - пара прямоугольных и пара полуовальных форм, по-видимому, изображающих крылья и живот калао. В нижней части маски - два коротких отростка, в которых угадываются сильно стилизованные ноги животного. Личина увенчана круто изогнутыми бараньими рогами, часто к ним добавляются фигурка животного или человека и различные кастовые эмблемы: калао (эмблема кузнецов), пальмовый орех (эмблема резчиков по дереву) и т. д. Сохранилось несколько редких экземпляров гпелие с длинным загнутым клювом калао на лбу. Эти маски - с незначительно стилизованными формами лица имеют гладкую полированную поверхность и тонкий геометрический орнамент, оттеняющий фактуру дополнительных элементов ("крылья", "живот" и "клюв" калао) (ил. 152, 153).

Существует множество вариантов гпелие, среди них - сдвоенные маски (у подплемени сенуфо куфоло), символизирующие единство женского и мужского начал. Сохранилось несколько редких экземпляров старых бронзовых масок, однако большинство металлических гпелие являются современными изделиями. Интересный тип маски используется в церемонии гвонро. Эта маска-наголовник состоит из деревянного конического основания- каски с двумя стилизованными анти-лопьими головами. На вершину каски опирается большая резная доска с несколькими рядами ажурных изображений - всадников, женских фигурок, статуэток калао. Некоторые варианты этой маски напоминают канага догонов. Форма канага встречается и в скульптуре.

В традиционной скульптуре сенуфо варьируются в основном четыре сюжета: стоящая женская фигура с корзиной на голове, женщина, сидящая на табурете, всадники и так называемые дебле - большие стоящие фигуры с массивным цилиндрическим цоколем. Кроме этих, наиболее распространенных типов встречаются резные деревянные фигуры калао, парные женско-мужские сидящие и стоящие фигуры.

Самыми старыми, архаичными считаются статуи дебле - женские, мужские, парные (в одном монолите - спина к спине) и двуполые. Эти большие (более одного метра высотой) статуи, относительно натуралистичные по формам, использовались в различных обрядах общества ло. Во время ночных церемоний ими ритмично ударяли о землю, обращаясь с молитвами к Великой Матери - покровительнице общины. Стиль этих статуй можно охарактеризовать как средний переходный от чеканных геометрических форм западно-суданской скульптуры к более мягким и менее условным формам искусства бауле и других южных соседей сенуфо. Один из лучших образцов женской статуи дебле, хранящийся в Музее Ритберга (Цюрих), имеет правильные пропорции, мягкие, округлые обобщенные формы торса, рук, груди. В большей степени стилизована голова. Черты лица резко ограничены, но пропорции не искажены. Другие статуи этого типа (из района Сикасо в Мали и из северо-западных районов Берега Слоновой Кости), трактованные более условно, напоминают скульптуру бамбара и догонов. Некоторые из них имеют наголовник с изображением крокодила, стилизованным в форме канага (рис. 42, ил. 154-156).

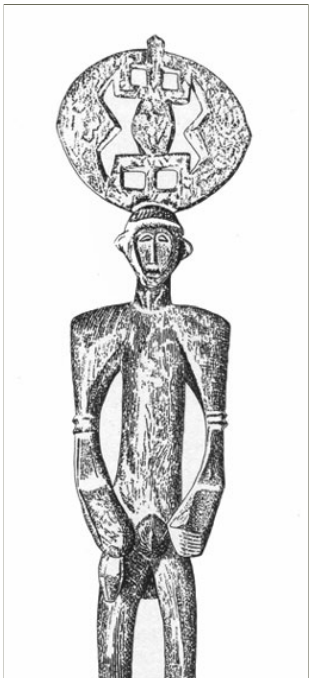

Рис. 42. Большая культовая статуя. Дерево. Сенуфо. Берег Слоновой Кости. Музей примитивного искусства, Нью-Йорк

Статуэтки в виде сидящей женской фигуры близки по стилю к описанной выше аналогичной скульптуре бамбара и малинке. Такие статуэтки, называющиеся "жена пахаря", у сенуфо-лумана и других вручаются по окончании полевых работ лучшему из молодых земледельцев. Ее обладателю она обещает скорую свадьбу и удачу во всех начинаниях.

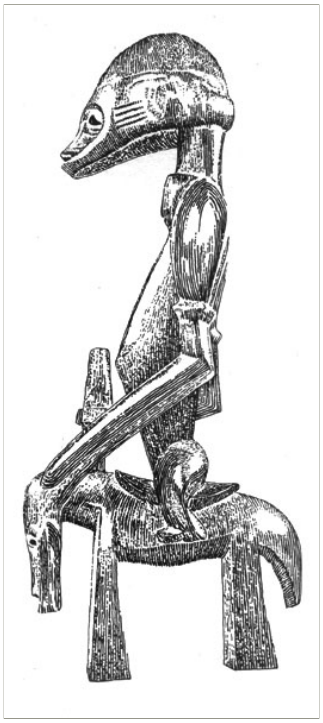

Рис. 43. Всадник. Дерево. Сенуфо, Берег Слоновой Кости. Британский музей, Лондон

Статуэтки с корзиной или ступкой на голове принадлежат женскому обществу сан-дого, которое занимается колдовством и гаданием. Однотипные по композиции статуэтки сандого отличаются друг от друга размерами, формой прически и некоторыми второстепенными элементами (украшения и т. п.). На их значение указывает татуировка в виде лучей, расходящихся вокруг пупка. Такую татуировку обычно имеет скульптура, символизирующая материнство, плодородие. Тот же смысл имеет корзина или ступка на голове - образы, ассоциирующиеся с уборкой урожая, периодом изобилия. Те же ассоциации вызывает огромный живот деревянных статуй калао. Статуи калао изображают мифическое существо - одно из первых, появившихся на земле. Во время праздника, связанного с началом полевых работ, церемонии разворачиваются вокруг статуи этой птицы с длинным изогнутым клювом и распростертыми крыльями, укрепленной на высоком шесте. Образ калао, встречающийся в различных видах в масках и скульптуре, занимает значительное место и в прикладном искусстве сенуфо. Поскольку все перечисленные виды масок и скульптуры имеют фронтальную строго симметричную композицию, особый интерес представляют статуэтки всадников, нарушающие этот канон, общий для подавляющего большинства африканской пластики. Пропорции статуэток сильно искажены прежде всего несоответствием размеров фигур лошади и всадника (фигура лошади, как правило, в несколько раз меньше фигуры наездника). Диспропорциональная фигура всадника с сильно укороченными ногами иногда откинута назад и напоминает аналогичные статуэтки теллем-догонов. Другие изображают всадника в вертикальном положении: одной рукой он держит уздечку, другой сжимает копье или ружье. Мнения о назначении этих статуэток сильно расходятся. Возможно, что у сенуфо, как и у догонов, они связаны с ритуалами вызывания дождя. Существует ряд специфических признаков, отличающих скульптуру сенуфо. Но, кадс можно заметить уже из настоящего обзора, искусство отдельных районов имеет свои особенности. Особый способ трактовки ("вогнутый"), при котором лицо в фас приобретает более или менее отчетливо выраженную вогнутую форму сердца, считающийся одним из наиболее характерных признаков масок и скульптуры сенуфо, может сменяться совершенно иным, например сферическим (парные статуэтки тугуво сенуфо-киембара), плоским, как у догонов (дебле сенуфо-помпоро, район Фолона), или яйцеобразным (маски гпелие из восточных районов Корхого). Это отсутствие стилистической константы, особенно наглядно проявляющееся в варьировании существенных стилистических компонентов однотипных масок и статуй, по-видимому, обусловлено маргинальным характером художественной культуры сенуфо. Действительно, в северных районах искусство сенуфо имеет много общего с искусством бамбара, догонов, бобо, тогда как те же типы масок и скульптуры на юге приобретают иные стилевые черты: мягкость моделировки, округлость форм, некоторую натуралистичность, несвойственные искусству Западного Судана, но часто встречающиеся в скульптуре народов Гвинейского побережья (рис. 43, XII).

Askia the Great: Revolt Leader to Powerful Songhai Emperor

READ LATER PRINT

Muhammad I Askia (also known as Askia the Great) was one of the most important emperors of the Songhai Empire. Askia came to power in 1493, when he overthrew the last ruler of the Sunni Dynasty, Sunni Baru, and established the Askia Dynasty.

He was a capable ruler, who not only expanded his realm, but also increased the efficiency of his empire's administration through reforms. Askia's fortunes fell in his later years, as he was deposed by one of his own sons. But after spending several years in exile, he was recalled to the capital Gao, where he died shortly after.

Little is known about Askia the Great's origins. Although the date and place of his birth are unknown, his original name is recorded to have been Muhammad ibn Abi Bakr Ture. Based on his birth name, Askia is thought to have been of Tukulor origin and he may have belonged to a Senegalese family that settled in Gao.

Son of a Djinn: Muhammad I Askia's Claim to the Throne

It is unsurprising that little has been recorded about Askia's early life, as he was neither related to the ruling Sunni Dynasty nor to any other known royal family . Thus, his family background made him an insignificant figure at that point in time.

Additionally, as Askia was not of royal blood , he did not have any legitimate claim to the throne of the Songhai Empire. Oral history , however, states that Askia was the son of Sunni Ali's sister, Kasey, by a djinn. This story may have been a means of legitimizing Askia's rule.

Askia came to power by overthrowing the Sunni Dynasty. Between 1464 and 1492, the Songhai Empire prospered under the rule of Sunni Ali. His successor, Sunni Baru, however, was a much less capable emperor and the dynasty came to an end just a year after Sunni Ali's death.

Muhammad I Askia Leads the Revolt

One of the issues faced throughout Sunni Ali's reign was the division between the inhabitants of the countryside, who continued their pagan practices, and those of the cities, who had embraced Islam . While Sunni Ali successfully balanced the interests of both parties, Sunni Baru favored his rural subjects. As a consequence, Sunni Baru was regarded as a traitor to Islam and dissatisfaction among the urban Muslims grew. This quickly developed into a full-blown revolt, which was led by Askia.

Despite having numerical superiority, Sunni Baru failed to exploit this advantage and his army was decisively defeated by the rebels at the Battle of Anfao on the April 12, 1493. Sunni Baru was deposed and went into exile, thus marking the end of the Sunni Dynasty.

Muhammad I Askia was dubbed Askia the Great. (Afric Network / YouTube)

It was after this event that the title ‘Askia’ was adopted by the new ruler of the Songhai Empire. Some sources state that this name translates to mean ‘forceful one’, while others claim that it was derived from ‘a si tya’ (meaning ‘he will not be’), which is a reference to the insult hurled at him by the women of the deposed Sunni Dynasty. In the latter case, the adoption of ‘Askia’ was meant to ridicule these women.

Askia the Great Establishes His Rule

As ruler of the Songhai Empire, Askia sought to enhance the status of Islam in his realm, which is reflected in some of the administrative reforms he instituted. For instance, the Quran became the foundation of the state's civil code and al-Maghili, a Moroccan reformer, was appointed as the emperor's adviser in matters of religious orthodoxy.

It was also Askia who established Islam as the official religion of the nobles, which is another sign of his commitment to this religion. Moreover, in 1496, Askia went on the hajj (pilgrimage) to Mecca. According to a chronicler who accompanied the emperor on the pilgrimage, the djinn of Mecca appointed Askia caliph and told him his rights over the former vassals of the Sunnis.

Mecca in 1718. (Public Domain) In 1496 Askia went on the hajj to Mecca.

Other administrative reforms initiated by Askia were of a civil or military nature. For instance, he divided the Songhai Empire into provinces, each of which was administered by a governor. This allowed Askia to consolidate the regions conquered by his Sunni predecessors by placing them under an efficient administration. Askia also organized a standing army and a fleet of canoes under the command of a general and an admiral, respectively. Moreover, Askia appointed officials who oversaw various aspects of the empire, including its finance, agriculture, and judiciary.

While he was an exceptional statesman, Askia did not fare as well as a military leader . He was victorious in some campaigns, but met defeat in others. Nevertheless, the size and power of the Songhai Empire was unmatched in West Africa during Askia's reign and its influence was felt well beyond its borders.

Askia's Tomb

In 1528, Askia was deposed by his eldest son, Musa, who ruled for three years before being assassinated by his brothers. Musa was succeeded by Benkan, one of Askia's nephews. In order to secure his power, Benkan had his uncle banished onto an island in the Niger River and he was forced to stay there until 1537. In that year, Benkan was deposed by one of Askia's sons, Ismail, who became the new ruler of the Songhai Empire. Askia was invited back to Gao by his son and as a reward gifted Ismail his green turban and sabre.

The founder of the Askia Dynasty died in the following year and was buried in Gao. An earthen pyramid surmounted by wooden spikes was erected over his burial place and it remains one of the most revered sites in West Africa today.

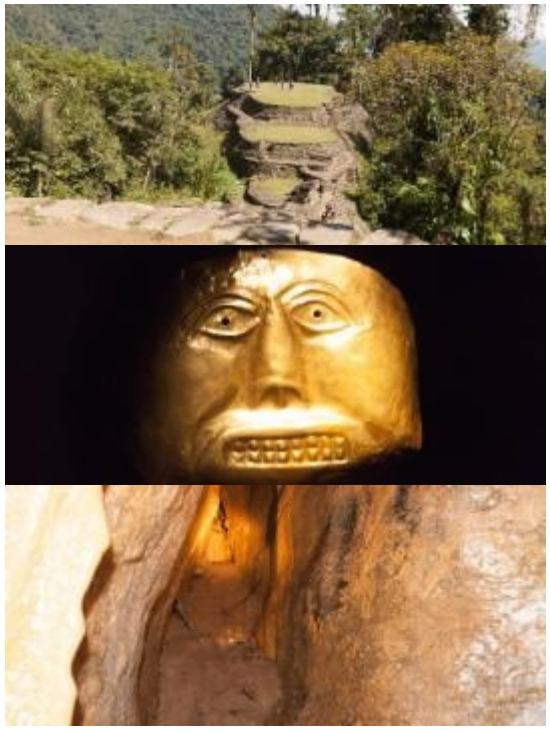
OUR MISSION



At Ancient Origins, we believe that one of the most important fields of knowledge we can pursue as human beings is our beginnings. And while some people may seem content with the story as it stands, our view is that there exist countless mysteries, scientific anomalies and surprising artifacts that have yet to be discovered and explained.

The goal of Ancient Origins is to highlight recent archaeological discoveries, peer-reviewed academic research and evidence, as well as offering alternative viewpoints and explanations of science, archaeology, mythology, religion and history around the globe.

By bringing together top experts and authors, this archaeology website explores lost civilizations, examines sacred writings, tours ancient places, investigates ancient discoveries and questions mysterious happenings. Our open community is dedicated to digging into the origins of our species on planet earth, and question wherever the discoveries might take us. We seek to retell the story of our beginnings.

L'Afrique est un continent étrange avec des rites et traditions des plus bizarres parfois : de la purification des cadavres et de l'utilisation de l'eau pour préparer des repas communs à la pratique de la bastonnade pour impressionner une femme, le continent est indéniablement riche en culture.

La question de savoir si ces coutumes sont bénéfiques de quelque manière que ce soit pour ceux qui les pratiquent est un autre sujet.

Voici 3 Rituels sexuels bizarres pratiqués en Afrique

Publicité

Test de virginité

Connu sous le nom d'Ukusoma, le test de virginité est une tradition populaire en Afrique du Sud, notamment au sein du groupe ethnique zoulou qui réside principalement dans la province du KwaZulu Natal. Malgré les nombreuses tentatives du gouvernement sud-africain pour la rendre illégale, Umhlanga reste une cérémonie annuelle populaire de danse des roseaux chez les Zoulous.

Pour qu'une fille puisse participer à cette cérémonie, sa virginité doit être testée par un testeur de virginité qualifié.

Le test proprement dit est effectué dans une pièce isolée, à mains nues. La jeune fille s'allonge sur le dos, les jambes ouvertes. Le testeur ouvre alors son vagin avec les deux mains et regarde à l'intérieur, apparemment pour voir si son hymen est intact. Si tout va bien, la jeune fille reçoit un certificat de virginité.

Les habitants de la région affirment que ce rituel contribue à freiner la propagation du VIH/sida, car les jeunes filles sont obligées de s'abstenir de tout rapport sexuel jusqu'à leur majorité. Néanmoins, cette pratique a été largement critiquée, certaines personnes la jugeant dégradante.

Le purification sexuelle

La purification sexuelle, appelée « Kusasa Fumbi », est une tradition pratiquée dans plusieurs pays africains, tels que le Malawi, la Zambie, le Kenya, etc.

Au cours de ce rituel, une femme est censée avoir des relations sexuelles avec un professionnel du sexe, appelé localement « hyena. »

Ce rituel a lieu lorsqu'une fille a ses premières règles, lorsqu'une femme mariée perd son mari ou après un avortement.

Parfois, le rituel est exécuté par un futur mari choisi ou par le beau-frère de la veuve. Les hyènas ne sont pas censés utiliser une quelconque forme de protection lorsqu'elles accomplissent ce rituel – une exigence qui a joué un rôle important dans la propagation du VIH, des IST et des grossesses non désirées.

Le viol d'épouse

Publicité 2

Le viol d'épouse est un rituel annuel pratiqué par la tribu des Wodaabe, un sous-groupe de l'ethnie Fulani que l'on trouve dans la région du Sahel. Les hommes de ce groupe de nomades sont autorisés à avoir autant de maris qu'elles le souhaitent.

Au cours de la cérémonie de vol de femmes, qui peut durer plusieurs jours, les femmes doivent choisir leur compagnon préféré parmi un groupe d'hommes qui exécutent une danse de s'accouplement pendant dans l'espoir d'être choisis.

Une femme peut choisir autant de partenaires qu'elle le souhaite et avoir des relations sexuelles avec eux avant de se fixer sur l'un d'entre eux.

Ce festival est considéré comme le concours de beauté pour hommes le plus exceptionnel au monde.

Le plus étrange dans cette pratique est que l'ancienneté du mariage de la femme n'a pas d'importance ; une fois qu'elle a choisi un homme, la tribu accepte la nouvelle union et la considère comme un véritable mariage.

A ‘zombie shark’ has been spotted still hunting for prey despite being half-eaten by other sharks when it was released into the sea by scientists.

Black Friday

- Mario Lebrato, 35, released the oceanic black tip shark into the sea off the coast of Spain before a oup of fellow sharks set upon it, inflicting fatal injuries to the unsuspecting animal.

:cording to the scientist, these included several bull sharks, which can weigh up to a whopping 400kg.

Despite the onslaught however and a large portion of its body missing after it had been bitten off, the shark continued to fight for its life and tried to swim away.

Fellow sharks set upon the black tip, inflicting fatal injuries

In the clip, filmed for National Geographic's Big Sharks Rule, the marine predator is skulking under the surface of the water, perfectly camouflaged, when it spots a group of seals.

The seals try to stick together but eventually get separated and the shark seizes its moment for attack.

Dr Mario Lebrato should be prosecuted for deliberately inflicting 20 minutes of agonising death on an animal just for a film. B/stard.

My dog Bob could write a better article than this rubbish. The poor shark is dying, probably used as bait for other sharks to attack it, this is bad enough then halfway through the article it talks about a shark attack on seals ?!

Where do they get these writers from - I guess schoolboys using cut and paste from comics

No DM, not a zombie shark. It's a shark that died a slow painful death. That's all.

This article really is scraping the barrel. Whoever penned it should hold their head in shame and go back to journalism school.

Афропалестинцы и их сопротивление израильской оккупации

ПОДЕЛИТЬСЯ ПОДЕЛИТЬСЯ ПОДЕЛИТЬСЯ

Небольшая община потомков африканцев, живущая в Иерусалиме, считает себя палестинцами и борется с израильской оккупацией.

Джидда называет себя палестинцем. Один из его предков родом из Чада в начале XX в. во время совершения хаджа решил посетить святые земли Иерусалима, который тогда находился под властью Османской империи. Полюбив великий город, он решил: «Что еще надо для счастья в этом мире?» и остался здесь. Африканцы, прибывавшие в Иерусалим, обычно брались за черную работу по уборке и охране святых мест. «Они были лучшими людьми в этом деле», – вспоминает Джидда.

Джидда родился и вырос в Великом городе в небольшой африканской диаспоре, представленной выходцами, в основном, из Нигерии, Судана, Сенегала и Чада, которые обосновались в районе аль-Аксы в небольшом историческом комплексе. При мамлюках два главных его здания служили общежитиями для мусульманских паломников. Во время арабского восстания начала XX в. власти Османской империи превратили общежития в тюрьмы. Африканская община начала проживать там с 1930-х годов. До 1968 года людям приходилось жить в тесноте, часто по восемь человек на комнату площадью 7,5 квадратных метров. Однако со временем община выросла, как и сам комплекс, который в настоящее время все еще принадлежит исламскому вакфу. Численность афропалестинцев сейчас здесь составляет около 350 человек.

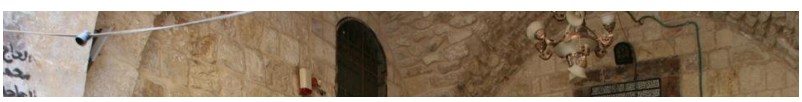
Африканское происхождение сопряжено со своими проблемами. «Мы подвергаемся дискриминации дважды – за то, что палестинцы, и за то, что черные», – говорит Джидда.

Борьба палестинской семьи за сохранение национального символа.



Махмуд Джидда / Источник: TRTWorld

Джидда родился во времена Накбы – израильской оккупации Палестины и исхода палестинцев из Святой Земли. Его детство было обычным. Мальчик увлекался спортом, занимался баскетболом, футболом и гандболом, хотел получить образование, чтобы добиться чего-то в этом мире. Молодой парень не очень интересовался политикой. Но все изменилось в 1967 году, когда после Шестидневной войны началась израильская оккупация Палестины.

Как вспоминает Джидда, к сентябрю того же года во всех школах ввели новую учебную программу, заменив все учебники на израильские. Ученики и преподаватели бойкотировали учебную программу и отказались подчиняться оккупационным властям. В течение следующих 3-4 лет учителя арендовали здания и превращали их в школы, где они продолжали учить по старой учебной программе.

Джидда решил присоединиться к сопротивлению против израильской оккупации, надеясь, что жизнь вернется в старое русло. Он был арестован 5 сентября 1968 года и приговорен к 25 годам тюремного заключения. Израиль внес Джидду и его двоюродного брата Али в список террористов. Отсидев 17 лет, он был досрочно освобожден в результате обмена заключенными в Джибриле в 1985 году. Пару лет спустя мужчина был снова арестован после участия в Первой интифаде и провел еще один год в тюрьме за то, что Израиль называет «возобновлением деятельности».

«Нас избивали, били дубинками и пытали», – говорит Джидда. Израиль утверждает, что задержанные палестинцы не являются военнопленными, и, следовательно, международное право на них не распространяется. Их классифицируют как преступников и террористов.

Израильские власти предлагают находящимся в тюрьме палестинцам досрочное освобождение, если те уедут за рубеж. Но Джидда и большинство других заключенных отказались, заявив, что их единственным домом является Иерусалим.

Оккупация не только изменила повседневную жизнь, но и ограничила передвижение палестинцев. До вступления в силу соглашения Осло в 1993 году Джидда мог посещать сектор Газа, затрачивая полтора часа на дорогу, но потом ему запретили даже ездить туда. Мужчина рассказывает об одной женщине по имени Фатима, которая живет в Газе. Ее сестра проживает в Наблусе. Эти населенные пункты разделяют всего 160 км, но единственный способ встретиться для палестинок – приехать в Германию.

Джидда стал свидетелем многих трагических событий, таких как столкновения в Аксе в 1996 году. «Люди проводили сидячую забастовку в знак протеста против строительства израильским правительством туннеля вдоль Храмовой горы, а их били дубинками. 72 человека были застрелены», – говорит он, указывая на отверстия от пуль, которые все еще остаются на стенах Купола Скалы.

Проведя большую часть своей жизни в тюрьме, Джидда чувствует себя противоречиво, когда его спрашивают о возрасте. «Я говорю, что у меня два возраста: 34 года и 70 лет. Первое число – это мой возраст с момента, когда я начал новую жизнь после освобождения из тюрьмы, а второе – биологический возраст». У него не было образования или работы, но Джидде удалось начать жизнь заново. Он стал посещать курсы по вычислительной технике и изучению английского языка. Сейчас он живет в Бейт-Ханине, и у него двое взрослых сыновей.

Какаки – традиционный музыкальный инструмент, на котором играют в честь королей и султанов

На какаки, традиционном африканском музыкальном инструменте, в Камеруне в наши дни играют на официальных приемах султанов и королей, а также на разных дворцовых мероприятиях. Этой трубой, длина которой может достигать 4 метра, пользуются только мужчины, сообщает Анатолийское агентство.

Какаки первоначально был распространен в таких странах, как Камерун, Чад, Буркина-Фасо, но сегодня используется практически во всех странах Центральной Африки. В Чаде этот музыкальный инструмент известен под названием ваза, а в Эфиопии его именуют малакат.

В какаки трубят в честь султанов на официальных церемониях, в пятницу, когда правитель приветствует подданных, на торжественных мероприятиях и праздниках во дворце. Длина традиционного инструмента в разных регионах отличается и может составлять от двух до четырех метров. Вместе с какаки часто используются и другие музыкальные инструменты, такие как джембе (африканский барабан в форме кубка с открытым низом и широким верхом) и калимба (инструмент класса щипковых язычковых идиофонов).

Турецкий музыкант создал новый музыкальный инструмент с необычным звучанием.

Как и традиционный южноафриканский инструмент вувузела, какаки издает громкие звуки, которые можно услышать издалека, поэтому неудивительно, что он стал символизировать власть и авторитет.

Как и в большинстве регионов африканского континента, в Камеруне традиция игры на какаки передается из поколения в поколение – от мастеров к ученикам.

Бавауло Боусса Аббайе, который состоит в дворцовом оркестре султана Мохамаду Хаяту Иссы, правителя города Нгаундере в Камеруне, рассказал журналистам Анатолийского агентства, что исполнение на какаки – это не просто музыка, но и язык.

Мастер по изготовлению флейт из Косово посвятил жизнь созданию новых видов этого инструмента.

По его словам, игра на этом музыкальном инструменте – своего рода речь, обращенная к султану. «С помощью какаки мы приветствуем султана, спрашиваем: «Как дела, господин?», «Хорошо ли спали ночью?», «Как ваши дети?», «Как ваша семья?»», – поведал музыкант.

Саллау Кадири, который также играет для султана Нгаундере Мохамаду Хаяту Иссы, рассказывает: «Я являюсь исполнителем на какаки уже 27 лет. Раньше я играл в честь султана на разных мероприятиях во время его визитов в Бельгию, Нидерланды, Германию и Стамбул».

Японский музыкант принял ислам благодаря кануну.

Как заявляет Саллау Кадири, в его семье уже три поколения музыкантов, играющих на какаки. Он рассказывает, что и сам научился пользоваться этим инструментом от отца и деда, которые тоже состояли в дворцовом оркестре.

Саллау Кадири также поведал, что какаки – это инструмент, который является прерогативой правителей. «Я играю на нем

Корейская звезда Дауд Ким: путь к исламу

ПОДЕЛИТЬСЯ ПОДЕЛИТЬСЯ ПОДЕЛИТЬСЯ

Популярный южнокорейский поп-певец и ютубер Джей Ким в 2019 году поверг в шок своих поклонников, сделав неожиданное заявление о переходе в ислам. Недавно он совершил свою первую умру, поделившись в социальных сетях фотографиями святых мест.

Дауд Ким или Ким Ген Ву родился 8 апреля 1983 года. Он является известным южнокорейским певцом и актером, выступавшим под псевдонимом Джей. Со школьных лет Дауд интересовался музыкой. Он начал участвовать в различных музыкальных фестивалях и постепенно набирал популярность. Начинающий певец прославился после выступления в Малайзии. В 2013 году Дауд завел канал на YouTube, где размещал видео о своем образе жизни и вел блог. Канал также имел успех, и в настоящее время у него более 3,32 миллиона подписчиков. В 2019 г. он подверг в шок своих поклонников, объявив о принятии ислама. Хотя это стало неожиданным для многих, сам Дауд Ким говорит, что исламом он интересовался давно.

Источник: salams.app

Дауд впервые услышал об исламе после инцидента 11 сентября. Поскольку СМИ в то время изображали ислам крайне негативно, он считал эту религию очень опасной. Его отношение к исламу изменилось в Индонезии, когда он дебютировал как первый южнокорейский певец. Во время своего тура в Джакарте он познакомился со своими поклонниками из числа мусульман и увидел, что это добрые и любящие люди.

Источник: intipseleb.com

Вторая встреча Дауда с исламом произошла в тот момент его жизни, когда он находился в духовном кризисе, потеряв всякую мотивацию к занятию музыкой. Через свой канал на Youtube он познакомился с разными мусульманами и имел возможность узнать их такими, какие они есть, а не какими их изображают СМИ.

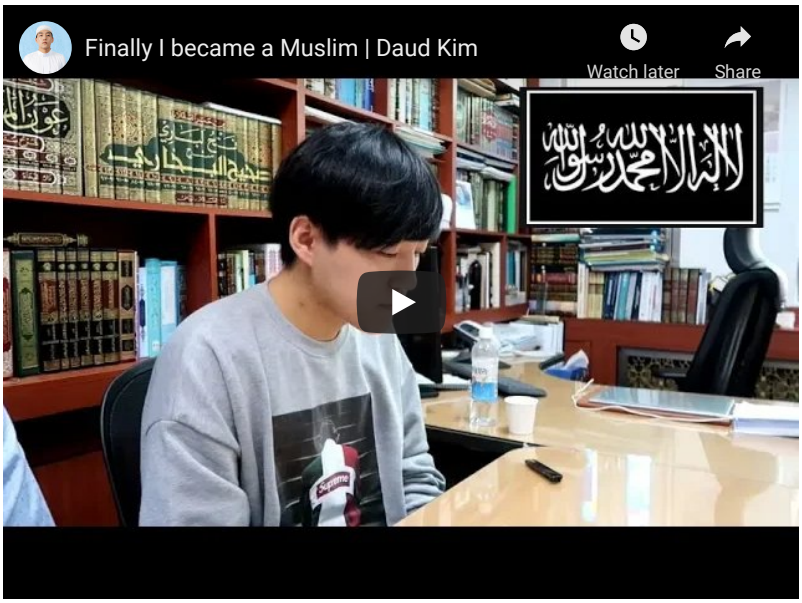
Понемногу он узнавал все больше и больше об исламе. По его словам, Дауд почувствовал особую связь с этой религией.

Источник: hype.my

В своем видео на YouTube он сказал: «Я всегда думал, что жизнь – это борьба. И выжить в ней – это успех. Я думал, что должен бороться и побеждать. Но они (мусульмане) были другими. Они всегда помогают другим. И всегда были благодарны за то, что имеют. Меня это очень впечатлило. Их отношение к жизни».

Источник: salams.app



Дауд начал читать Коран и изучал жизнь Пророка Мухаммада (мир ему), чтобы больше узнать об исламе. Он посетил мечеть, стал молиться. Все это укрепило его веру в Аллаха, который является Создателем всего сущего. Несмотря на желание стать мусульманином, Дауд долго колебался. Во-первых, его семья была очень недовольна его интересом к исламу, а во-вторых, он сомневался, готов ли он к тому, чтобы стать мусульманином? Со временем он понял, что это всего лишь отговорки.

Источник: salams.app

Наконец, Дауд принял решение и, на своем канале YouTube объявил о принятии им ислама. Он также опубликовал видео, как произносит шахаду в Сеульской соборной мечети. Его жена последовала его примеру. О принятии ислама Дауд сказал: «Я наконец понял, что Аллах – цель моего путешествия. Ислам – величайшее благословение и величайший дар моей жизни». Как писал сам блогер, он подвергся критике в социальных сетях за то, что выбрал другую веру, но это «по иронии судьбы» делает его «убеждения сильнее», и он «никогда не сдастся».

На днях Дауд Ким поделился в социальных сетях фотографиями из Мекки и Медины, куда он прибыл ради совершения умры. На фото он позирует в ихраме, одежде, которую носят мужчины во время паломничества. Подпись гласит: «Я самый счастливый человек, потому что Аллах выбрал меня и привел меня сюда. Я возношу благодарность Аллаху, что дал мне шанс приехать в самый святой город в мире. Я молился за всех мусульман. Да простит Аллах наши грехи. Пусть примет наши молитвы».

Дауд также в своем Instagram (принадлежит компании Meta, которая признана экстремистской и запрещена в России) опубликовал свои фотографии в Медине, в мечети Пророка на прошлой неделе, пожелав своим подписчикам «Рамадан Мубарак!», а также несколько видео и фотографий своего ифтара в Джидде с местными жителями.

Легенда и правда о Хасане Саббахе и ассасинах

ПОДЕЛИТЬСЯ ПОДЕЛИТЬСЯ ПОДЕЛИТЬСЯ

Согласно распространенным представлениям, Хасан Саббах, "Старец горы", является главой самой влиятельной террористической организации в истории, состоящей из фанатично преданных ему федаинов. Многие известные люди, от сельджукских правителей до военачальников крестоносцев, погибли от рук подосланных им убийц, пишет Баха Окар.

Согласно легендам, его резиденция находилась в замке на вершине недоступных гор. В нем имелся сад с прекрасными девушками. Чтобы добиться преданности от своих последователей Хасан Саббах, опоив их опиумом, якобы приводил в это место. Открыв глаза в этом саду, человек думал, что попал в рай. Ему говорили, если он будет беспрекословно подчиняться Старцу гор, то после смерти обязательно окажется там снова. Так как они использовали опиум, членов этой секты называли «хашиши» или ассасины (в западном произношении).

Примерно таков портрет Хасана Саббаха, нарисованный не только популярными историческими романами, но и серьезными книгами по истории. Насколько он правдив?

"Старец горы" / Источник: pinterest.es

В реальности Хасан Саббах был лидером секты низаритов, представляющей собой ветвь исмаилизма. Мусульманские ученые признают их убеждения как выходящие за рамки ислама. Благодаря своей организованности и пропагандистской сети, назариты смогли распространить свое влияние на территории современного Ирана, Ирака и Сирии. Аббасидские халифы и сельджукские правители вели борьбу с ними. В целях обороны назариты создали ряд крепостей, в том числе знаменитый Аламут.

Сообщения о хашиши встречаются в трудах побывавших на Востоке европейцев с XII в. Кроме того, Гийом де Рубрук, монах, посетивший Монголию, называет низаритов мулидет, что, вероятно, является искаженным арабским словом "мульхид" («отступники»). В суннитских исторических источниках низаритов именуют мульхидами, исмаилитами, низаритами, само их учение обозначается как батынийя или талимийя. Очевидно, что сами низариты себя ни мульхидами, ни хашиши не именовали. Откуда же европейцы взяли это название? Следует предположить, что так называло последователей этой ветви исмаилизма враждебное к ним суннитское окружение, и это слово отражало не практику низаритов, а служило оскорбительным прозвищем.

Известно точно, кто стал для европейцев источником легенд о саде и методах, используемых Хасаном Саббахом для вербовки своих убийц. Это Марко Поло со своей «Книгой о разнообразии мира». Он писал в ней: «В стране Мулект в старину жил горный старец… Старец по-ихнему назывался Ала-один. Развел он большой, отличный сад в долине, между двух гор; такого и не видано было. Были там самые лучшие в свете плоды. Настроил он там самых лучших домов, самых красивых дворцов, таких и не видано было прежде; они были золоченые и самыми лучшими в свете вещами раскрашены. Провел он там каналы; в одних было вино, в других — молоко, в третьих — мед, а в иных — вода. Самые красивые в свете жены и девы были тут; умели они играть на всех инструментах, петь и плясать лучше других жен. Сад этот, толковал старец своим людям, есть рай. Развел он его таким точно, как Мухаммед описывал сарацинам рай: кто в рай попадет, у того будет столько красивых жен, сколько пожелает, и найдет он там реки вина и молока, меду и воды… Входил в него только тот, кто пожелал сделаться асасином… Приказывал старец вводить в этот рай юношей, смотря по своему желанию, по четыре, по десяти, по двадцати, и вот как: сперва их напоят, сонными брали и вводили в сад; там их будили. Проснется юноша и, как увидит все то, что я вам описывал, поистине уверует, что находится в раю… Захочет старец послать куда-либо кого из своих убить кого-нибудь, приказывает он напоить столько юношей, сколько пожелает, когда же они заснут, приказывает перенести их в свой дворец. Проснутся юноши во дворце, изумляются, но не радуются, оттого что из рая по своей воле они никогда не вышли бы. Идут они к старцу и, почитая его за пророка, смиренно ему кланяются; а старец их спрашивает, откуда они пришли. Из рая, отвечают юноши и описывают все, что там, словно как в раю, о котором их предкам говорил Мухаммед; а те, кто не был там, слышат все это, и им в рай хочется; готовы они и на смерть, лишь бы только попасть в рай; не дождутся дня, чтобы идти туда. Захочет старец убить кого-либо из важных, прикажет испытать и выбрать самых лучших из своих асасинов; посылает он многих из них в недалекие страны с приказом убивать людей; они идут и приказ его исполняют; кто останется цел, тот возвращается ко двору; случается, что после смертоубийства они попадаются в плен и сами убиваются».

Источник: factroom.ru

Между тем, Марко Поло побывал в Иране в 1273 году, когда Аламут и другие крепости низаритов были разрушены, исмаилиты рассеяны по разным уголкам региона и скрывались. Поэтому скорее всего, Марко Поло адаптировал историю, которую он ранее слышал о сирийских исмаилитах, при этом используя свое воображение. Являются ли райские сады и одурманенные опиумом убийцы реальными? Конечно, как и любой миф, эти представления основаны на некоторых фактах. Например, во многих замках низаритов, особенно в Аламуте, было много садов. Но, согласно археологическим исследованиям, ни в одном из них нет такого удобного места для сада, который мог заставит человека поверить в то, что он находится в Раю. Другим источником легенды о шейхе, дарующим своим мюридам райский сад, могло быть учение исмаилитов. Последние истолковывали хадис «Место между моей могилой и минбаром является садом из садов Рая» таким образом, что минбар, т.е. место, откуда говорят о религии, это символ шариата, могила – символ философии, потому что философия помогает понять скрытые (захир) стороны шариата, а это своего рода смерть. Исходя из этого, место между могилой и минбаром – это истина. Согласно представлениям исмалитов, нельзя обрести эту степень без наставника, а шейх, помогая сделать это своему ученику, открывает перед ним ворота в Рай.

Аламут / Источник: atlasdergisi.com

Что же касается опиума, то он применялся как в медицинских целях, так и в качестве расслабляющего средства на Ближнем Востоке. Также известно, что он используется для достижения экстатического состояния в некоторых суфийских сектах. Таким образом, применение опиума низаритами действительно могло иметь место. Но вызывает сильное сомнение, чтобы Хасан Саббах вербовал с его помощью федаинов. Во-первых, опиум и его влияние были широко известны, и вряд ли он мог быть тайным орудием в руках главы низаритов. С другой стороны, для исполнителей убийства требуются тщательное планирование и подготовка, и, следовательно, ясный ум. Кроме того, известно, что в Аламуте были строгие порядки, исключающие мирские удовольствия. Хасан Саббах убил одного из своих сыновей за то, что тот выпил вино. Таким образом, о широком использовании опиума низаритами не может быть и речи. Ни в одном серьезном источнике нет доказательств того, что они делали это, кроме этимологии закрепившегося за ними прозвища “хашиши”.

Таким образом, на сегодняшний день достаточно научных данных, которые позволяют понять, кем были низариты. Но тем не менее, мифы об ассасинах, основанные на фантазиях Марко Поло, все еще широко распространены. Невольно возникает предположение, что кому-то это выгодно. Легенды о Хасане Саббахе оказываются полезными везде, где необходимо показать, что насилие – это суть ислама. И вряд ли, когда империализм занят формированием и распространением подобных взглядов, искаженный образ Старца горы и ассасинов, как символ одурманенных опиумом убийц, вершащих террор ради религии, приобрел популярность совершенно случайно.

Моголы – потомки армии Бабура в Индии

ПОДЕЛИТЬСЯ ПОДЕЛИТЬСЯ ПОДЕЛИТЬСЯ

Моголы, этническая группа в Индии, состоит из потомков монгол и тюрков, которые начали проникать в Индию начиная с XIV века. Если когда-то это была община воинов, то теперь это община земледельцев, сообщает сайт People Groups India.

Моголы населяют такие индийские штаты, как Джамму, Кашмир, Уттар-Прадеш, Дели, Раджастан, Гуджарат и Андхра-Прадеш. Согласно Уильяму Круку и другим ученым, это потомки монгольских и тюркских воинов, которые прибыли в Индию вместе с Бабуром (1526-1530 гг. н. э.), основателем империи Великих Моголов, а также переселенцы из Средней Азии, прибывших позже. Моголы Раджастана утверждают, что их предки мигрировали из Египта примерно в 1300-1400 годах. Также в формировании моголов приняли участие местные индо-иранские народы. Само название общины происходит от персидского могол, могул – «монголы». Среди них распространены такие фамилии как Мирза (ученый) и Бек (господин).

Уттар-Прадеш имеет самое большое могольское население (620 000 человек). В Гуджарате их насчитывается около 12 000, в штате Андхра-Прадеш – 110 000, в Раджастане – около 41 000 человек. Моголы давно говорят на языках Индии – урду и хинди. В штатах Раджастан, Гуджарат, Джамму и Кашмир и Андхра-Прадеш среди них распространены местные языки – марвари, гуджарати, догри и телугу.

Индийские ученые: Моголы выступали за секуляризм и межрелигиозный мир.

Община традиционно служила солдатами в армиях различных тюркских династий, правивших индийским субконтинентом. Но в наши дни их основное занятие – сельское хозяйство. Многие из них владеют собственными садами, особенно манговыми. В городах моголы занимаются торговлей, ремеслом, в частности, такими как резьба по слоновой кости, гравировка, ковроткачество, ткачество, вышивка, зардози, керамика и музыка.

Моголы являются мусульманами – шиитами или суннитами, обычно ханафитами. Наряду с патанами, шейхами и сеидами, моголы принадлежат к самой высокой касте мусульман Индии и ставят себя выше других, кроме сеидов. Среди них распространено почитание святых и посещение их усыпальниц, таких как мавзолеи Хваджа Муинуддина Чишти в Аджмере и Хазрата Низамуддина в Дели. Наряду с двумя основными мусульманскими праздниками моголы широко отмечают Ид-Милад или Бара-Вафат (день рождения пророка Мухаммада) и Мухаррам (гордовщину мученической смерти имама Хусейна). В Дели они с энтузиазмом участвует в фестивале цветов Пхул валон ки саир.

Моголы создают семьи только в пределах своей общины. Жену принято выбирать из относительно небольшого круга близких родственников, включая не только собственную семью мужчины, но и семьи, с которыми его семья в прошлом вступала в брак. Предпочтителен брак с двоюродным братом по отцовской или материнской линии, а также с младшей сестрой умершей жены или вдовой старшего брата. Хотя в исламе многоженство разрешено, моголы практикуют моногамию.

Моголы Дели организованы под руководством совета под названием Мухалла Судхар Сабха (Совет по благоустройству окрестностей), который планирует и осуществляет программы социально-экономического благосостояния. В Раджастане существует традиционный совет, известный как Найат, члены которого разрешают земельные и водные споры, осуществляют общественный контроль и налагают штрафы на нарушителей закона.

Широко известна кухня моголов, среди их национальных блюд числятся бирьяни, румали роти и кебабы.

Историк развеял миф о негативном влиянии Моголов на Индию.

have still much to learn about the mysterious Etruscan civilization.

Historians and archaeologists can tell a lot about the Etruscans, but some of their unearthed artifacts and structures have been challenging to interpret. The religious beliefs, traditions, and customs of the Etruscans are a complex subject.

Some of their buildings were obviously important but their purpose is a riddle. Scientists have discovered a vast network of Neolithic tunnels criss-crossing several European countries. This subterranean network was built several millennia ago. Following these ancient underground tunnels, we discovered that deep beneath the city of Orvieto, Italy, there are a series of underground structures. According to sources, during the 6th- 4th centuries BC, the town of Orvieto was a culturally and economically developed Etruscan city. One of these underground structures is a strange pyramidal structure. Unfortunately, scientists say they have no idea what it is, and the purpose of the underground Etruscan pyramid remains an ancient mystery.

The burial practices of the Etruscans were not unlike the Romans. Like most ancient civilizations the Etruscans believed in an afterlife and they buried their dead with grave good helping them to get a good start on their journey to a new and unknown world. Scientists have discovered amulets, figurines, and many other symbolical objects in Etruscan tombs.

However, one of the most extraordinary discoveries was made when scientists encountered a most spectacular place, namely, "The Tomb of the Silver Hands", a monumental place, with a long corridor with an atrium open to the sky and leading to three burial chambers that contained the remains of at least three individuals.

Ka Gold Jewelry Sacred Jewelry

This tomb must have belonged to high-ranking members of the Etruscan society regardless of their gender. Inside the tomb scientists found "something unusual lying on the ground among a variety of artifacts—two well-preserved silver hands with traces of gold on the fingers and gold-plated fingernails."

It's one of the most perplexing artifacts ever found inside Etruscan tombs.

The mysterious stone altars and megaliths, hidden in the Selva di Malano (Malano forest) show a darker side of the Etruscans.

Library of Ancient & Unexplained Mysteries

This site is located in the northernmost part of the town of Soriano, on a slope at the extreme foothills of the Cimini Mountains. Here, the Etruscans used the opportunity to carve massive rock altars from volcanic eruptions. One of them is the Sasso del Predicatore (Stone of the Preacher) structure that was most likely used as a Pagan altar.

The steps leading to the tops suggest the Stone of the Preacher could have been used for astronomical observations, but some scientists suggest it may have been an Etruscan place of worship where humans were sacrificed.

In the vicinity of the Stone of the Preacher, there is another ancient structure and this one is truly baffling because it may offer evidence of highly advanced technology. This perplexing cubic altar is a perfectly shaped cube, and it has signs that look like they were made with a machine of some sort. This defies any logical explanation because the Etruscans should not have had access to such sophisticated tools, or did they?

See also: Mysterious Fontainebleau Forest – Home To A Lost Civilization

Another possibility attempting to explain the cubic altar's origin is that the structure was created by an unknown, advanced lost civilization that was present in the Malano forest long before the arrival of the Etruscans. We simply don't know. What we do know is that not far from these mysterious structures there are several Roman tombs and a small Romanesque church but these have the usual architecture associated with this historical time period.

Le culte de saturne...

Ils adorent saturne depuis des milliers d'années, le culte n'a jamais cessé et ses rites sont toujours présents à ce jour.
Depuis les temps anciens, les sages ont regardé les étoiles , admirant leur lueur céleste et leurs attribuant des pouvoirs divins, en fonction de leurs effets sur les humains.
Les humains vouent un culte à celui qui les fera vivre ils ont rapidement compris que le soleil, la lune, la terre,... sont les régents de notre survie d'où une multitude de divinités.

Ce culte très ancien s'est perpétué jusqu'à nos jours, nous faisons des copier coller depuis longtemps, babylone, summer, grec romain....
Les civilisations sémitique appelaient le dieu saturne EL. la divinité suprême était représentée par un cube noir..... il y en a à travers le monde!!!

Les hébreux représentaient saturne avec l'étoile à 6 pointes, qui devient après l'étoile de David, le symbole se trouve sur le drapeau israélien.
De nombreux chercheurs ésotériques affirment que le nom de IS-RA-EL est la combinaison des noms des anciennes divinités païennes Isis, Ra et El.

Saturne à toujours eu pour les grecs et les romains une signification négative, mauvaise, associée aux limitations, restrictions, mort, décomposition.
Saturne est la 6ème planète du système solaire, saturne = samedi qui est le 6ème jour de la semaine, Le pôle nord de saturne forme un hexagone à 6 côtés!
Un hexagone à plat peut être un cube avec la perspective.

Tout un culte mondial est voué à saturne et utilisé dans les milieux occultes.
Le culte de saturne alias chronos alias moloch.
Les 3 religions monothéistes sont gouvernée et dévouée au culte de saturne...

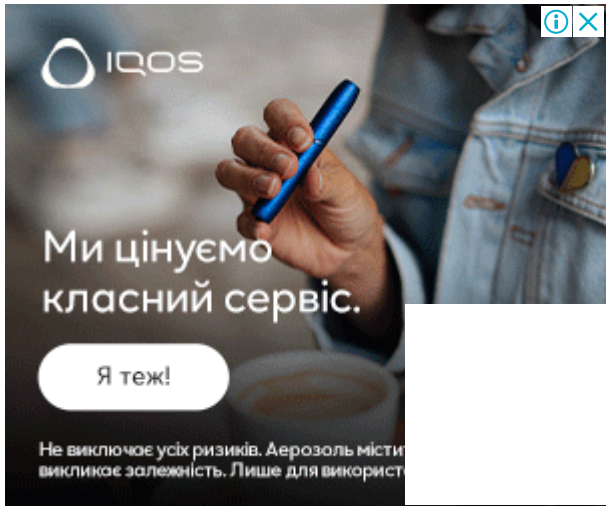
Legendary Black Knights: Mysterious Medieval Entities of Neutrality

READ LATER PRINT



Black Knights began to appear in history during the Middle Ages. Since the 13th century, a series of legends mentioning the mysterious Black Knights emerged. Although the Black Knights were said to have carried out good deeds and fought to protect cities from unjust rulers and other threats, texts referring to these legends were censored and banned by the Church during the medieval period. Nevertheless, the story of the legendary black knight Ashor endured over the centuries.

Black Knights in Arthurian Legends

The figure of the Black Knight appears in several Arthurian legends as an ambiguous motif who often emerges as a competitor for one of the better-known Arthurian knights . It's also the role that a couple of the Arthurian knights have had.

As an example of the first, Sir Percival fights a Black Knight after exchanging rings with the other knight's wife, creating confusion and conflict. In the second reference to the Arthurian Black Knight, we see Sir Lancelot dressing up as a black knight as a disguise. But the best known example of a Black Knight in Arthurian legends is undoubtedly Sir Morien, the son of Sir Agrovale and a Moorish princess, causing him to be referred to by this title due to his African lineage .

Ashor the King Killer and Priest Savior

The origin of Black Knights is closely linked to the legend of Ashor, a knight who had remained skilled and strong, despite his advanced age, and who specialized in the killing of kings and other nobles. Sometime around the 13th or 14th century there was a king with a powerful enemy – a king of another land who oppressed his people.

Desperate to defeat his opponent, the good king sent a message calling Ashor to his court. One night, the king woke up to find Ashor near his bed. The assassin had entered his castle without detection – proving his skill.

Ashor asked the king who he needed to kill and the king gave his order. Ashor accepted the task, but said that he would first check the king's claims that his enemy was an evil oppressor. Ashor entered the fortress city of the king's enemy, and witnessed for himself the cruelty of the ruler; his task to assassinate the king would proceed as planned.

'The Black Knight.' (theflickerees / deviantart)

Ashor discovered that an old priest who had once risen up against the cruelty of the evil king was being held prisoner in the dungeon. After fulfilling his order to kill the king, Ashor, who was moved by the priest's story, decided to free him from the prison. He entered the dungeon and found the man in a very bad state.

The imprisoned priest was very weak and could barely stand. Unfortunately, the priest proved to be a burden, making it difficult for Ashor to escape. While carrying the old man out of the dungeon, the knight was injured. Nevertheless, the two got up on a horse, escaped the city, and made for the woods.

The black knight had freed the city from its evil king and he had escaped. However, with people in pursuit, Ashor understood that he could not tend to his wounds in time and he descended from the horse, telling the priest that he would not slow him down and he must continue. The priest thanked him, gave him his blessing and left as instructed.

The Fight for the Legendary Knight's Soul

Ashor waited for his end near a tree. Soon, as blood left the knight's body, a demon appeared before him telling the knight that his soul belonged to him and he had come to claim him. Before the demon could take Ashor's soul, an angel also appeared, saying that the knight's soul belonged to him and that he had come to take it with him to Heaven. Apparently, the knight's good deeds had been just a little more numerous than his bad ones and he had been forgiven.

As the two entities were getting ready to clash over the human's soul, a third entity appeared. At this time, the angel and the demon had stopped fighting as if they had been frozen. The third entity had no form.

In order to be visible, it had appeared as a figure in a black cloak. However, nothing could be seen coming out of the cloak: no hands, no feet, no face. This third entity was Il Separatio , the Anonymous one, the keeper of universal balance, the one who cannot be named.

Il Separatio Confronts the Black Knight

Anonymous is the personification of perfect neutrality. He is neither good, nor evil, he is beyond all divisions. Il Separatio spoke and said that the knight had done just as much good as he had done evil. Therefore, neither the angel nor the demon could claim his soul. He belonged to Il Separatio. At that moment, both the angel and the demon disappeared and Anonymous turned to the knight.

A statue of the Anonymous One, Il Separatio, Budapest, Hungary. (Vajdahunyad Castle)

Ashor's wounds had been healed. He got up and talked to Il Separatio. The entity told Ashor that he had become free and no longer belonged to 'the system'. He was outside it, beyond it. Il Separatio told the knight that he could do whatever he wanted, that he could live for as long as he wanted, that he could travel anywhere (including other planets). When he was to become bored of all of this, then he was to call upon Il Separatio to stand before him once again and tell him about the true purpose of their existence.

Ashor was told that, as he was no longer part of the system, his actions no longer mattered for the world. Should he do good deeds, other would do bad deeds and the universal balance would remain unchanged. Should he do bad deeds, others would do good deeds and, again, the balance of the universe would remain the same.

According to legend, Il Separatio disappeared once he finished his explanation, while the knight Ashor still lives among humans today. It is said that he had chosen to do good deeds as a black knight, even though his actions no longer mattered for the world. Ashor, the Immortal, remains the prototype for the image of the black knight.

Mali in West Africa was the richest Empire on Earth in the 14th century

The African History November 2, 2022 Empire, Events, History

Share Messenger Whatsapp Tweet Like 2.2K

Some of the richest men in the world today are tech billionaires and business leaders from the West and China. However, the title of “richest man who ever lived” goes to a little-known ancient ruler from a part of the world that is more often associated with poverty than with unimaginable wealth.

Mansa Musa was the king of the large Mali Empire in 1312. He took the throne when his predecessor, Abu-Bakr 11, who Mansa Musa had been a deputy for, went missing while looking for the edge of the Atlantic Musa took over as leader during a hard time when European countries were being destroyed by never-ending civil wars and a lack of resources. The Mali Empire, on the other hand, was thriving because it had a lot of gold and salt and other natural resources.

Under this leader, the empire grew to cover a large part of West Africa, from the Atlantic coast to Timbuktu, a trading center in the middle of the country, and even some parts of the Sahara. Just like the area he controlled grew, so did his money and wealth.

The rest of the world didn't fully understand how much wealth King Musa controlled in his land until 1324. Musa was a religious Muslim who lived in a kingdom where most of the people were also Muslims. He went on pilgrimage to Mecca, but he didn't go alone.

Musa went to the Holy Land with a caravan of tens of thousands of soldiers, slaves, and heralds. They were all dressed in expensive Persian silk and carried golden staffs. Even though there is a lot of disagreement about how many people were in his group, the convoy that went with him was a big deal. It included camels and horses carrying hundreds of pounds of gold.

This show of wealth caught the attention of the people who lived in the areas he traveled through, since such a large caravan would be hard to miss. When he went through Egypt, he had an effect on the people that would last for more than a decade.

When he got to Cairo, the capital of Egypt, and was forced to meet with al-Malik al-Nusar, the ruler of Cairo, his true character was shown. Ancient historian Shihab al-detailed Umari's writings say that Musa was met vited him to meet with other royals. Musa turned down the ly land to make a pilgrimage.

His reason became clear as time went on. He didn't want to see the sultan because he would have to kiss the ground and the sultan's hand. After much doubt and persuasion, he finally agreed to the meeting.

During the meeting, Musa still wouldn't kiss the sultan's feet, and things didn't go well until he gave in to tradition and kissed the sultan's feet. But because he was in Egypt, he shared his huge wealth with the people who lived there. He also bought from local traders and gave them gold in exchange.

Then, news of Musa's wealth spread to all parts of the world, not just in Africa. Even after he had died, which was between 1332 and 1337. By the end of the 14th century, Musa was shown on the Catalan Atlas of 1375, which was an important tool for sailors in medieval Europe. Abraham Cresques, a famous Spanish cartographer, made the atlas. In it, Musa was shown sitting on a golden throne with a golden sceptre, crown, and gold nugget in his hand.

From the huge amount of natural resources he controlled to the growth and development of the communities he left behind, Musa was a true legend whose wealth dwarfs that of today's billionaires. Even by today's standards, it's hard to say what his wealth was like.

Maria Theresa of Spain: Betrayal, Incest, and Black Baby Rumors

READ LATER PRINT

Maria Theresa of Spain was an infanta (meaning ‘princess’) of the Spanish Empire who lived during the 17 th century. She belonged to the Spanish branch of the House of Habsburg , and is best-known for being the Queen of France as a result of her marriage to the French king, Louis XIV. She is known as a woman who was accepting of being married off to her cousin, loyal to her cheating husband, poised in the face of accusations and fiercely protective of her children.

Maria Theresa’s Family History Resulted in Childhood Loneliness

Maria Theresa of Spain was born on the 10 th of September 1638. Her father was Philip IV of Spain, while her mother was Elisabeth of France. When Maria Theresa was six years old, her mother died. Two years later, in 1646, her older brother Balthasar Charles, who was Philip IV’s heir, died as well. Balthasar was betrothed to his cousin, Mariana of Austria. As Philip had lost his wife and Mariana her betrothed, the two (who were uncle and niece) married in 1649 – such incestuous relations within a royal family were deemed acceptable at the time as a means of perpetuating the royal lineage.

The remainder of Maria Theresa's childhood is said to have been lonely, as she was neglected by her stepmother, who was merely four years older than her.

How Did the Thirty Years War Shape Maria Theresa of Spain's Future?

In the meantime, a war was being fought between Spain and France. This war began when the latter entered the Thirty Years War on the side of the Protestants in 1635. Spain, on the other hand, supported the Catholics. Although the Thirty Years War ended in 1648, the conflict between Spain and France continued until 1659. By this time, both parties were growing weary of the war and sought to negotiate peace. In order to secure peace, a union between the royal families of Spain (the Habsburgs) and France (the Bourbons) was proposed.

Maria Theresa and Louis XIV – A Marriage to Unite Countries

The negotiations between Spain and France resulted in the Treaty of the Pyrenees, which included an arrangement for marriage between Maria Theresa and Louis XIV of France, who were double first cousins. These negotiations were complicated and one of the issues that had to be resolved was that of succession. As Spain had no Salic Law, it was possible for women to inherit the Spanish throne. Following the death of her brother, Balthasar, Maria Theresa held the title of heir presumptive, which she retained until the birth of her half-brother Philip Prospero in 1657. Under the Treaty of the Pyrenees, Maria Theresa was forced to renounce all her claims on the Spanish throne prior to her marriage. In return, she was to receive a monetary settlement as part of her dowry, though this was never paid.

Marriage of Louis XIV of France and Maria Theresa of Spain. (Krishna / CC BY-SA 2.0)

In June 1660, Maria Theresa and Louis XIV were married in Saint-Jean-de-Luz, in the south-western part of France. Although Louis XIV was faithful to his wife at the beginning of the marriage, the Sun King soon began having affairs with other women. In 1661, for instance, Louise de La Vallerie became the king's first official mistress. Maria Theresa is described as being a timid, patient, naïve, and a sweet-natured woman. She stayed away from the social intrigues of the French court and developed a close relationship with her mother-in-law, Anne of Austria, who was also Maria Theresa's paternal aunt. Both of them being pious women, Maria Theresa and Anne would spend time visiting convents and other religious institutions.

The Rumor about Maria Theresa of Spain's Black Baby

Despite her piety and her faithfulness to the king, a vicious rumor circulated around the French court that Maria Theresa had given birth to an illegitimate black baby. Historians, however, are of the opinion that the baby was not black but had dark purplish skin as a consequence of oxygen deprivation, and that it soon died after its birth. Another part of the story involves a Benedictine nun by the name of Louise Marie Thérèse, known also as the 'Black Nun of Moret'. The nun claimed royal descent. If it did involve the French royal family, it is more likely that she was the illegitimate child of Louis XIV rather than of Maria Theresa.

Maria Theresa of Spain’s Children Were Her Priority

Throughout her reign as Queen of France, Maria Theresa showed little interest in accumulating political power. This is evident, for instance, when she was appointed as regent in 1672 during the Franco-Dutch War. Instead, she placed great importance on her role as a mother, making sure that her son received a proper education.

One of the lesser known contributions that Maria Theresa made to France is the introduction of chocolate to the kingdom. As a result of the Spanish conquest of the Aztec Empire , cacao was introduced into Europe. Maria Theresa herself was a great lover of chocolate. Before her marriage to Louis XIV she gave her future husband a beautifully decorated chest containing chocolate as an engagement gift. The [redacted] he attention of the rest of Europe.

How did Maria Theresa of Spain Die?

Maria Theresa died at the age of 45 on the 30 th of July 1683, after returning from a tour of Burgundy and Alsace. Back in Versailles, the queen fell ill and died suddenly from complications related to an abscess. When the king heard of his wife's death, he did not mourn but instead is reported to have said "This is the first time she's caused me any bother."

The negotiations between Spain and France resulted in the Treaty of the Pyrenees, which included an arrangement for marriage between Maria Theresa and Louis XIV of France, who were double first cousins. These negotiations were complicated and one of the issues that had to be resolved was that of succession. As Spain had no Salic Law, it was possible for women to inherit the Spanish throne. Following the death of her brother, Balthasar, Maria Theresa held the title of heir presumptive, which she retained until the birth of her half-brother Philip Prospero in 1657. Under the Treaty of the Pyrenees, Maria Theresa was forced to renounce all her claims on the Spanish throne prior to her marriage. In return, she was to receive a monetary settlement as part of her dowry, though this was never paid.

In June 1660, Maria Theresa and Louis XIV were married in Saint-Jean-de-Luz, in the south-western part of France. Although Louis XIV was faithful to his wife at the beginning of the marriage, the Sun King soon began having affairs with other women. In 1661, for instance, Louise de La Vallerie became the king's first official mistress. Maria Theresa is described as being a timid, patient, naïve, and a sweet-natured woman. She stayed away from the social intrigues of the French court and developed a close relationship with her mother-in-law, Anne of Austria, who was also Maria Theresa's paternal aunt. Both of them being pious women, Maria Theresa and Anne would spend time visiting convents and other religious institutions.

The Rumor about Maria Theresa of Spain's Black Baby

Despite her piety and her faithfulness to the king, a vicious rumor circulated around the French court that Maria Theresa had given birth to an illegitimate black baby. Historians, however, are of the opinion that the baby was not black but had dark purplish skin as a consequence of oxygen deprivation, and that it soon died after its birth. Another part of the story involves a Benedictine nun by the name of Louise Marie Thérèse, known also as the 'Black Nun of Moret'. The nun claimed royal descent. If it did involve the French royal family, it is more likely that she was the illegitimate child of Louis XIV rather than of Maria Theresa.

Maria Theresa of Spain’s Children Were Her Priority

Throughout her reign as Queen of France, Maria Theresa showed little interest in accumulating political power. This is evident, for instance, when she was appointed as regent in 1672 during the Franco-Dutch War. Instead, she placed great importance on her role as a mother, making sure that her son received a proper education.

One of the lesser known contributions that Maria Theresa made to France is the introduction of chocolate to the kingdom. Before her marriage to Louis XIV she gave her future husband a beautifully decorated chest containing chocolate as an engagement gift. The [redacted] he attention of the rest of Europe.

How did Maria Theresa of Spain Die?

Maria Theresa died at the age of 45 on the 30 th of July 1683, after returning from a tour of Burgundy and Alsace. Back in Versailles, the queen fell ill and died suddenly from complications related to an abscess. When the king heard of his wife's death, he did not mourn but instead is reported to have said "This is the first time she's caused me any bother."

OUR MISSION

At Ancient Origins, we believe that one of the most important fields of knowledge we can pursue as human beings is our beginnings. And while some people may seem content with the story as it stands, our view is that there exist countless mysteries, scientific anomalies and surprising artifacts that have yet to be discovered and explained.

The goal of Ancient Origins is to highlight recent archaeological discoveries, peer-reviewed academic research and evidence, as well as offering alternative viewpoints and explanations of science, archaeology, mythology, religion and history around the globe.

By bringing together top experts and authors, this archaeology website explores lost civilizations, examines sacred writings, tours ancient places, investigates ancient discoveries and questions mysterious happenings. Our open community is dedicated to digging into the origins of our species on planet earth, and question wherever the discoveries might take us. We seek to retell the story of our beginnings.

AncientPages.com - On October 6, 1536, William Tyndale, who wanted the Bible to be available to all people, was burned at stake. He was a prominent figure in Protestant reform in the years following his execution.

Tyndale was an academic who believed that the Bible should be available for all to read. He translated the Bible into English, much of the work on the Continent, and published it in England before he was captured and executed.

THE MARTYRDOM AND BURNING OF WILLIAM TYNDALE.

William Tyndale was born about 1490 at North Nibley, Gloucestershire. He was educated at Magdalen Hall, Oxford (now Hertford College), where he studied languages, taking a Bachelor's degree in 1512 and a Master's degree in 1515.

He planned to begin his studies in theology when he discovered that the study of scripture was not included in the Oxford syllabus. His response was to leave Oxford for Cambridge, where he organized a group of scholars who met regularly at the White Horse Inn to translate, interpret and discuss the Bible. He became convinced that the church was covering up the truth, that people had the right to know what was included in scripture, and that it should be translated into English.

Tyndale decided to translate the Bible into English, so he contacted one of the prominent churchmen for help. He was rejected and informed that there was no place for scripture in the vernacular and that scripture was the preserve of the church.

Those not part of the clergy had no business to read the Bible, and if Tyndale persisted, he would be prosecuted for heresy. Hoping to work in secret, Tyndale left for Germany in 1524 establishment had it suppressed. An edition printed at Worms had more success, and hundreds of copies were smuggled into England and Scotland. His translation introduced numerous new words and expressions into the English language. Examples of Tyndale's creations are 'atone,' literally 'at one', 'Passover,' and 'scapegoat.' He also invented English idioms such as 'the apple of his eye,' 'filthy lucre,' and 'the powers that be'.

His work was condemned in England, and copies were publicly burned. Also, Tyndale was condemned as a heretic. He was forced to hide in Antwerp, but he was finally betrayed.

In 1536 was put on trial for heresy; even a plea from the English chancellor, Thomas Cromwell - did not help.

Tyndale was burned at stake at Vilvoorde, Belgium, on October 6, 1536. At the time of his death, several thousand copies of his New Testament had been printed, but only one intact copy survives at the British Library, London.

Les procureurs dans l'affaire de trafic sexuel d'enfants contre Ghislaine Maxwell ont déclaré que l'accusé « avait mis en place des élites VIP » avec des enfants à violer, selon des documents judiciaires.

Selon le dossier du tribunal, des e-mails montrant que Maxwell a pris des dispositions pour mettre en place des élites puissantes, y compris des politiciens et des dirigeants mondiaux, avec des victimes mineures de trafic sexuel « qu'ils voudraient ».

Les procureurs ont exhorté le juge à permettre que les identités des pédophiles d'élite soient révélées pendant le procès.

On a eu de grands discernements

L'avocat principal déclare dans le dossier du tribunal que les messages électroniques de Maxwell l'exposent comme « utilisant sa capacité à donner accès » aux victimes de viol d'enfants d'Epstein « comme une forme de monnaie sociale ».

Dailymail.co.uk rapporte : Il prétend : « Ces pièces montrent (1) la volonté de l'accusé de faciliter les rencontres entre des hommes et des femmes puissants qu'ils aimeraient, et (2) la compréhension de l'accusé que fournir un tel accès est un moyen de se faire bien hommes puissants.

«Au procès, il n'est peut-être pas évident pour un jury qu'une femme adulte serait disposée à permettre à Jeffrey Epstein d'avoir accès à des jeunes filles.

« Ces e-mails montrent clairement que l'accusée était prête à assumer ce rôle et qu'elle était désireuse de plaire aux hommes riches et influents en leur donnant accès aux femmes. »

Les avocats de Maxwell ont déclaré que si elle essayait de « se faire la politesse avec un ami, et alors ? »

Leur document de réponse indique: » Si son motif est de permettre aux femmes adultes de sortir avec ses amis célibataires, alors ce n'est pas pour ramasser des écolières dans la rue pour donner des » massages sexuels » à Jeffrey Epstein.

« Et si elle avait déjà accès à d'autres hommes puissants et influents qui étaient dans sa vie, elle n'aurait pas besoin de son amitié ou de son accès à Jeffrey Epstein. »

La question des courriels doit être débattue aujourd'hui lors de l'audience finale avant le procès de Maxwell.

La phase publique de sélection du jury, connue sous le nom de voir-dire, doit commencer demain dans la salle d'audience de Manhattan.

Les déclarations d'ouverture sont dues le 29 novembre.

Maxwell fait face à six chefs d'accusation, dont la séduction de mineurs, le trafic sexuel d'enfants et le parjure.

La fille du magnat en disgrâce Robert Maxwell nie tous les chefs d'accusation, qui entraînent des peines de prison allant jusqu'à 80 ans.

Elle est détenue dans une cellule de 6 pieds sur 9 pieds au sombre centre de détention métropolitain de Brooklyn et a mis de côté 5,2 millions de livres sterling pour payer sa défense.

Appel de détresse de tous les

La trafiquante sexuelle d'enfants auprès de l'élite, Ghislaine Maxwell, a secrètement flirté avec le Premier ministre britannique Boris Johnson, selon de nouvelles révélations explosives de la sœur de Johnson.

« Il est difficile de ne pas ressentir un cri de pitié pour Ghislaine Maxwell – 500 jours et compter en isolement cellulaire », a écrit Rachel Johnson dans The Spectator, où son frère a travaillé comme rédacteur en chef avant de devenir Premier ministre.

Somehow perfect that in the middle of the sleaze conversation Boris Johnson's kid sister is reminding everyone that he was Oxford chums with Ghislaine Maxwell pic.twitter.com/qSUHMqdlOA

— Hari Kunzru (@harikunzru) November 17, 2021

Johnson décrit Maxwell comme « un glamazon brillant avec des yeux coquins tenant une cour à califourchon sur une table » dans la salle commune junior du collège Balliol, tout en posant sa botte à talons hauts « sur la cuisse de mon frère Boris ».

Maxwell lui lança un « regard de pitié » et l'invita à une fête qui fut dissoute par « son père, Bob, sortant en peignoir et nous disant à tous de rentrer à la maison ».

Rt.com rapporte : Bob Maxwell, qui aurait travaillé avec les services secrets israéliens, a été retrouvé mort dans l'océan Atlantique en 1991, vraisemblablement tombé par-dessus bord de son yacht « Lady Ghislaine » au large des îles Canaries. Il a été enterré en Israël.

Sa fille Ghislaine a été arrêtée aux États-Unis en juillet 2020 et accusée de six crimes fédéraux, dont le trafic sexuel, la séduction de mineurs et le parjure, en relation avec ses relations avec Epstein. Le financier controversé a plaidé coupable d'abus sexuels sur mineurs en 2008, mais a obtenu un règlement clément. Il a été arrêté en juillet 2019 lorsque de nouveaux détails d'abus – impliquant également Maxwell – sont apparus et a été retrouvé mort dans une prison de New York un mois plus tard, officiellement en raison d'un suicide.

Le procès de Maxwell devrait commencer fin novembre. Dans sa première interview avec les médias depuis son arrestation, elle a déclaré au Daily Mail la semaine dernière que ses conditions à l'intérieur de la prison de Brooklyn étaient un « enfer vivant » d'isolement, de nourriture pourrie et de privation de sommeil.

« J'ai été agressée et maltraitée pendant près d'un an et demi », a-t- elle déclaré, se plaignant que les lumières de sa cellule n'étaient jamais éteintes et que des gardes « effrayants » la fixaient pendant qu'elle prenait une douche. Maxwell a également insisté sur le fait qu'elle était innocente et « n'a joué aucun rôle dans les crimes d'Epstein », ce qu'elle a dit qu'elle prouverait devant le tribunal.

العرق الأمازيغي أو النوع البربري في التصنيف الانثروبولوجي + معرض صور

يتم تعريف العرق الأمازيغي أو النوع البربري Berberid/Berid Type في التصنيف الانثروبولوجي عند الباحثين الغربيين بمسميات عدة و سلم تراتبي دقيق، فهو يعتبر كعرق ابيض أولي وبدائي أو ببساطة يعتبر

ك كرومانيوم Cromagnon (أول أنسان أبيض و أول أنسان عاقل متطور في التاريخ البشري) أو عرق المشتاني Mechtoid type ، ويرى ايضا ك Proto-Mediterranean أي أقدم عنصر بشري ظهر في البحر الأبيض المتوسط.

ويمتاز النوع البربري بالخشونة الجسدية و الملامح التفصيلية على الوجه مع استدارة رباعية للوجه والجمجمة أو طولية أحيانا تعرف بMesaticephalic و بجبهة كبيرة و عريضة بالاضافة لأنف مستقيمي وأحيانا أنف محدب (غير معوج) لكنه نحيف عموما، يمتاز بعضلات وجهية قوية على صعيد الخدين و فكين عريضين و ثقيلين، مع ذقن بارز و سطح جمجمي رباعي بيضوي و انحنائة شبه مستقيمية للخلف الرأسي، وعادة تميل العيون ألى الضمور أو الاتساع عرضيا مع حواجب ممتدة تؤخذ خط مثلث بزاوية منحنية في الوسط.

وينحدر من النوع البربري عدة أنواع أتخذت منحا تطوريا أقل حدة في الملامح البارزة عند سلفها، كالأطلسي المتوسطي Atlanto-Mediterranean وهو يشكل عنصرا مهما في شمال أفريقيا ويمتاز بالرؤوس الطويلة Dolichocephalic و بالملامح البربرية ولكن أقل حدة من السلف المباشر مع عيون واسعة.

وهناك المتوسطي الخفيف Gracile Mediterranean وهو أيضا منتشر بشمال افريقيا بشكل مهم برؤوس طولية ، و يتميز أنه يشبه العنصر الالبي الأوروبي Alpine، لكن هو يمتاز كونه مجرد نوع بربري فقد صلابته الملامحية و احتفظ بقوة الشكل الجمجمي للنوع البربري و لكن برأس طولي بيضوي و عيون كبيرة.

وهذه هي تراتبية و مسميات العرق الأمازيغي حسب كبار علماء الأنثروبولوجيا،

African Paleo Atlantid (Lundman) = Berberid (Knußmann et al.) = Eurafrikanid (Eickstedt) = African Atlanto Med (Carlenton Coon) = Coarse (mediterranean or Alpo-Mediterranean (Glowatzki

The two Kashmir Giants posing with the American photographer James Ricalton, 1903

Professor James Ricalton with his friends, the Giants of Kashmir.

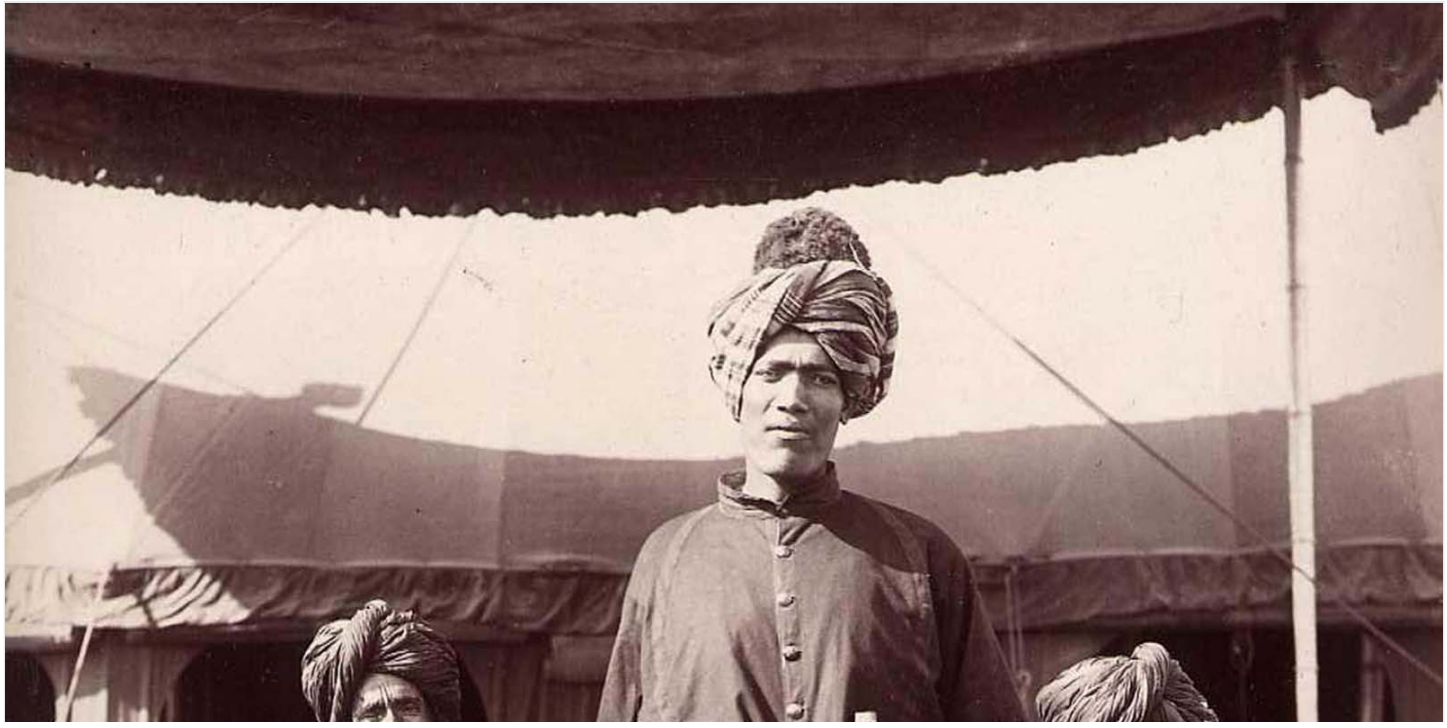
The Durbar of 1903 was held in Delhi to celebrate the succession of the British monarch King Edward VII (the great-grandfather of the current British monarch, Queen Elizabeth II) as the Emperor of India.

The Delhi Durbar was organized by Lord Curzon, India's viceroy at the time. The original plan was for Edward himself to come to India for a special coronation ceremony, but when the King refused (he was conspicuously less interested in India than Victoria had been), Curzon decided to stage a massive spectacle instead.

After two years' planning, the ceremonies began on 29 December 1902 with a lavish parade of elephants through the streets. Guests included a wide range of Indian princes and maharajas, with the Duke of Connaught representing the British Royal Family.

The actual Durbar was held on New Year's Day, 1903, on a large plain outside Delhi and was intended to highlight the supposed glory of the monarchy and its Empire.

The assembly displayed possibly the greatest collection of jewels to be seen in one place. Each of the Indian princes was adorned with the most spectacular of his gems from the collections of centuries.



The two Kashmiri brothers were known as the Cashmere Giants and are both over 7 feet tall.

Maharajahs came with great retinues from all over India, many of them meeting for the first time while the massed ranks of the Indian armies, under their Commander-in-Chief Lord Kitchener, paraded, played their bands, and restrained the crowds of common people.

On the first day, the Curzons entered the area of festivities, together with the maharajas, riding on elephants, some with huge gold candelabras stuck on their tusks. But nothing creates an impression like having two giant guards in your entourage.

The Maharaja of Jammu and Kashmir, Maharaja brought along with him two of the tallest men (in the whole world it seems) from Kashmir.

One of the giants was 7’9” tall (2.36 m) while the “shorter” one was a mere 7’4” tall (2.23 m) and according to various sources they were indeed twin brothers. They created quite an impression at the Durbar as they literally stood heads and shoulders above the rest. The brothers were known as the Two Kashmir Giants and were elite riflemen in the service of the Maharaja.

One of the giant brothers posing with regular guards.

The event was attended by international journalists and photographers, one of them being James Ricalton, an American traveler and photographer who managed to get a few pictures with the Two Giants of Kashmir. We don't know exactly how tall Ricalton was, but judging by his photographs he surely loved posing with the two giants of Kashmir.

The Brisbane Courier printed in February 1903, had an article titled “The Retinue of the Ruler of Kashmir included a fine detachment of Cuirassiers and a huge Giant”. Probably the reporter didn’t see the other Giant.

One of the original captions claims that the Kashmiri brothers were originally from a place called “Balmokand”. Unfortunately, we can’t locate this place in Kashmir, maybe the name changed or someone got it wrong.

Professor James Ricalton (1844-1929) posing with one of the Kashmir giants.

The Kashmir Giant.

This caption says one of the giants was 7′6″, however, all the other sources claim that the actual height was 7′9″.

The giants were brothers and elite riflemen of the Maharaja of Kashmir.

Great post!

Was very curious about the authenticity of the pictures. I had seen them before but without a caption.

Good to know the history behind the men.

Un document a sauvé des Marocains de l'esclavage

Le 20 janvier 1790, un groupe de huit personnes a soumis une pétition à la Chambre des représentants de Caroline du Sud. Ils y relatent leur détention chez les Portugais qui les ont faits prisonniers de guerre après les avoir capturés dans leur pays d'origine, le Maroc. Les individus disent avoir été livrés à un capitaine nommé Clark, qui leur a promis leur rachat par l'Ambassade du Maroc en Angleterre. Ils auraient retrouvé leur liberté, sauf que Clark n'a pas tenu ses promesses et les a conduits en Caroline du Sud. Revendus en esclaves, les individus ont défendu le fait qu'ils soient sujets d'un sultan allié des États-Unis, qui n'est autre que Mohammed Ben Abdallah (1757-1790). Après examen de leur pétition, la décision a été rendue par la Chambre : « Les personnes qui sont les Sujets de l'Empereur du Maroc étant Libres dans cet État ne sont pas justiciables selon la Loi commandant pour le meilleur ordre et la meilleure direction des Noirs et autres esclaves ». Ce principe implique que les Maures ne doivent pas être soumis aux lois dites du Negro Act. Ainsi, le Moors Sundry Act a été adopté la même année, pour octroyer aux Maures un statut particulier qui les reconnaît juridiquement comme « blancs ».

Unsolved Mystery: Where did Hannibal get his War Elephants?

READ LATER PRINT

Hannibal Barca was a great Carthaginian general, known for fighting against Rome during the second Punic war. He lived from 247 to c. 182 BC. His name has been one used to incite fear over the centuries, and he remains well-known for his highly strategic military tactics. One of Hannibal's most notable achievements occurred around 218 BC. In a quest to join up with anti-Roman allies, Hannibal led 100,000 troops and 40 elephants on a treacherous journey through the Alps . Many troops and animals were killed while crossing the Alps, and to this day, Hannibal's completion of this journey is revered as one of the greatest military moments in history.

While the crossing of the Alps was an incredible journey that helped to seal Hannibal's place as one of the greatest military leaders in history, there are many mysterious aspects of the journey that have been analyzed, but never solved. One of the greatest of those mysteries is where Hannibal got his pack of elephants. While war elephants have commonly been used historically, it is unclear how Hannibal obtained this enormous pack elephants. During Hannibal's time, there were only two species of elephants in existence – Asian and African. Hannibal lived in Carthage, which is present-day Tunisia, located on the Mediterranean. This is quite a distance from Asia, and from the area south of the Sahara where African elephants are found.

Hannibal's Army Crossing the Rhone, Henri Paul Motte, 1878. (Wikipedia*)*

It has not been determined whether Hannibal used Asian elephants, African elephants, or a combination of the two. Looking at the characteristics of each type of elephant may provide insight into which species would have been preferable for Hannibal's needs. It is believed that if given a choice, Hannibal would have chosen the Asian elephants. They are somewhat smaller in size than African elephants, and can be easier to train. Elephants used for military purposes would have to be well-trained, or else they would be more of a burden than a benefit. African elephants can be more difficult to control, which, added to their bigger size, would make them less suitable for military purposes, and certainly less desirable for a treacherous trek across the Alps.

Hannibal crossing the Alps with War Elephants (Source)

Some historians believe that the elephants came from a small forest subspecies of elephants located in the Atlas Mountains of Morocco and Algeria. These elephants were somewhat small, standing eight feet tall at the shoulders, and may not have been as useful for military purposes. Gavin de Beer, of the British Museum of Natural History wrote about these elephants, describing them as smelly and loud, and stating that they were highly dangerous when they charged. Some historians cite a coin from Hannibal's time that depicts an African elephant. However, only a single elephant survived the trek across the Alps and the war, and it is believed that this was an Asian elephant. The beast's name was Surus, which means "the Syrian," and this was the elephant that Hannibal himself rode. Surus may have been a descendant of one of the elephants seized by the Ptolemies of Egypt during their campaigns in Syria, and brought back to Carthage. While this is cited as evidence that at least one of Hannibal's elephants was Asian, it does not generally lead to a conclusion that all of his elephants were Asian. It may be that Hannibal collected his elephants from different areas.

It may never be known for sure exactly where Hannibal's elephants came from. Being large creatures that need a great amount of sustenance, it is likely that any journey transporting elephants would have been complicated, and would require much advanced planning. It is likely that Hannibal was less concerned with exactly where his elephants came from, and instead he focused more on whether they would be an asset to his military forces during the second Punic war.

OUR MISSION

At Ancient Origins, we believe that one of the most important fields of knowledge we can pursue as human beings is our beginnings. And while some people may seem content with the story as it stands, our view is that there exist countless mysteries, scientific anomalies and surprising artifacts that have yet to be discovered and explained.

The goal of Ancient Origins is to highlight recent archaeological discoveries, peer-reviewed academic research and evidence, as well as offering alternative viewpoints and explanations of science, archaeology, mythology, religion and history around the globe.

By bringing together top experts and authors, this archaeology website explores lost civilizations, examines sacred writings, tours ancient places, investigates ancient discoveries and questions mysterious happenings. Our open community is dedicated to digging into the origins of our species on planet earth, and question wherever the discoveries might take us. We seek to retell the story of our beginnings.

A. Sutherland - AncientPages.com - The Wars of the Roses was a civil war in England that lasted from 1455-1487. This thirty-two-year military conflict was fought between the supporters of the House of Lancaster (Lancastrians) and the supporters of the House of York (Yorkists).

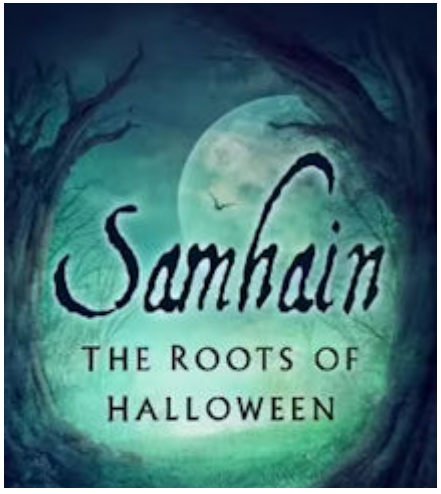
It was a struggle to claim the right to the English throne, and each side sincerely believed they had a rightful claim. The Lancastrians and the Yorkists were two of England's most influential great aristocratic families.

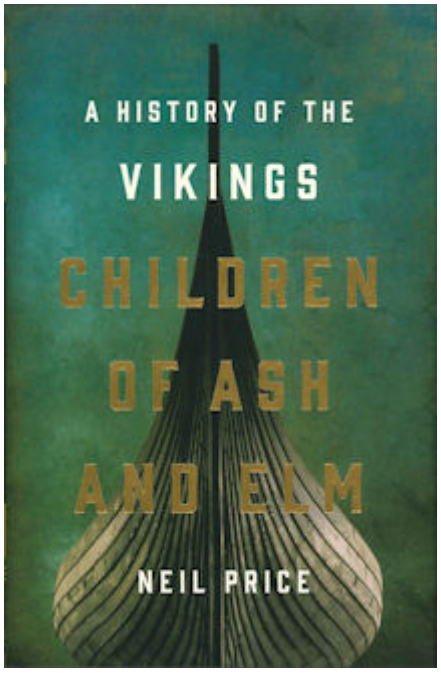
Another important figure in this conflict was an English nobleman, administrator, and military commander, Richard Neville, 16th Earl of Warwick (1428 – 1471). He was wealthy and powerful, with political connections beyond the country's borders.



Neville was initially on the Yorkist side but later switched to the Lancastrian side, and in fact, he was instrumental in the deposition of two kings.

The dispute between the two houses began with the overthrow of King Richard by Henry Bolingbroke, Duke of Lancaster, in 1399. Henry Bolingbroke (c. April 1367 – 20 March 1413), crowned Henry IV, was King of England from 1399 to 1413, but his rule was widely unpopular. Shortly, a revolt broke out in Wales, Cheshire, and Northumberland, and Henry IV managed to suppress the revolts with difficulty.

He died in 1413, and his successor was Henry V, a popular king and a strong leader who led England against France in the Hundred Years' War (1337 to 1453) and won many battles, giving the Lancastrians enough power to hold on to the throne. When Henry V died in 1422 from dysentery, his son, Henry VI, became his successor as King of England and France, but he had many difficulties in ruling the country. He had a mental illness inherited from his French grandfather, Charles VI.



Henry was an ineffective ruler, surrounded by some unpopular advisors such as Cardinal Beaufort, the Duke of Gloucester, and the Duke of Suffolk When Henry VI's life was about to end, the Yorkists were almost sure their representative would have a right of succession after him.

However, it was not that simple. The new King did not inherit the throne; instead, he was elected. Parliament played an essential role in this challenging political process. It had the enormous power to create a king.

"..Haughty, arrogant kings bowed submissively to its will. Henry could not make laws nor impose taxes without first summoning Parliament and obtaining his subjects' consent. But corrupting influences were at work, which was destined to cheat England out of her liberties for many a year." 1

The country's impoverishment to pay for the war and royal extravagances had awakened a troublesome spirit in the House of Commons. Cruelty to heretics also, and oppressive enactments were fought and defeated in this body. The Kikingclergy, and nobles, were drawing closer together and farther away from the people, and were devising ways of stifling their will..." wrote an American author and historian, Mary Platt Parmele, in her "A Short History of England, Ireland, and Scotland."

At the same time, according to the strict rules of hereditary succession, there were two others with claims superior to Henry's. The Duke of Lancaster, Henry's father (John of Gaunt), was only a younger son of Edward III. Richard Duke of York, his cousin, claimed a double descent from Duke Clarence and the Duke of York, both sons of Edward III.

It is also said that another immediate cause of the York revolt related to Queen Margaret Anjou, who unexpectedly revealed her male child. It had raised serious doubts about the origin of the righteous bed and, of course, seriously contributed to the beginning of the Wars of the Roses, a gloomy and very destructive period in the history of England, where most of the fighting took place, which resulted in significant loss of life and property.

the last and decisive battle military encounter is known as the Battle of Bosworth Field (or Battle of Bosworth).

Henry VII (1457 – 1509), an offshoot of the House of Lancaster), raised a Lancastrian army against Richard III, defeated the Yorkists, and killed Richard at the Battle of Bosworth Field in 1485.

After this battle, the throne of England finally fell to the representative of a strong family - Henry Tudor.

Henry VII was crowned King and married Edward IV's daughter, Princess Elizabeth of York - a move to end the very tiring and devastating period in the history of England - Wars of the Roses. He reunited the two royal houses, merging the rival symbols of the red and white roses into the new emblem of the red and white Tudor rose.

The House of Tudor ruled the Kingdom of England until 1603.

History Of Assassins: When Human Hunter-Killers Began Hunting Humans

READ LATER PRINT

For at least 200,000 years Homo sapiens were hunter-gatherer-fishers and at the end of the last Ice Age, about 10,000 years ago, they flipped from being the number one prey food on the planet to being the apex predator. One would expect that having dominated every animal on the planet, the global overlords would have evolved from their hyper-violent past, but this is not the case. Rather than working together as hunting teams trying to fell huge megafauna, since the dawn of 'civilization' about 3,000 years ago, history is replete with endless records of highly-trained factions of human hunter-killers.

Assassins, and gangs of them, have appeared throughout history in many formats from inspired political activists to gold-hungry, cold-hearted killers. Killing their targets for a host of reasons, but most having a financial benefit, most of history's renowned specialized killers had deep political affiliations and military allegiances. What they all had in common was the practice of recruiting young members and brainwashing them into the ways of the skilled-murderer. In remote hilltop forts, new recruits were taught the arts of deceit and misdirection so as to become professional manhunters, and in some cases, womanhunters.

Beware Of Crowds: The Sicarii Are On The Loose

The Sicarii were a splinter group of the Jewish Zealots who were active around 70 AD. The name Sicarii is the plural of the Latin ' Sicarius' (dagger man) and it was because of the actions of these Jewish freedom fighters (assassins) that the term later became associated with assassins and murderers. The Sicarii began their reign of terror in Jerusalem under the leadership of Menahem, the grandson of Judah, a former Jewish dissident. Unlike most other groups of assassins before them, the Jewish Sicarii were overtly motivated by religion and politics with the prime goal of driving the Roman invaders and their Jewish collaborators from the lands of Judea. Achievement of this goal meant training new recruits on how to conduct various guerrilla operations against Roman convoys and legions in Judea, which differed from all of the other provinces to the east of the Roman Empire in that it never submitted to Roman rule.

OUR MISSION

At Ancient Origins, we believe that one of the most important fields of knowledge we can pursue as human beings is our beginnings. And while some people may seem content with the story as it stands, our view is that there exist countless mysteries, scientific anomalies and surprising artifacts that have yet to be discovered and explained.

The goal of Ancient Origins is to highlight recent archaeological discoveries, peer-reviewed academic research and evidence, as well as offering alternative viewpoints and explanations of science, archaeology, mythology, religion and history around the globe.

By bringing together top experts and authors, this archaeology website explores lost civilizations, examines sacred writings, tours ancient places, investigates ancient discoveries and questions mysterious happenings. Our open community is dedicated to digging into the origins of our species on planet earth, and question wherever the discoveries might take us. We seek to retell the story of our beginnings.

East African Invasions in South America: Tracing Cultural Clues and Artifacts Left by Early Travelers

READ LATER | PRINT

Archaeologists have found many artifacts that suggest Blacks lived in Pre-Columbian America in locations including Tiahuanaco and Valdivia. Epigraphers and archaeologists have even found evidence that Axumites, Meroites, and Puntites may have voyaged to South America before Columbus.

There is also ample evidence that Sumerians were in South America, which they called Kuga-Ki. It was here that the Sumerians mined tin and other minerals. East Africans probably learned about Ecuador and Peru from the Sumerians. During the Arwe and Axumite empires, Semitic or Puntite speaking Ethiopians traveled to South America.

Evidence for Early Ethiopans in the Andean Region

Between 13,000 BC and 600 AD, Blacks from East Africa and Asia began settling in South America. Many African skulls have been found in Ecuador, in sections of Chile in Valdivia, and among the Ponuencho of Peru. These countries would have also been part of the Sumerian Kuga-Ki.

Ecuador has provided substantial archaeological evidence for the presence of Africoids in South America. One of the most significant finds was a magnificent stone head of a man wearing a circular earring on his right ear. This head is similar to a carving of Akhenaton. Dr. von Wuthenau identified this figure as representing the "negroid element" in preclassical Ecuador.

According to Lanning, "there was a possible movement of negritos from Ecuador into the Piura Valley, north of Chicama and Viru." He believes there is a relationship between this culture and the Valdivia site which was active from 1800 BC to 100 AD. Dr. Dixon said Valdivia was inhabited by Africoid people.

In Peru, large double decked boats are depicted on ceramic pots which are almost identical to the papyrus boats used in the Proto-Sahara and Punt. Water jars and other cargo are painted on the lower deck of the boats along with rows of people. An earthly representation of the Sun god Ra stood on the upper deck, the same as the Sun god of Meroe and Egypt, surrounded by bird men who handle the ropes and propel the ship through the water. The interesting thing about these pictures is that they are almost exact replicas of scenes depicted in Egyptian pyramids.

Depiction of a Moche reed boat. (Bibliodyssey)

There are other similarities between Ethiopia and Peru. Ethiopians used battle clubs in war and their doctors became skilled in trepanning - cranial surgery without killing the patient. This operation was unknown to Europeans until after Columbus discovered America, yet it was known to the Peruvians. Both groups also used false heads on mummies.

Peruvians and Ethiopians also used horizontal looms staked out on the ground along with the vertical-frame loom with two warp beams (Rowe, 1966). Von Hagen noted that “A form of backstring loom was used in Egypt, a horizontal loom appears in predynastic Egypt, and the one pictured on the tomb Khnemholep (at Beni Hasan) circa 1900 BC, is identical with those of the Andean and coastal Peruvians.”

An indigenous woman using a traditional loom. (Author provided)

Ethiopian explorers probably reached Peru and Ecuador by accident. Chinese records make it clear that Axumites made many long voyages across the Pacific and Indian Oceans. These sailors traveled mid-ocean, not near the shore. A group of Ethiopian merchants probably on a voyage to China, Sri Lanka, or Malayasia; or on a military campaign to put down a rebellion in one of their Indian Ocean colonies, may have been captured by the Equatorial Counter Current in their papyrus boats and carried to Peru-Ecuador. Since they were usually prepared for voyages up to five years long, these hypothetical voyagers would have possessed the supplies necessary to make the long trip.

The Axumites probably landed in sparsely populated areas in Peru- Ecuador. They would have met little resistance from the local Amerindian groups (who saw them as giants.) The Axumites' experience building underground dwellings made it possible for them to construct safe habitation complexes, and later step pyramids, to bury their elite. As in Meroe, Peruvian pyramids were made of bricks of sun dried clay mixed with straw - using the same formula as Egyptians and Ethiopians. Peruvian adobe was made in a rectangular mold, just like in Ethiopia.

Quichua people speak a language which is analogous to languages spoken in the Pacific and India. The Quichua Amerindians have an oral tradition which probably records the entrance of the Axumites in ships made of reeds or "rushes" that landed on the Pacific coast at Santa Elena, close to Puerto Viejo. An oral tradition recorded by Don Cieza de Leon, a Spainish soldier-priest in 1545 AD says:

> “These giants from the sea were so great in stature that from the knee down, they were as tall as a tall man. It was amazing to see how the hair hung from their great heads to their shoulders. Yet were they beardless. They ate [probably meant they fight] more than fifty ordinary men. There eyes were big as plates [como pequenos platos]. Their arms and legs were proportionately huge. Some were clad in skins of animals; others quite naked. No women came with them. Going inland they ravaged the country and finding no water, these builders in great stone set to and sank an immensely deep well in the living rock.... and today [in AD 1545] the water of this ancient well is so clear and cold and wholesome that it is a pleasure to drink it. This well made by the giants was lined with masonry, from top to bottom, and so well are these wells made that they will last for ages.”

- Did West Africans live in Four Corners Region of the United States from 12th Century?
- Did Mankind First Exit Africa 100,000 Years Ago?

Wilkins believes that these giants helped build Tiahuanaco. Commenting on the inhabitants of this ancient South American city he noted:

> "They were a reddish-skinned race, though among them, as remarkable statuary, dug up from ruins shows, were also black men, with prognathic features. One splendid piece of terra cotta depicts in beautiful colors a high priest of the sun, with remarkably Egyptian eyes and having on his fine, large forehead a mitre and the sign of evolution, called by Bolivian archaeologists, el simbolo escalonado (the stairway sign)."

Tiahuanaco. (Daniel Maciel/ CC BY 2.0)

These stories make it clear that the colonist-conquerors were taller than Amerinidians. They also detail how the newcomers built monuments out of solid rock. This architectural ability was a trademark of the Axumites. On the Mochica pottery these "giants" are depicted with black faces. At San Agustin, near the Colombian border, statues portray them with African features.

Mochica sculptures show people of marked racial variations: Some appear to be Africans, while others are American Indians. A well-known characteristic of the Andean people is the absence of heavy beards. Yet many Mochica sculptures show images of old men with long beards.

It is also interesting to note the Moche warriors and elite wore conical helmets like those of Meroitic elites - with a T-shaped ornament at the apex. Blacks are usually depicted wearing ornaments on their ears, lips, and nose as well.

East Africans and the Huari Culture

Some of the Ethiopians that landed in Peru made their way inland. By 500 or 600 AD, other Axumites settled at the Marcahuasi plateau, East of Lima in the Western Cordilleras and began the Huari culture. The Huari were mainly African males. They expanded throughout southern Peru and established outposts and invented a well-organized administrative system.

At the Marcahuasi plateau we find monumental sculptures on the cliffs. A Huari monument hewed out of solid rock has sculptured heads of Africans, an ibex, a lion, elephants, frogs, camels and the goddess Tauerat, exactly like monuments discovered in Ethiopia at Angiarro (Wollo).

It is interesting to note that the tribes found in the vicinity of Huari monuments are called Huanca or Huari. This is almost the same sound as Harari, a name for one of the Semitic speaking tribes of Ethiopia. The forefathers of the Huari are only known from legend as a bearded people. Burland believes that the large ceremonial center of Tiahuanaco may have been the religious center of the Huari empire. Statues of Africans have been found in abundance at this site.

Epigraphic Evidence of Axumites in South America

There is also epigraphic evidence that supports the influence of Semitic speaking Ethiopians in South America – an inscription at the town of Palpa, some 20 kms (12.43 miles) north east of Nazca, Peru. It is an ancient pattern of lines that can be read using the Ge’ez language of Ethiopia.

Palpa Mountain inscription. (Author Provided)

This inscription says:

> “Come down (into the earth) and spread this...Strain and pacify the water (in the area) Come and spread (within this region). Grace. Go out (among the land) and become strong”.

The Nascodex organization refined my decipherment of this inscription as follows:

> “Come, carve (dig) down into the earth, Pacify, control and increase the waters, Make them flow forth into the region, Gaining grace and favour, Go out among the people, become strong Leaders”.

There is also epigraphic evidence for Axumites in Cuenca, Ecuador. Father Carlo Crespi collected numerous inscribed artifacts that local people claimed came from underground hiding places. Among these artifacts are 1) a gold sheet with a picture of a pyramid and Ethiopian letters at the foot of the pyramid; 2) a stone tablet with Ethiopian writing placed below three animals; and another with a stone pyramid with an elephant and sun symbol at the top of the pyramid and Ethiopian characters placed within the pyramid. Elephants and lions are rarely seen in Egyptian art, but they are common in Meroitic and Axumite art. These tablets refer to various aspects of the life of a farmer-soldier (and traveler).

A gold sheet with a picture of a pyramid and Ethiopian letters at the foot of the pyramid. (Author provided)

The tablet (below) with the sun figure, which probably represents Zat-Baden or the Ethiopian sun-god, and an elephant, reference three things: a harp, beer/mead, and bread. These are associated with a man who is about to make a journey or go to work in the field in Tigrai.

The inscription on the stone tablet with a bull, an elephant, and an ibex probably refers to the warrior creed which may have existed among the Moche or Huari that once ruled this area. It uses pictograms to denote the role of the soldier.

Although people came to early South America from East Africa, Southeast Asia, and the Pacific, Axumites probably influenced the elaborate stone monuments in Peru and Ecuador and introduced certain types of looms, writing, and medical techniques. East Africans also probably played an important role in the rise of the Moche empire.

If the institution would get serious and honest with the genetic studies of the human bone fragments, we'd know a lot more about the races and ethnicities involved (to include hair and eye color), and the progression/timelines with respect to all the genetic mixing that certainly happened as a result of the migrations/invasions.

Nobody gets paid to tell the truth.

LAURELATHOME201 WROTE ON 23 SEPTEMBER, 2019 - 18:01

Pre-Columbus migrations to the Americas across both the Atlantic and Pacific are a no-brainer.

The elephant motif might originate with Mongols. When they conquered China they got access to the Chinese navy and used it to invade Japan. They had elephants on board because they were fascinated with elephants after a failed attempt to defeat a South Asian army mounted on elephants. History and legends indicate that Mongols were blown off course and wound up at the west coast of South America and became part of tribal legends shortly before Columbus. Spanish priests recorded the legends but then disappeared them.
Scandinavian explorer Thor Heyerdahl made successful trips to South America in replicas of two ancient boats. One was a round reed boat used by ancient Egyptians. The other is South Pacific islander and described in the book Kon Tiki. It's reasonable to think that Africans departed from both coats of Africa and island hopped to the Americas.

OUR MISSION

At Ancient Origins, we believe that one of the most important fields of knowledge we can pursue as human beings is our beginnings. And while some people may seem content with the story as it stands, our view is that there exist countless mysteries, scientific anomalies and surprising artifacts that have yet to be discovered and explained.

The goal of Ancient Origins is to highlight recent archaeological discoveries, peer-reviewed academic research and evidence, as well as offering alternative viewpoints and explanations of science, archaeology, mythology, religion and history around the globe.

We’re the only Pop Archaeology site combining scientific research with out-of-the-box perspectives.

By bringing together top experts and authors, this archaeology website explores lost civilizations, examines sacred writings, tours ancient places, investigates ancient discoveries and questions mysterious happenings. Our open community is dedicated to digging into

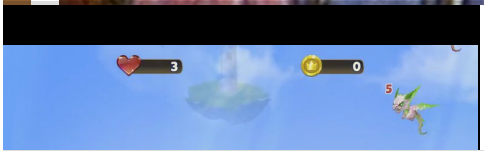
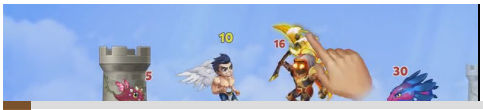
Why Is The Black Prince Still A Controversial Historical Figure?



AncientPages.com | August 15, 2019 | Ancient History Facts, Featured Stories, News

Conny Waters - AncientPages.com - Edward of Woodstock (1330-1376), who became known as the Black Prince was feared, loved, and hated.



As the eldest son and heir of England's King Edward III Plantagenet, he had a huge responsibility to fight against England's greatest enemy, France. The Black Prince was very successful on the battlefield and showed tremendous courage. He was also cunning and intelligent and did not hesitate to lure the enemy into a deadly trap if he had a chance to do so.

His battles are well-documented, but there is plenty of disagreement about his personality.

Why is the Black Prince after so many years still a controversial historical figure? Was he a truly evil or good man? Was he a greedy or generous person?

English and French historians present two completely different opinions of the Black Prince, whose tomb can be visited in the Canterbury Cathedral.

How Did The Black Prince Get His Name?

Edward of Woodstock's nickname is a subject historians fail to agree on. French historians argue that Edward of Woodstock's nickname can be traced to his dark character. He got the name Black Prince because his soul was black. He showed no mercy and he was heartless when he and his army plundered France.

The English explain the name in much simpler terms. They maintain the name Black Prince originates from the fact that Edward of Woodstock always wore black knight armor in battle.

By doing so, he was easily recognized among other knights dressed in shiny armor.

What Kind Of Person Was The Black Prince?

It would indeed be a surprise to learn the Black Prince's enemy praised him as a good-hearted person considering how many atrocities he committed in France. It's no wonder French historians and writers portray the Black Prince as a pure manifestation of evil.

According to contemporary authors, the Black Prince enjoyed conquering his enemies, as well as inflicting emotional and physical pain.

His plundering in France between 1355 and 1356 gave him a very bad reputation.

The French also accuse the Black Prince of being greedy beyond imagination. He left poor peasants and workers without any belongings and ordered the burning of downtowns and cities if inhabitants refused to give him all their possessions. He treated civilians in the most horrible and cruel manner. Chronicle writer jean le Bel said all men in the city of Caen had to witness how their mothers and sisters were murdered. The wife and daughters of each man had to suffer humiliation. As if this was not enough, the Black Prince also ordered the burning of their homes.

According to French historical records, the Black Prince executed 3,000 defenseless men, women, and children in the city of Limoges.

The storming of Limoges. Credit: Public Domain

The English records on the other hand provide the modern world with a much nicer picture of Edward of Woodstock. They explain the Black Prince was a true, generous gentleman who treated people fairly and opposed all kinds of abuses and exploitation.

It was also said that he was faithful to his wife and became furious when his knights mistreated prisoners of war.

Depending on whom you listen to, the English or the French, you'll learn about the good and bad personality of the Black Prince.

How the Black Prince was in real life is today almost impossible to determine. Ancient sources present conflicting information, are mixed up, and often filled with nonobjective personal opinions.

"Le Nègre ignore que ses ancêtres, qui se sont adaptés aux conditions matérielles de la vallée du Nil, sont les plus anciens guides de l'humanité dans la voie de la civilisation" Cheikh Anta Diop

Ziryab, le savant noir qui révolutionna l'Europe

Alors que les Africains et les Arabes dirigeaient l'Espagne, cet homme phénoménal y introduisit des habitudes qui changèrent l'Europe pour toujours. Le talent de ce génie multidisciplinaire, en fait comme vous allez le voir, un des hommes les plus influents de l'histoire médiévale.

Ziryab tenant son luth (auteur de l'illustration inconnu)

Abu al-Hassan 'Abu Ibn Nafi' est né en 5025 de l'ère africaine (789 après JC) en Irak actuel. On ne sait pas s'il était descendant d'Africains mis en esclavage par les Arabes ou alors des premiers habitants africains de la Mésopotamie. Beaucoup de falsificateurs essaient de soustraire cet illustre homme à l'héritage du monde noir, pourtant les sources sont claires concernant son apparence.

D'après les données de l'Université de Californie à Santa Barbara, la plus ancienne description documentée de Ziryab est celle du perse d'Espagne Isa al-Razi, fils de l'historien Ahmad al-Razi. Ahmad al-Razi, lui-même issu d'une prestigieuse famille d'historiens, naquit 30 ans après la mort de Ziryab et vécut à Cordoba, la ville du savant noir. Il fut donc en contact avec des contemporains de Ziryab. Isa al-Razi décrit Ziryab comme un esclave noir. Description reprise au 11e siècle par Ibn Hayyan et au 17e siècle par al-Maqqari. Enfin l'ouvrage de référence en histoire, l'Histoire générale de l'Afrique écrite par l'Unesco, dans son volume 3 en anglais et à la page 297, décrit Ziryab comme un Noir.

Abu al-Hassan montra très tôt un talent pour la musique, et en raison de sa peau extrêmement noire, de sa voix douce et chantante, et de ses manières hautement distinguées, il hérita du pseudonyme de Ziryab, c'est-à-dire oiseau noir. Ziryab fut à Bagdad l'élève ou l'esclave du musicien renommé Ibrahim al-Mawsili. Assez vite, il devint plus talentueux que son maître, et à la demande du calife Harun al-Rashid qui voulait entendre quelque chose de nouveau, Mawsili présenta son apprenti au souverain.

Ziryab, son luth entre les bras, chanta si bien qu'al-Rashid, bouleversé, dit qu'il devrait punir tous ceux qui l'avaient empêché jusque-là de connaître cet homme. Jaloux et sentant sa gloire lui échapper, Mawsili menaça Ziryab de tous les maux s'il ne quittait pas le pays.

L'oiseau noir parti donc pour l'exil avec sa famille, le tout financé par Mawsili. Il s'installa à Kairouan en Tunisie actuelle où il enrichi sa musique, et se fit vite connaître pour son talent. A cette époque, les Noirs berbères du Maghreb – dits Maures ou Sarrasins – et les Arabes avaient conquis l'Espagne et le Portugal depuis près d'un siècle. La péninsule ibérique était sous le règne de la dynastie arabe et noire des Umayyades, qui précéda celles des Noirs almoravides puis des Noirs almohades.

La réputation de Ziryab arriva jusqu'aux oreilles du roi Umayyade al-Hakam, qui le fit venir à Cordoba, capitale de l'Espagne maure. A son arrivée en 5058, Ziryab apprit la mort du Sultan mais le fils de ce dernier, le nouveau roi Abd-al Rahman II, grand amoureux des sciences et des arts, confirma l'invitation du musicien de Bagdad. Il l'installa avec sa famille dans une luxueuse demeure, avec un salaire confortable et lui donna carte blanche pour exprimer son génie.

La musique

Ziryab créa la première école de musique de Cordoba, et fut salué pour ses méthodes d'enseignement originales. Un bout de bois entre les dents ou une ceinture autour du ventre lui permettait de faire sortir des notes vocales difficiles chez ses élèves. Il ajouta une corde aux 4 du luth classique et révolutionna l'instrument.

Doté d'une mémoire phénoménale, il connaissait près de 1000 chansons par cœur. Il devint le musicien attitré d'Abd al-Rahman II. Il est considéré comme le père de la musique de l'Andalousie et un des pères de la musique du monde arabe.

La mode et l'hygiène

Ziryab a grandement influencé la mode et la cosmétique en Europe

Avant l'arrivée de Ziryab, les Européens changeaient leurs garde-robes deux fois par an. L'oiseau noir leur conseilla d'ajouter deux collections, pour coller aux 4 saisons.

Ziryab propagea également l'usage de tissus plus colorés et la lessive avec du sel qui rendait les vêtements plus propres. Les femmes à cette époque avaient l'habitude de porter les cheveux longs juste divisés par une raie au milieu. Ziryab introduisit nombre de nouvelles coiffures parmi lesquels la frange, qui fut fureur.

Il inventa ou tout du moins popularisa l'usage du dentifrice, et ajouta à sa fonctionnalité la notion de goût agréable qu'on lui connait jusqu'à nos jours. Il créa une école de cosmétologie et popularisa la crème épilatoire et les soins des sourcils chez les femmes, le rasage chez les hommes.

Il créa et popularisa des parfums et des déodorants, poussa les habitants à prendre deux bains par jour. Il se rendit maître de la mode en Europe. La moindre de ses recommandations et innovations était appliquée aussitôt. Il devint une véritable célébrité.

La cuisine et l'art culinaire

Ziryab inventa de nouveaux plats dont des desserts. Certains sont jusqu'à nos jours consommés en Espagne et en Algérie. Botaniste, il introduisit et mis à la mode les asperges. Il fit remplacer la lourde vaisselle en or et en argent par des services en crystal. Mais surtout, il révolutionna la façon de servir les repas.

Avant son arrivée, le repas était servi en un bloc dans une même assiette. Ziryab est l'homme qui scinda le repas en trois phases : entrées-plat de résistante-dessert. Le fameux art de la table qui fait la fierté voir l'arrogance des Européens aujourd'hui trouve donc son origine en un homme noir.

Ziryab est à l'origine de l'art de la table en Europe avec la division du repas en entrée-plat de résistance-dessert

Les sciences exactes et la politique

Ziryab était également érudit dans les domaines de la géographie, de l'astronomie et touchait un peu à toutes les sciences exactes. Toute l'aristocratie se bousculait pour discuter avec lui. Il fit venir des médecins juifs d'Afrique du nord et des astrologues indiens pour enrichir l'Espagne maure. Ce sont ces Indiens qui populariseront le jeu d'échecs en Europe.

L'oiseau noir était un conseiller de premier ordre et ami du Sultan, et était invité à donner son avis sur les questions politiques. L'homme devint si grand qu'Abd al-Rahman II se déplaça un jour pour lui rendre visite, à son retour de voyage. Ziryab était l'homme avec qui il fallait être vu. Le génie noir mourût à 68 ans, laissant ses 8 fils et ses 2 filles continuer valablement son héritage.

Мадонна изменилась до неузнаваемости: Звезда перестала публиковать лицо без фильтров и фотошопа

63-летняя американская певица Мадонна продолжает удивлять фанатов

Лина Петрунькина (https://www.depo.ua/ukr/author/l.petrynkina)
4 листопада 2021, 13:53

Звезда не выходит в сеть без специальных омолаживающих фильтров и имеет в штате нескольких фотошоперов, передает Depo.ua.

Если заглянуть в Instagram Мадонны, то можно изумиться: звезда больше не похожа на себя, а на 30-летнюю версию какой-то блондинки. Сначала Мэдж прибегла к нескольким пластическим операциям, которые полностью изменили ее внешность. Однако, судя по всему, результат не удовлетворил артистку, поэтому она стала постоянно цеплять на лицо специальные маски и фильтры. Также не обходится и без фотошопа.

Для сравнения: на этих видео Мадонну можно увидеть с минимумом фотошопа:

Your Africa Nation
Muammar Gaddafi loved Barrack Obama like a son.

When Obama became the president of the United States , Gaddafi was one of the first African leaders who congratulated him and praised him.

Gaddafi probably believed his prophecy has come to pass, because he wrote in his Green Book published in 1975 that, “Black people will rule the world”.

Gaddafi also offered his support to Blacks in America in 1985, he assured them he will support them to have their own independent state and economy. When Minister Louis Farrakhan met Gaddafi in the 1980s, he offered his financial assistance to help sustain some Black communities economically in America, Gaddafi gave out about $5 million dollars with 0% interest to help support some Black people in America.

Gaddafi stood by South Africans during their fight against Apartheid regime in South Africa —he supported them militarily, morally and financially! He supported every single Black liberation movements in Africa and in the Diaspora!

Muammar Gaddafi upholds the legacy of the father of Pan-Africanism and the first Prime Minister of Ghana , Dr. Kwame Nkrumah's dream of a United States Of Africa. Gaddafi single-handedly funded African Union in order protect Africa from the influences of the colonialists.

Gaddafi helped put up Africa's first telecommunication satellite to enable Africans have easy access to the internet and to avoid paying over $500 million dollars to Europe annually!

Gaddafi enjoyed comradeship with many Black leaders like Robert Mugabe of Zimbabwe , Nelson Mandela of South Africa , Thomas Sankara of Burkina Faso , etc —in the Diaspora, he was a good friend of legendary boxer Muhammed Ali, he adored Malcolm X and Martin Luther King Jr etc

*Gaddafi accused the United Nations during 2009 summit, for not doing proper investigation nor prosecuting those who were involved in the assassination of Martin Luther King Jr.

During the United Nations (UN) Summit in 2009, Gaddafi once again formerly congratulated Obama and praised him and even called him son.

We true Libyans can not measure nor count the blessings, love and opportunities Gaddafi showered on us, we didn't ki.lled him, we loved him and still do —the western media told damnable lies about Gaddafi and Libya in 2011.

Our voices were not heard, we were not given the chance to tell our own stories, those who kil.led brother leader controls the media, and nowadays he who controls the media controls the world. Yes Gaddafi wasn't perfect, but he was not a bad person as the western rogue dictators portrayed him!

There was no Arabs, Blacks or White in G.addafi's L.ibya, we all lived together as one, even slavery was punishable by de.ath in Libya. Those who are trading captured African migrants in open slave markets today are not Libyans, they are illegal settlers and terrorists mercenaries whom the NA..TO brought into Libya to toppled Gaddafi's regime! They want to claim Libya for themselves!

Gaddafi personally loved Obama, perhaps due to his friendship and love for revolutionary African leaders whom he shared comradeship with, and due to the fact that other POTUS considered Gaddafi an enemy of the United States, he believed Obama would be different since he is Black. Little did brother leader knew Obama would team up with NATO to destroy Libya and get him ki.lled.

“I would like to seize this opportunity to congratulate our son, Obama, because this is the first time that he is attending the UN General Assembly in this capacity as the president of the United States , and we greet him because he also represents the hosting country of this gathering”. Gaddafi to Obama in 2009.

But to Obama, Hillary Clinton and the western cabals, including their ostensible media outlets... Gaddafi was a wicked horrible dictator and mad dog of the desert. These people are the real dictators, hypocrites and the biggest liars on the planet!

If Gaddafi was the problem as the western dictators claimed, why did Libya crumbled and became a failed state after they as.sassinated Gaddafi?

Now Libya's gold reserves are gone, billions of dollars is missing in Libya's foreign reserves and the same people who invaded Libya are now scrambling for Libyan oil unfortunate reactions to which the revolt against those traditions may lead. After a study of Prof. Malinowski's work, we may indeed be inclined to think Mr. Ellis's statement that " Sex-taboos weigh at least as much on the civilised as on the savage mind " an under-statement.

West African Secret Societies : their Organisations, Officials and Teaching. By Capt. F. W. Butt-Thompson. Pp. 320 + 12 plates. (London : H. F. and G. Witherby, 1929.) 21*s*. net.

THE West African secret societies, according to Capt. F. W. Butt-Thompson, fall into three groups : the mystic and religious, the democratic and patriotic, and the subversive and criminal ; some are ancient pagan institutions, others are Mohammedan, there is a group of Mohammedan-pagan societies, and there are more modern ones. The various aspects and activities of the societies, such as organisation, officials, initiation, religious teaching, etc., are given in appropriate chapters with reference to particular societies ; thus the reader can appreciate what factors are common to most of them, and so is enabled to gain a bird's-eye view, as it were, of their general functioning. Finally, there is a very brief account of each society.

This is the first systematic book on the subject, and the author is to be commended for the considerable amount of information here summarised. Judging from the bibliography, he has searched diligently through the literature which has any bearing on his subject, and he appears to have got into friendly contact with many Africans in the different countries of which he treats, especially in Sierra Leone, but unfortunately there is no indication concerning what is due to original observation and what is taken from published sources, so there is no means of gauging the reliability of the statements here made.

It is a book that tells in brief many things about which we should like to know more, and though Capt. Butt-Thompson records such information as may be obtained by a white man concerning the old social discipline and morality, there must be much more of which probably only an African can enlighten us. As in many primitive communities, some of the ethical teaching, such as that given on pp. 208-9, is good enough for any people to practise, however advanced their scale of life ; for example, " Respect and obey your father and mother ". " Be just to your enemy ; rescue him when he is in danger, and never go out of your way to get him into trouble." " Stealing is undignified ; if you covet a thing, ask for it ; if it is refused, go without it." A people that preaches these maxims cannot lightly be dismissed as ' heathen ', nor can their secret societies always be branded as ' wicked '. The author makes us wish that we could get into real and close touch with the teachers of these doctrines, and work out with them a better and a fuller way of combining their knowledge and aspirations with our own for the benefit and advance of the African. The Private Life of Tutankhamen : Love, Religion and Politics at the Court of an Egyptian King. By G. R. Tabouis. Translated by M. R. Dobie. Pp. xxiii + 322 + 16 plates. (London : George Routledge and Sons, Ltd., 1929.) 15*s*. net.

To attempt to recreate the atmosphere and reconstruct the conditions of a whole period of history so remote from our own times as the XVIIIth dynasty of ancient Egypt, requires considerable courage. It is a task to which the genius of the French language is perhaps more readily adaptable than our own. Certainly in one or two places this translation of Mlle. Tabouis' book on Tutankhamen carries less conviction than it would in the original. On the whole, however, it is a sound and informative piece of work such as should appeal strongly to the general public. The period with which she deals is one of the relatively few epochs in Egyptian history possessing an individuality and a character comprehensible by a reader who is not already acquainted with the phases of development of Egyptian culture in some detail.

An account of Akhenaton and his religious and social reforms necessarily occupies a prominent place in the book, which is thus given a certain dramatic unity, so much so that, instead of a life of Tutankhamen, it might well be regarded as the story of the rise and decay of the materialised ideal of a political and religious dreamer. M. Theodore Reinach contributes a preface, which is illuminating in the way it sets out in a few paragraphs the distinctive characteristics of Egyptian political development, which play so large a part in the history of Akhenaton's reforms, and also in giving the historical perspective necessary to appreciate the place of the XVIIIth Dynasty in Egyptian history.

The Life of Space. By Maurice Maeterlinck. Translated by Bernard Miall. Pp. 171. (London : George Allen and Unwin, Ltd., 1928.) 6*s*. net.

SINCE the publication of work on the theory of relativity during the War made this subject one of popular interest, there have been many attempts to interpret the significance of the theory in its relation to everyday life. The problem of the fourth dimension is one which occasionally is transformed from the symbolical language of mathematics to the imaginative fancy of popular writing. It is therefore with added interest that one turns to a book of this description by Maurice Maeterlinck. The work is divided into five sections, but the first one, namely, that of " The Fourth Dimension ", is the longest and gives various references to writers who, like Hinton and Ouspensky, have devoted considerable thought to the implications of the fourth dimension. Maeterlinck then deals with " The Cultivation of Islam and Christianity were invented. Remember now, these two religions aren't the oldest religions in the world. There is date for when they were invented. But there is no date for when spirituality came into existence. Think about it.

Abubakari II Mansa (African king who Arrived America before Columbus)

Abubakari II, Mansa (King) of the Mali Empire in the 14th century, led Malian sailors to the America(s), specifically present-day Brazil, almost 200 years before Columbus arrived. He ruled what was arguably the richest and largest empire on earth, covering nearly all West Africa.

Abubakari wanted to find out whether the Atlantic Ocean- like the great River Niger that swept through the Mali Empire had another bank, he had travelled extensively throughout and outside the African continent. Already owing most of the continent, His predecessor and Uncle Soundjata Keita, had already founded the Mali empire and conquered a good stretch of the Sahara desert and a great forest along the West African coast.

African-Guyanese historian Ivan Van Sertima, writing on the testimony of Emperor Kanku Musa recorded by the Arab Ibn Amir Hajib and transcribed by Al Omari in the 14th century in Egypt during the pilgrimage of Musa Explained:

"" lured by exploration, Abubakari II called engineers from the lake Chad who were known to build ships just like their Egyptians (kemetic) ancestors and to studied every ship on the Rivers Djoliba (Niger) and Senegal to help him launch a massive fleet on the Aethopian (Atlantic) Ocean. He also hired a large and diverse crews, sailors, traders, builders, artist warriors and learned men and he supplied them with large rations lasting two years. The fleet went across the western ocean relying on the unique system of drum communication".

Abubakari II handed his throne to his brother, Kankou Moussa, and set off on an expedition into the unknown in 1311.
“The emperor gave up all power and gold to pursue knowledge and discovery,”
His brother, Kankou Moussa (Mansa Musa) would become the richest man in all of history.

On Abubakari II’s arrival in Brazil...
"He decides that he will journey across the ocean to rule this new land he called "Boure Bambouk", after the riches goldfields of the Mali Empire. The third year in the fledgling colony of Boure Bambouk, the first under the direction of Abubakari II, sees its highs and lows. Abubakari establishes the first diplomatic contacts with the curious Tupi tribes of the region, encouraging trade with them.

Through this trade, the colonists of Boure Bambouk are first acquainted with New World crops, including corn, beans, peanuts, tobacco, cotton, and tropical fruits. Such agricultural commodities will allow the colony to become self-sustaining. Likewise, Old World livestock, such as cattle, sheep, and guinea fowl, are first introduced to the Tupi, as are cereal grains like rice, millet, and sorghum.

In 1314, Abubakari sends a boat back to Mali to petition his brother for more support. Mansa Musa is impressed by the new crops presented to him, and garners more settlers and aid to send to Boure Bambouk. Thus begins a back-and-forth exchange of Bamboukian goods in return for Malian assistance. Agriculture of corn, beans, peanuts, peppers, and cotton will set off a population explosion in Mali, that will provide future settlers from across the sea."

Beyond Columbus, evidence of African contributions to American civilization includes "importing the art of pyramid building, political systems and religious practices as well as mathematics, writing and a sophisticated calendar".

Van Sertima cites the Aztec divinity Quetzalcoatl who is sometimes represented in Mexico as a Black man with a beard, dressed in white, who arrived in 6 cycles after the last man who came from the foreign lands.

Others also say the presence of stones heads with 'African features' of the ancient Olmec Civilization in South America, prior to the Aztecs and Mayans, is even more proof.

Mant mounting evidence suggest that African presence in the Americas before Columbus, it may be fair to say that Africa's relationship with the Americas did not start with slavery. But with sailors, explorers and kings.

A Day In The Life Of A Medieval Executioner In Their 16th-Century

Heyday

Rob Chirico

Updated December 23, 2020 • 475.4k views • 9 items

The daily life of a medieval executioner was not easy. They did more than simply chop off heads and break prisoners on the wheel. Trying to uphold justice and set an example for their community was only one part of an executioner's duties; they also served as medical professionals and sometimes as spiritual guides, helping the condemned accept their fate and beg forgiveness before God. Occasionally, other villagers ostracized executioners for having a grim job, and yet, as they say, “It’s a job and somebody has to do it.”

But what was it like for these people to wake up in the morning and begin a day possibly fraught with hate, boredom, or extreme danger? What devices for executions did they use back in the Middle Ages? And what about the psychology of an executioner? Fortunately, history has handed down the detailed story of Master Franz Schmidt, an executioner in 16th-century Nuremberg.

The following account comes from Schmidt's diaries, and gives a strange and rare glimpse into the daily life and practices of a medieval executioner.

Some Days There Might Be Multiple Executions, But Today There Is Just One

The stereotypical image of a 16th-century executioner is of a burly, bare-chested fellow in a black hood, wielding a massive axe. This mask may send shivers down the spines of kids today, but the town executioner was likely proud of his well-paying job.

For other executioners across Europe, sometimes they had several victims to deal with in the same day. If you lived in the time of Henry VIII, you hardly had time for a break - there are estimates of as many as 72,000 executions during Henry's reign.

You would have had your day cut out for you, so to speak. But this time, your task is different. Today, on August 13, 1577, you have but one execution before you. You will not behead bands of pirates or break the bones of your victims on the wheel. Your charge is a man named Hans Vogel, and your duty: Send this repentant sinner off to the promise of salvation.

Executioners Often Inherited Their Job

You recently arrived in Nuremberg from Bamberg, your birthplace. This will be your first execution in your new home. Vogel's crime was burning an enemy to death in a stable, and for this you must do your job. You think back to how you came to your profession: "Like father like son," they say. But your father's profession was more by default than by design.

The vicious Bavarian magistrate Albrecht II wanted three men hanged. Without an executioner at hand, he picked your father Heinrich out from the crowd and forced him to perform the execution or face a hanging himself. What's a father to do?

Once your father did it, however, nobody wanted to have anything to do with him. As was the tradition for the son of an executioner, you took up the same occupation. You were 18 when you became executioner under your father's supervision in 1573, and since then, you have performed 361 executions and 345 minor punishments - floggings, as well as ear or finger amputations.

You've executed criminals by rope, sword, the breaking wheel, burning, and drowning. And yet, despite the dishonorable nature of his profession - according to others, anyway - your endearing name: Meister Franz. You're a respected member of the community for your piety. But let us return to according to others, anyway - your endearing name: Meister Franz. You're a respected member of the community for your piety. But let us return to Vogel and August 1577.

Executioners And Prisoners Often Became Acquainted

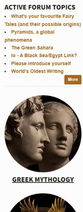
As is customary with prisoners, you've gotten to know Vogel - after all, you are personally sending him off to eternity. If he had serious wounds or were otherwise ill, you would have nursed him back to health, fulfilling the duties of your secondary profession as a medical consultant.

You might have also requested the execution's delay so he could face a proper death with his health intact. You must have thought it fitting “vogel” meant bird, and if he were truly repentant, he would have assuredly ascended to heaven.



It was not uncommon for prisoners like Vogel to receive visitors, such as family members or the relatives of the victim seeking reconciliation. You knew deep down: Forgiveness is divine, and you must've felt joyful when one condemned killer accepted some oranges and gingerbread from his victim’s widow. You saw it as a sign that she had wholeheartedly forgiven him.

You also might contemplate your role as someone who metes out justice in the name of society and - above all - God. It is your professional and sacred duty to serve as an agent who balances divine and earthly authority.

MAP OF THE LOANGO COAST

The term Loango coast describes a historically significant area of West Central Africa extending from Cape Lopez or Cape Catherine in Gabon to Luanda in Angola (see map). Within this region, Loango has been the name of a kingdom, a province, and a port. Once linked to the powerful Kongo Kingdom, the Loango Kingdom was dominated by the Vili, a Kongo peoples who migrated to the coastal region during the 1300s. Loango became an independent state probably in the late 1300s or early 1400s. With two other Kongo-related kingdoms, Kakongo and Ngoyo (present day Cabinda), it became one of the most important trading states north of the Congo River.

A Vampire in New Orleans? The Mysterious Case of Jacque and the Comte de St. Germain

READ LATER PRINT

If vampires existed in our modern age, it would be easy to imagine them in New Orleans, creeping from the shadows of the crypts in the St. Louis Cemetery or prowling for victims in the unlit alleys of the French Quarter. In the Crescent City, beauty and darkness go hand in hand and history steps forward to make itself known in the present day. Ancient legends of these immortal creatures made their way to America along with immigrants and adapted to their new land. One of New Orleans's most enduring vampiric legends has its roots in old European folklore.

According to the stories, sometime in the early 1900s a mysterious man arrived in New Orleans under the name Jacque St. Germain. Handsome, elegant, wealthy, entertaining, extravagant, mysterious, and a bit curious, his reputation preceded him, and he was soon a hit in New Orleans society.

The Enigmatic Comte Saint Germain. (Palabras en Libertad)

The Eccentric Jacque St. Germain

The eccentric Jacque St. Germain is said to have taken residence at the home located at 1039 Royal Street. St. Germain was apparently a cavalier and quite the lady's man, frequently seen with a beautiful woman on his arm while strolling through the French Quarter, or clubbing in elegant locales late into the night. He delighted in throwing elaborate dinner parties for the city's socialites. His parties were highly anticipated due to their lavish cuisine, fine wine, and entertainment. Most relished, however, was his own conversation. St. Germain fascinated his guests with stories of France, Italy, Africa, and even Egypt.

Ursulines Ave & Royal St., New Orleans. (The PJV)

Visitors were delighted and amused by his eloquent grasp of the English language. They were a bit confused, however, when he spoke of events hundreds of years in the past in such precise detail as though he himself had participated. Many guests placed little value in the truth of his tales, simply embracing them for the entertainment value during their visits to his home.

Not long after his arrival to New Orleans, St. Germain claimed he was a direct descendant of the Comte de St. Germain , a close friend and servant to King Louis the XV in the 18th century. His claim aroused skepticism, but his resemblance to the Comte was uncanny. Eagle-eyed guests noted that portraits never depicted the Comte as older than forty, the same age that Jacque St. Germain had appeared since he'd arrived in New Orleans.

Rumors started to spread in jest that Jacque St. Germain may in fact be the very celebrated Comte St. Germain himself, somehow rendered immortal and ageless. Jacque seemed to enjoy the mystery he had created around his persona, and neither confirmed nor denied it.

An image said to represent the Comte de St. Germain. (The PJV)

Although St. Germain's catered parties were highly celebrated, the host was said to have relished in his guest's satisfaction of the offered feasts without partaking himself, often standing apart from the table drinking from a lavish chalice, presumably filled with wine. During dinner he offered fantastical recollections of his adventures for his guests' enjoyment. The very strange habit of not partaking in meals at his own soirees, coupled with his remarkable resemblance to the Comte St. Germain, had some in the city suggesting in good fun that perhaps the mysterious man was in fact a vampire.

A Sinister Turn of Events

These rumors took a sinister turn several months after St. Germain's arrival to New Orleans, when the police were called to St. Germain's home to investigate the circumstances leading to a woman who had seemingly fallen from his gallery, a full story above.

His guest, a woman who was rumored to have been a prostitute, had in fact leapt from his balcony, rather than fallen, as bystanders had originally surmised. While she survived the fall, she was terrified. People on the street surrounded her and tended to her needs while help was rounded.

Hysterical, the woman ranted that she had jumped to escape St. Germain, who had bitten her neck. She screamed and sobbed out her story, claiming she was only able to escape when her assailant was briefly distracted by a rather loud knocking on his door.

Representation of a vampire who has bitten someone. (CC0)

The woman was taken to the hospital as soon as possible, and the police, suspecting that she had become delusional, told the very well-known, affluent, and respected St. Germain not to bother coming in for questioning at this late hour, but rather to please visit the police station in the morning to go over the accounts of the evening. The police were confident that there was a reasonable explanation for what had transpired.

The next morning, St. Germain never appeared at the police station. In fact, to everyone's chagrin, he had completely vanished overnight, leaving the majority of his belongings behind.

- Jure Grando and The First Documented Case of Vampirism in Europe
- The Immortal Count of Saint Germaine: Ascended Master of Ancient Wisdom

Legend suggests that upon breaking into his house, the police were cautious and in great anticipation of what they might encounter. On the second floor of the house they discovered a series of open but corked wine bottles. Upon closer investigation, they discovered the large collection of bottles were filled with a terrifying mixture of wine along with large quantities of human blood.

Jacque St. Germain was never seen again. He disappeared just as mysteriously as he had arrived. As one can only imagine, his contemporaries were shocked at this scandal, feeling both betrayed and fooled, and probably a little disappointed that the fun had come to an end.

Jacque St. Germain or the Comte de St. Germain?

Questions remained unanswered and this is where the legend of Jacque St. Germain as a vampire began to flourish. Had “the” Comte St. Germain of the 1700s made his way to America?

20th-century New Orleans socialites noted Jacque St. Germain’s resemblance to 18th century nobleman the Comte de St. Germain and the similarities between the two don’t end there. The stories of both St. Germains closely parallel each other, although the elder has a great deal more written material to sink your teeth into. So much mystery, speculation, and silliness exist in writings around the Comte’s persona that at times, one could almost conclude him a fictional character - but for the fact that many affluent leaders and prominent personalities of the time make note of his existence.

Count of Saint Germain. (Public Domain)

A letter from Horace Walpole, the 4th Earl of Oxford, to his friend Horace Mann provides the first unchallenged reference of St. Germain:

> "An odd man, who goes by the name of Comte St. Germain. He had been here these two years, and will not tell who he is, or whence, but professes that he does not go by his right name. He sings, plays on the violin wonderfully, composes, is mad, and not very sensible. He is called an Italian, a Spaniard, a Pole; a somebody that married a great fortune in Mexico, and ran away with her jewels to Constantinople, a priest, a fiddler, a vast nobleman. The Prince of Wales has had unsatiated curiosity about him, but in vain."

With no official birth records available, the true origins of the Comte St. Germain are a matter of some disagreement among historians. Prominent 19th-century Theosophist (a branch of occultism) Isabel Cooper-Oakly alludes in her book The Comte de St. Germain, the Secret of Kings , that he was most likely born at Lentmeritz in Bohemia at the end of the 17th century, and is said to have been the youngest son of Prince Franz-Leopold Ragoczy, of Transylvania and the Princess Charlotte Amalia of Hesse-Wahnfried. Because of the tumultuous political environment at the time, it is said that as an infant he was placed under the care of the last Medici family, Gian Gastone, which many have speculated may have contributed to his very rich education.

Since that publication, many later writers have repeated his beginnings as a Ragoczy as fact. However, in the very well-researched work The Comte De Saint Germain, Last Scion of the House of Rakoczy , author Jean Overton Fuller confirms that it is only speculation.

Portrait of Francis II Rákóczi (painted by Ádám Mányoki). (Public Domain) Some scholars believe the Comte de St. Germain was part of the 'House of Ragoczy'.

More Strange Stories of the Comte de St. Germain

St. Germain's refusal to give his true name, except to the King of France, Louis the XV, seems to indicate that he was in fact protecting some house of royalty. While it was common to use many titles in that day and age, it was highly unusual and suspect to not give up one's true identity when asked by a figure of authority. However, the acceptance of his presence so close to the king also indicates that the king was satisfied with his explanation of his origins.

Very much like Jacque St. Germain in New Orleans, the Comte St. Germain spun fantastical tales, purportedly claimed to have had conversations with Cleopatra and The Queen of Sheba, and professed to have been present during remarkable historical milestones, many of which took place over 500 years prior.

Comte St. Germain, a fictional character in the series Outlander loosely based off the historical figure. (CC BY SA)

Cooper-Oakly explains that some of the historical confusion surrounding The Comte's claims stems from his tremendous use of a variety of titles, as was customary at the time, a custom that was tolerated in French Society to present that one was not simply a commoner, but rather came from some service to the King.

- The 10 Most Expensive Antiques Ever Sold at Auction
- People Practiced Anti-Vampire Rituals in Bulgaria Until Three Decades Ago

The Comte de Saint Germain is said to have been an aristocrat with no profession. However, he certainly must have profited from his association with King Louis XV of France, as well as his diplomatic involvement with other political leaders. In fact, it was his ability to produce funds in abundance, whenever necessary, that had him under suspicion of being a spy.

King Louis XV of France, trusted St, Germain completely. Painting by Maurice Quentin de La Tour (1748). (Public Domain)

Stories also say the Comte de St. Germain was well accomplished in a vast variety of areas. He was ambidextrous, a great musician, a linguist, and a noted alchemist. There are countless tales of him precipitating diamonds out of thin air, or changing worthless stones into precious jewels, manipulating metal into gold, fine tuning imperfect diamonds into fused masterpieces, and creating an elixir of life, which many in his circles at the time felt must have been responsible for his own youthful appearance and health.

Perhaps there is only one St. Germain and he has lived across centuries, ageless, with no need for nourishment but the curious mix of wine and human blood discovered in his rapidly abandoned house in New Orleans.

Comte de Saint-Germain & Richard Chanfray, the main who claimed to be the Count in the 1970s. (The PJV)

Histoire de la Martinique

L'histoire de la Martinique est relativement récente en raison de la rupture coloniale et du recouvrement des données archéologiques après l'arrivée des Européens l'île prendra le nom de « Martinique » évolution de « Madiana » employé originellement par les indiens Caraïbes[1].

L'île est habitée de façon intermittente par différents peuples amérindiens jusqu'à leur quasi-extermination par les occidentaux à la suite de l'installation des Français en 1635. À partir des années 1670, la déportation massive d'esclaves noirs africains bouleverse une nouvelle fois la composition de la population de l'île. L'histoire de la Martinique est marquée par les guerres d'influence entre empires coloniaux européens, l'évolution des activités agricoles, les catastrophes naturelles et le choix singulier de la décolonisation par assimilation à la République française.

Les premiers peuplements de la Martinique

On(qui?) [réf. nécessaire] pense que les petites Antilles ont connu la présence de l'homme entre −10 000 et −5 000 mais il n'en existe à ce jour aucune trace. Les plus anciennes traces d'êtres humains des petites Antilles se trouvent sur le site de Norman Estate à Saint-Martin et sont datées d'entre −2 400 et −1 900 av. J.-C. (voir Amérindiens des Antilles). Les premières traces des Amérindiens à la Martinique ont été archéologiquement attestées du I^{er} siècle.

Ces premiers habitants viennent d'Amazonie et sont de culture saladoïde, du nom du site éponyme vénézuélien de Saladero. Ils sont généralement qualifiés d'arawaks bien que ce terme imprécis désigne plus largement une famille linguistique à laquelle se rattachent de nombreuses populations amérindiennes d'Amazonie dont les populations Kali'na ou Caraïbe.

Cette population produisant des céramiques extrêmement décorées a occupé surtout les contreforts de la Montagne Pelée. Ils pratiquaient l'agriculture, la pêche et la cueillette. Le site archéologique de Vivé, sur la commune du Lorrain, est caractéristique de cette première occupation de l'île. Ce site d'habitat sur le bord de mer a fait l'objet de fouilles entre 1996 et 2001. Il est également au cœur d'un projet de découverte et de recherche porté par la Communauté des communes du Nord de Martinique[2].

Le niveau d'occupation saladoïde est scellé par une couche éruptive de la Pelée datée du IIIe siècle de l'ère chrétienne. La campagne de 1999 a fait apparaître une couche d'abandon en place recouverte par la cendre d'une éruption du volcan.

Éruption précolombienne de la montagne Pelée

Le peuplement de la Martinique est marquée par une rupture liée à l'éruption de la montagne Pelée en 295 qui aurait décimé ou tout du moins forcé à l'exil les populations de l'île.

Les populations arawaks reviennent aux alentours de l'an 400 et ce serait vers 600 que les populations dites « caraïbes » seraient arrivées à leur tour dans l'île.

Ces populations plus récentes semblent s'installer, en revanche, préférentiellement dans la zone sud de la Martinique. Elles se rattachent à la culture suazoïde, du nom du site éponyme de Savane Suazey à la Grenade, et ont été pendant longtemps désignées sous l'appellation de « caraïbe ». Le site archéologique de la plage de l'Anse Trabaud, sur le littoral atlantique de la commune de Sainte-Anne, qui a été en partie fouillé par Louis Allaire, archéologue canadien, est un site de cette période finale, peut-être pratiquement contemporain de l'arrivée des premiers Européens aux Antilles. Le site de la plage de Dizac au Diamant est, quant à lui, daté du IXe siècle.

Ces populations ne sont pas des populations radicalement différentes des populations saladoïdes, comme on a souvent voulu le faire croire en suivant de trop près le témoignage de « chroniqueurs », premiers auteurs d'écrits sur les nouveaux territoires de l'Amérique. Ces chroniqueurs, souvent religieux, sont notre seule source écrite sur les premiers temps de la colonisation, les populations amérindiennes des Antilles ne possédant pas d'écriture.

Pour l'instant, on ne possède que peu de données sur les populations ayant occupé l'île entre le site de Vivé (vers 300) et l'occupation du Diamant (vers 800). La connaissance du néolithique antillais est encore très lacunaire, les études et les fouilles répondant aux critères modernes étant encore rares. Cependant, une thèse de doctorat[3] a été soutenue en 2003 sur les premières occupations amérindiennes de la Martinique. Les tombes en conque de lambis dans les cimetières sont des témoignages amérindiens qui utilisaient la conque pour annoncer la mort[4].

Caraïbes et Arawaks

Il était, jusqu'à très récemment, couramment admis que les Arawaks avaient été exterminés par les Caraïbes. Cependant, il semble que cette affirmation ne soit plus aussi nettement acceptée (voir Peuple Caraïbe).

Les premiers contacts avec les Européens

On prête généralement cette découverte de la Martinique par les européens à Christophe Colomb lorsqu'il accoste sur le site de l'actuelle commune du Carbet le 15 juin 1502 au cours de son quatrième voyage vers les « Indes ». Néanmoins, il semble admis que ce soit Alonso de Ojeda qui ait découvert l'île en premier lors de son expédition de 1499-1500[5,6]. Elle figure sur la carte établie par Juan de la Cosa en 1500[7] et on la retrouve ensuite sur la carte d'Alberto Cantino (1502) sous le nom de Ioüanacéra ou Joanacaera[8] (formé du préfixe ioüana = iguane et du suffixe caéra = île) c'est-à-dire l'île aux iguanes[9,10].

Christophe Colomb avait entendu les Arawaks (Taïnos) parler de l'île lors de son passage à Hispaniola au cours de son deuxième voyage (ces propos sont rapportés par Pierre Martyr d'Anghiera). Pour les amérindiens l'île était peuplée exclusivement de femmes[11]. Ils l' appelaient Matinino , nom que Colomb traduisit par isla de las mujeres , « l'île aux femmes ». et non l'île aux fleurs ainsi que l'affirment l' Encyclopædia Universalis ou la Britannica. Comme Colomb avait, par décret, le monopole des découvertes des nouvelles Indes, il privilégia Matinino à Joanacaera.

Sur le planisphère de Johann Ruysch (vers 1507-1508) figure pour la première fois le nom de Matininia, que l'on retrouve sous la forme Matenino sur la carte anonyme (de 1519) de la bibliothèque de Wolfenbüttel. En France, la carte de Nicolas Desliens de 1541 porte Matinina. Outre ces noms adoptés par les cartographes, on trouve mentionnée dans la cédule royale de 1511" Real provision que los Indios Caribes se pueden tomar por esclavos" , l'île de Matinino alors décrite comme habitée par les Caraïbes.

Dans la cartographie italienne du milieu du XVIe siècle, apparaît le surnom actuel de Madinina (avec un –d- à la place du -t-).

Le passage au cours du XVIIe siècle au nom actuel de Martinique est dû au fait que Saint Martin jouissait alors d'une grande renommée en France. Par analogie avec la Dominique voisine (Dominica en latin et anglais), le nom de l'île a été déformé en Martinique (Martinica).

Les débuts de la colonisation à partir de 1635

Le 15 septembre 1635[13, 14], le flibustier Pierre Belain d'Esnambuc débarque dans la rade de Saint-Pierre avec 150 colons français qui ont été chassés de l'île Saint-Christophe où ils étaient établis depuis 1625. Il installe ainsi la première colonie dans l'île, pour le compte de la couronne de France et de la Compagnie des îles d'Amérique. Les premiers établissements français en Martinique sont Le Fort Saint-Pierre (actuelle ville de Saint-Pierre) fondé par d'Esnambuc, et la ville du Fort-Royal (actuellement Fort-de-France) fondée par les gouverneurs De Baas et Blenac.

Les premiers moulins à sucre de la famille Trézel

À la demande de la Compagnie des îles d'Amérique, le marchand de Rouen, d'origine hollandaise, Daniel Trézel a installé en 1640 le premier moulin à sucre de la Martinique, trois ans après que Peter Blower eut fait de même à l'île anglaise de la Barbade. Jacques Dyel, gouverneur du Parquet, exploitera pleinement cet apport une dizaine d'années plus tard en 1650, lorsque la Compagnie des îles d'Amérique sera ruinée et qu'il la rachètera pour 41 500 francs.

En 1654, selon le témoignage d'Antoine Biet, de retour de Guyane, les hollandais fuyant le Brésil sont accueillis plutôt en Guadeloupe, de laquelle il racontait retour de trois bateaux venant du Brésil, que les Hollandais venaient d'abandonner définitivement après dix années de combat contre les Portugais, la période hollandaise de l'histoire du Pernambouc.

« Ils étaient environ 1200 parmi lesquels il n'y avait pas 50 Hollandais naturels »[15], tous les autres étant métis ou esclaves nègres », qui « voulurent suivre » leurs maîtres[15], écrit-il en 1664 dix ans après, dans un témoignage indirect, le seul du passage des Hollandais, sujet à caution car le gouverneur Houel avait besoin de légitimer alors développement de l'esclavage.

Les plus riches des Hollandais avaient cependant fui le Brésil dès les années 1640. Au Brésil, les planteurs portugais se soulèvent contre les Hollandais dès 1642, et Fernandès Vieira gagne deux batailles importantes en 1645[16]. En 1636, les premiers esclaves furent tous vendus à crédit mais en 1644 et 1645, la proportion vendue au comptant passe à respectivement 78 % et 100 %, reflet de l'appréhension des Hollandais, qui sentent que le Brésil va leur échapper[17] très prochainement[18].

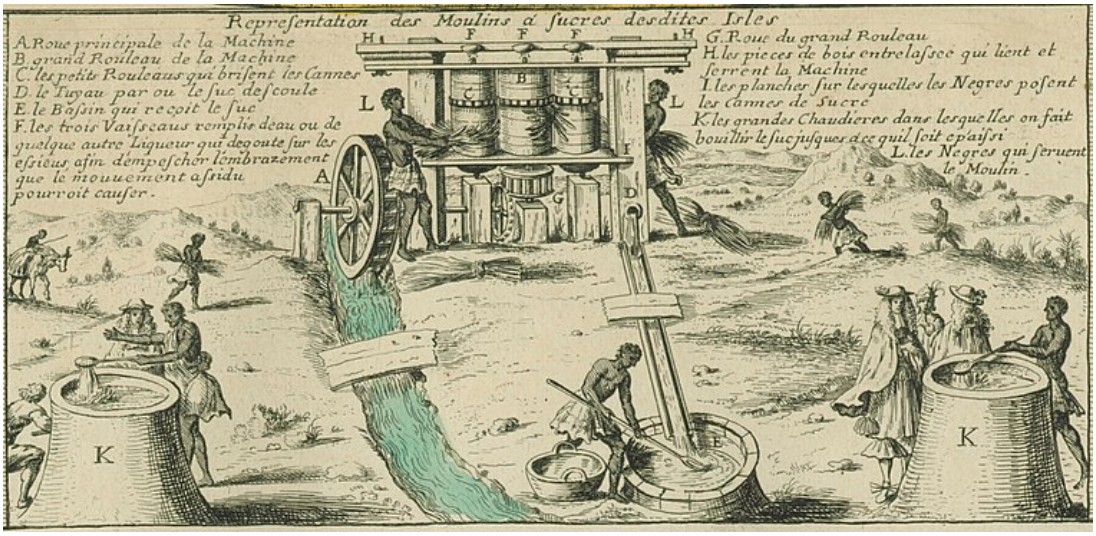
Plus de 600 Français se regroupent avec la bénédiction des prêtres de l'île pour attaquer les Caraïbes dans leurs territoires réservés par l'accord de paix du 21 décembre 1657 avec la volonté d'éliminer toutes présences indigènes dans l'île. Les Caraïbes sont massacrés et perdent les derniers territoires qui leur étaient réservés. Les survivants se réfugieront dans les îles de Saint-Vincent et de la Dominique. De là, ils organiseront par la suite plusieurs expéditions punitives contre les colons dans les îles voisines.

Cette victoire stimule la colonisation française plus à l'est, incarnée par Pierre Dubuc de Rivery, qui fonde une dynastie de planteurs de sucre. Organisateur d'une milice dans le bourg de Trinité pour repousser les Caraïbes, il reçut en 1671 des terres à défricher, allant de la presqu'île de la Caravelle au bourg de Trinité. La famille du Buc y construisit 7 sucreries. En 1671, la canne à sucre est encore peu développée en Martinique : elle occupe deux fois moins de terre que la culture du tabac[19], pratiquée par de nombreux petits colons blancs, sur des plantations nécessitant très peu de capitaux[20].

Les Amérindiens sont peu à peu repoussés ou chassés. Cependant, une frange de cette population « caraïbe » demeure sur place dans un fort état d'acculturation se fondant petit à petit dans le reste de la population[21].

Guerres entre empires européens: compétitions dans les Antilles



Le XVIIe siècle est marquée par de nombreux conflits en Europe. Les alliances se font et se défont entre les grandes puissances et les Antilles sont le théâtre de nombreux affrontements.

Alors que la paix anglo-néerlandaise vient d'être signée, l'imposante flotte hollandaise de l'Amiral de Ruyter attaque la Martinique le 19 juillet 1674. Les Hollandais débarquent mais, bien qu'ils soient beaucoup plus nombreux, sont vaincus lors de la bataille du Fort-Royal également appelée bataille du rhum. Cette débâcle et la victoire française lors de la guerre de Hollande marquent la fin des velléités coloniales hollandaises en Amérique.

La lutte se concentre entre les Français et les Anglais (et, après 1707, date de la fondation du Royaume-Uni, les Britanniques). Tous les grands conflits européens ont leur composante caraïbe. C'est notamment le cas de la guerre de Sept Ans qui vaudra à la France la perte de nombreuses possessions au profit de la Grande-Bretagne. La Martinique deviendra ainsi, par deux fois, possession britannique, mais pour d'assez courtes périodes. Elle restera définitivement française après 1816.

Au XIXe siècle, l'activité économique de la Martinique bénéficie de la perte par la France de Saint-Domingue (aujourd'hui Haïti et la République dominicaine), principale colonie française des Antilles au XVIIIe siècle. Saint-Pierre, capitale de la Martinique et principale ville des Antilles au XIXe siècle, connaît alors une prospérité que seule l'éruption volcanique catastrophique de la montagne Pelée du 8 mai 1902 viendra interrompre, et dont elle ne se remettra jamais complètement.

L'instauration de l'économie sucrière par l'esclavage

Croquis d'un moulin à sucre avec des esclaves au travail et des administrateurs de la Compagnie des Indes occidentales en 1667.

Durant les premières décennies de l'occupation française, l'île est productrice de denrées coloniales fournissant de forts profits : tabac (petun), roucou, indigo, cacao, le tabac de la Martinique étant alors très apprécié. La crise du tabac de la seconde moitié du XVII^e siècle ruine les premiers planteurs qui se tournent vers la production de sucre. La monoculture de la canne à sucre va bientôt modeler le paysage et devenir partie intégrante de la culture créole. Elle dominera l'économie du pays jusqu'à la seconde moitié du XX^e siècle.

La culture de la canne à sucre telle qu'elle est pratiquée dans « l'habitation sucrière » demande une importante main-d'œuvre que la métropole ne peut fournir. Si la culture du tabac ou de l'indigo avait pu se faire avec les « engagés », la traite d'esclaves noirs provenant des côtes de l'Afrique est avancée comme unique solution susceptible de fournir les effectifs nécessaires à la culture de la canne à sucre.

Les engagés venaient sous contrat avec un planteur pour une durée de trois ans (d'où leur surnom de « trente-six mois »). Le planteur couvrait les frais du voyage et exigeait ensuite de l'engagé un travail semblable à celui de la main d'œuvre servile. Mais, à la différence de l'esclave, s'il réussissait à survivre aux terribles conditions de vie et de travail qui lui étaient imposées, l'engagé recouvrait sa liberté à l'issue des trois années de son contrat et se voyait allouer une terre lui permettant de devenir à son tour planteur.

La culture de la canne est synonyme de traite négrière par le commerce triangulaire (Europe, Afrique, Amérique) ou plus souvent en « droiture », entre les ports français (Bordeaux, Nantes) et la colonie. Par manque chronique d'espèces métalliques, le troc domine, tandis que la piraterie maintient le danger, même au cours des périodes de paix.

L'esclavage se développe à partir de la période 1671-1674

Le père Labat décrit dans ses ouvrages la société esclavagiste du XVII^e siècle. Les pratiques religieuses et militaires européennes y sont jugées plus ritualisées et ordonnancées que celle des Amérindiens. Des « engagés » blancs de 36 mois sont utilisés pour la fortification de l'île. Une fois affranchis, ils obtiennent des lopins de terre. Les plus riches planteurs recherchent alors une nouvelle main d'œuvre meilleur marché, en s'inspirant du succès des planteurs de sucre de la Barbade, où une élite militaire proche de la dynastie Stuart a importé des esclaves noirs en masse.

En 1638 l'administration refuse le droit à un capitaine de la Martinique de s'approvisionner en esclaves en Afrique[22]. Les premiers trafics d'esclaves via les Hollandais touchèrent la Martinique vers 1641. La culture du sucre fut tentée en Martinique dès les années 1640, en s'inspirant de la réussite de la Barbade, mais sans succès. Il faut attendre les années 1650 pour qu'elle s'implante, et plus lentement qu'ailleurs. Les indiens caraïbes résistent plus longtemps qu'à la Guadeloupe où un traité fut signé dès 1641 par Charles Lièvard de l'Olive pour les déporter à la Dominique. Mais les esclaves noirs n'arrivent pas assez vite, faute de filière pour la traite négrière, alors pratiquée, à petite échelle, par les seuls Hollandais. Le sucre est une culture violente, qui nécessite de grandes propriétés et consomme des esclaves jeunes, rapidement épuisés au travail intensif de la coupe et du transport des cannes, effectué sous la menace du fouet. Leur espérance de vie étant ainsi basse, il faut régulièrement les remplacer par de nouvelles recrues[23]..

L'explosion du nombre d'esclaves correspond aux décisions prises à Versailles par Louis XIV entre 1671 et 1674 pour favoriser la culture du sucre au détriment de celle du tabac. Entre 1674 et 1680, le nombre d'esclaves en Martinique double. Entre 1673 et 1700, il a déjà sextuplé.

Les années 1680 : explosion du nombre d'esclaves à la Martinique et à la Guadeloupe

Le nombre d'esclaves baisse après 1664 dans les deux îles. La Guadeloupe, défrichée dès les années 1640 et contrôlée par un seul propriétaire, avait en 1660 environ 6 000 esclaves soit deux fois plus que les 3 000 de la Martinique[24], qui met les bouchées doubles à partir de 1674 et prend l'avantage dès 1680.

La population d'esclaves martiniquais diminua d'abord, dans les neuf années qui suivent la création en 1664 de la Compagnie des Indes occidentales de Colbert. Son remplacement en 1673, par la compagnie du Sénégal entraîne au contraire une multiplication par 4,5 dans les 14 années qui suivent. De 1687 à 1700, la progression se poursuit, mais plus lentement (+32 % en 13 ans), selon L'Administration des finances en Martinique, 1679-1790, de Gérard Marion[25].

1 000[26]	3 000[24]	2 700	2 400	4 900	8 216	9 554	10 733	11 215	15 000	15 071

En Martinique, les planteurs ne possédaient toujours que 2 400 esclaves en 1673, contre 2 700 dix ans plus tôt en 1664, au moment la création de la Compagnie des Indes occidentales[27]. Le Roi et les grands planteurs reprochent à cette compagnie « fourre-tout » de se disperser en Nouvelle-France (présent Québec) et d'être peu efficace dans la traite négrière.

La Martinique en 1681. Atlas Van der Hagen, bibliothèque royale des Pays-Bas.

Louis XIV abolit donc en 1671 le monopole de la Compagnie des Indes occidentales. La traite négrière est alors ouverte à tous les ports français, pour la doper par la concurrence. La Compagnie des Indes occidentales, en faillite, est dissoute en 1674. La Guadeloupe et la Martinique passent sous l'autorité directe du roi Louis XIV, qui pousse la culture de la canne à sucre, plus gourmande en capitaux mais beaucoup plus rentable, en donnant des terres à des officiers supérieurs en Martinique, où le sucre est alors moins développé qu'à la Guadeloupe.

En Guadeloupe aussi, les planteurs de sucre se plaignent de la Compagnie des Indes occidentales: leur population d'esclaves a diminué de 40 % en 7 ans, passant de 6 323 personnes en 1664 à 4 627 en 1671. La diminution se poursuit dans les années 1670: la Guadeloupe ne compte plus que 2 950 esclaves en 1680[28], deux fois moins qu'en 1664, car la « privatisation » de traite négrière après 1674 profite surtout à la Martinique. La Guadeloupe suit, avec un temps de retard, à partir de 1680, le nombre d'esclaves doublant en 20 ans pour atteindre 6 587 en 1700, puis 9 706 en 1710, selon Histoire et civilisation de la Caraïbe de Jean-Pierre Sainton et Raymond Boutin[29].

3 000	6 323[26]	4 627[26]	2 950[26]	4 109[26]	4 982[26]	6 587	9 706

Louis XIV avait croisé dès 1669 la veuve Scarron, marquise de Maintenon, dite « la belle indienne » car elle a passé son enfance en Martinique. Le roi prête aussi l'oreille à son ministre de la Défense, Louvois qui dirige la coûteuse guerre de Hollande (1672-1676), contre l'avis de Colbert et contre les Pays-Bas, détenteurs de l'asiento.

Ce monopole d'importation d'africains est concurrencé par la création en 1673 de la Compagnie du Sénégal, dirigée par le célèbre amiral Jean-Baptiste du Casse, dans le sillage de la Compagnie Royale d'Afrique, fondée en 1672 par le duc d'York Jacques Stuart, cousin de Louis XIV et futur roi d'Angleterre. La Compagnie du Sénégal, comme la Compagnie de Guinée qui lui succède en 1700, institue la traite négrière à grande échelle.

L'investissement des Français et des anglais dans le commerce triangulaire, massif et simultané, fait flamber le prix des esclaves, alimentant de nouvelles filières. Il contribue à l'essor des ports français de Nantes et de Bordeaux, il fait en même temps baisser le coût du transport des esclaves au profit des planteurs de sucre. Les forts se multiplient sur le littoral africain. Dans les sept années qui suivent la création de la Compagnie du Sénégal, le nombre d'esclaves double en Martinique. En 25 ans, il sextuple[27]. La Guadeloupe est rattrapée et dépassée.

Vue de Fort-Royal, vers 1750.

La spéculation immobilière sur les terres à sucre éjecte les blancs les moins fortunés, par ailleurs pénalisés par la ferme du tabac. Sa création en 1674 par Louis XIV entraîne la ruine rapide du tabac français. Le tabac produit en Virginie par les grands planteurs jacobites comme William Berkeley, moins taxé, profite de la contrebande. La Virginie passe de 2 000 esclaves en 1671[30] à 110 000 en 1750. Selon Fernand Braudel, les exportations de tabac de la Virginie et du Maryland sextuplent entre 1663 et 1699 avec le « passage du travail des blancs à la main d'œuvre noire », qui provoque la révolte de Nathaniel Bacon.

Le premier client de la Compagnie du Sénégal est le plus riche planteur de sucre de la Martinique: le capitaine Charles François d'Angennes, marquis de Maintenon, gouverneur de Marie-Galante depuis 1678, lui commande 1600 esclaves en 1679. Il a le monopole du commerce sucrier avec le Venezuela espagnol et habite au Prêcheur, près de Case Pilote, deux paroisses jésuites[31], où vivent le quart des esclaves de Martinique en 1680[32].

Le Roi précipite en 1680 l'histoire de la culture des plantes sucrières en donnant terres et titres de noblesse à tout planteur qui installe sur ses terres plus de cent esclaves, comme l'intendant Jean-Baptiste Patoulet[33], ou le capitaine de milice Antoine Cornette. Autre grand planteur en 1683, Nicolas de Gabaret, qui intègre la Liste des gouverneurs de la Martinique en 1689, associé de Charles François d'Angennes dans la raffinerie de à Mouillage[34]. L'amiral Jean-Baptiste du Casse assure la livraison de main d'œuvre. Dès 1680, on recense 99 plantations de plus de 20 esclaves, cinq fois plus qu'en 1669[33].

Entre 1674 et 1692, le nombre de sucreries double. Saint-Pierre de la Martinique devient la capitale des Antilles françaises. Les esclaves les plus jeunes et les plus résistant sont réservés à l'élite de grands planteurs nobles[27]. Le code noir de 1685 limite le métissage et règlemente la torture des esclaves.

Le 1er novembre 1755, la Martinique et les Petites Antilles sont balayées par le raz-de-marée provoqué par le Tremblement de terre de Lisbonne. Les communes de La Trinité, de Fort-Royal et du Lamentin sont les plus touchées[35].

Les révolutions de la fin du XVIIIe siècle : la question des relations entre la métropole et ses colonies

Guerre de Sept Ans

La Martinique est attaquée une première fois par les Anglais en 1759 puis une seconde fois en 1762. Fort-Royal et la colonie tombent aux mains des Anglais le 12 février 1762. Elle est rendue à la France un an plus tard à la suite de la signature du traité de Paris.

En 1778, la France s'associe avec les fraîchement proclamés États-Unis d'Amérique pour prendre sa revanche sur la Grande-Bretagne après la guerre de Sept Ans.

L'abolition ratée

À la veille de la Révolution française en 1788, Brissot crée la Société des amis des Noirs à Paris. Malgré les efforts de ses membres les plus éminents comme l'abbé Grégoire ou Condorcet, elle ne peut obtenir l'abolition de l'esclavage auprès de la Constituante. La déclaration des droits de l'homme et du citoyen de 1789 tout comme la constitution de 1791 tolère l'esclavage.

Dès 1789, la Martinique est déchirée entre le pouvoir officiel révolutionnaire soutenus par les Pierrotins (habitants urbains de Saint-Pierre) et les békés (grands planteurs blancs), partisans de la royauté.

En août 1791, débute l'insurrection des esclaves dans le nord de Saint-Domingue.

Le 4 avril 1792, l'assemblée législative française élève au rang de citoyen tout homme de couleur libre et envoie le commissaire Rochambeau en Martinique pour faire appliquer cette loi. L'Assemblée de la Martinique, qui s'intitule désormais Assemblée Constituante de la Martinique, accepte de promulguer cette loi. Elle refuse, en revanche, de laisser débarquer Rochambeau et ses hommes.

Plus tard, la Martinique entre en insurrection et arbore la cocarde blanche du parti royaliste. Les patriotes républicains abandonnent la colonie et se réfugient à la Dominique. Le 1er décembre 1792 arrive le capitaine de vaisseau Lacrosse chargé par la Convention de faire triompher la République toute récente ; la guerre éclate. Dubuc, leader des royalistes martiniquais se rend à Londres. Lacrosse, lui, se rend à Sainte-Lucie qui est fidèle à la République et rallie les hommes de couleurs libres à la Révolution.

L'Assemblée de la Martinique reconnait la République le 9 janvier 1793, le gouverneur Béhague et les royalistes s'enfuient. Le roi est guillotiné le 21 janvier. Rochambeau, nommé gouverneur de la Martinique en janvier y arrive le 3 février. Il s'installe à Fort-Royal, rebaptisée Fort-République ou République-ville, et dissout l'Assemblée coloniale. Il ferme tous les ports de l'île au profit de Saint-Pierre. Cette attitude écarte du régime de nombreux planteurs qui étaient disposés à se rallier à la République. Certains émigrent et vont renforcer le parti des royalistes émigrés à Trinidad. Ces émigrés tentent avec l'appui des Britanniques de reprendre la Martinique. La flotte britannique se présente le 7 mai 1793 devant Case-Navire, mais son action mal coordonnée n'aboutit pas. Rochambeau prend des mesures d'exception.

Le 29 août 1793, Sonthonax décrète l'abolition de l'esclavage à Saint-Domingue.

Le 16 septembre 1793, les propriétaires blancs de l'île s'insurgent et entament une contre-révolution royaliste. La Convention abolit l'esclavage sur tout le territoire national par le décret du 4 février 1794. Le 6 février 1794, la flotte britannique du Lieutenant général Grey, forte de 16 000 hommes, bloque la Martinique. Rochambeau s'enferme avec quelques hommes dans les forts de la République et de la Convention. Résolu à se défendre, il repousse les ultimatums des Britanniques et soutient un siège de 43 jours. Saint-Pierre est prise par les Britanniques le 16 février, sans que l'abolition de l'esclavage décidée par la Convention le 4 février n'ait pu entrer en vigueur. Le Traité de Whitehall est signé avec les Anglais par les colons royalistes menés par Dubuc le 19 février.

La Martinique et les guerres du Premier Empire

Le 21 mars 1794, la domination militaire de l'île par la couronne britannique est totale. L'esclavage est maintenu et l'ordre établi en échange de la très lucrative fiscalité sur le sucre. Ce pacte avec les Britanniques dure de 1794 à 1802.

L'île redevient française le 25 mars 1802 dans le cadre de la Paix d'Amiens mais l'esclavage est maintenu par Napoléon (alors 1er consul) via la Loi du 20 mai 1802. Les mariages mixtes sont entravés du fait d'une réapplication progressive du Code noir par Richepanse, notamment à partir de son arrêté du 17 juillet 1802 retirant la nationalité française aux noirs et « gens de couleurs ».

Occupation anglaise de 1809-1814

La Paix d'Amiens est rompue dès 1803, et les combats reprennent aux Antilles. Après la prise de Sainte-Lucie et de Tobago, la flotte anglaise impose un blocus des côtes de la Martinique et tente un débarquement en novembre 1803. L'attaque échoue, mais les Britanniques s'emparent du Rocher du Diamant qu'ils fortifient. En 1805, le regroupement des flottes franco-espagnoles en provenance d'Europe et destinées à la conquête de l'Angleterre s'effectue à la Martinique.

En avril 1805, le rocher est repris à l'initiative de l'amiral espagnol Gravina lors de la bataille du rocher du Diamant. Néanmoins la flotte combinée fuit peu après devant l'arrivée de Nelson.

Le 30 janvier 1809, le général Beckwith et 12 000 hommes débarquent en Martinique et assaillent Saint-Pierre qui est évacuée. Les Anglais provoquent la désertion de masse, en menaçant les colons qui combattent avec les Français de faire confisquer tous leurs biens. Le 2 février, ils prennent Fort-de-France et assiègent le Fort Desaix où les forces françaises se sont réfugiées. Villaret de Joyeuse capitule le 24 février. L'année suivante, c'est au tour de la Guadeloupe de tomber.

Les Britanniques favorisent les colons en maintenant l'ancien régime esclavagiste. En raison du blocus continental, le sucre ne peut être exporté qu'en 1813. Les esclaves et les mulâtres, hostiles à l'occupant, se révoltent en 1811. La répression anglaise est terrible.

Napoléon est vaincu, mais la Martinique, comme la Guadeloupe sont rétrocédées à la France, contrairement à Tobago et Sainte-Lucie, par le Traité de Paris le 30 mai 1814.

Le 11 janvier 1839, la Martinique est secouée par un tremblement de terre majeur qui, cumulé à un incendie, ravage la ville de Fort-de-France. Quatre ans plus tard, le 8 février 1843, un autre séisme majeur fait de gros dégâts dans l'île.

L'abolition de l'esclavage et l'immigration

Après une première abolition ratée sous la révolution, abolition annulée par Napoléon et annulation confirmée au retour de la royauté, ce n'est que le 27 avril 1848 que Victor Schœlcher, alors sous-secrétaire d'État à la Marine et aux Colonies de la Seconde République, appose sa signature au bas du décret mettant officiellement fin à l'esclavage. Le 22 mai 1848 (date commémorative en Martinique), avant même l'application du décret, les esclaves martiniquais se révoltent et obtiennent l'abolition de l'esclavage par le gouverneur Claude Rostoland le 23 mai[36].

En 1848, la population de Martinique comptait à la veille de l'abolition 121 130 habitants, répartis comme suit : 9 542 Blancs, 38 729 affranchis et 72 859 esclaves.

Dans la seconde moitié du XIXe siècle, la Martinique fut concernée par de nouvelles immigrations. La plantocratie locale, soucieuse de renouveler la main d'œuvre après l'abolition de l'esclavage[37], suscita l'arrivée dans l'île de 37 008 engagés sous contrat : 25 509 Indiens venant de Pondichéry, Madras et Calcutta, 10 521 Congos (engagés venus d'Afrique) et 978 Chinois en provenance de Shanghai et Guangzhou (Canton).

Aux chiffres de l'immigration officielle, il faut rajouter 119 Indiens arrivés de la Caraïbe anglaise, et 6 Chinois en provenance vraisemblablement des mêmes îles. Il convient enfin de mentionner pour mémoire, la venue à la même période de quelques centaines de Madériens et d'Européens.

Le 6 mai 1853 accoste à Saint-Pierre l'Aurélie, un navire en provenance de Karikal avec à son bord 313 "engagés" indiens. De nombreux autres bateaux arrivent pendant les trois décennies suivantes.

En ce qui concerne les mariages mixtes pour les Chinois, il y a eu entre 1858 et 1902 à Fort-de-France : 12 Chinois avec des Chinoises, 15 Chinois avec des Créoles, deux Chinois avec des Congos, et deux Chinois avec des Indiennes. Les couples mixtes entre Indiens et femmes de couleur durant cette période sont rares mais ont débuté dès leur arrivée en 1853 dû au manque flagrant de femmes du côté de leur communauté. En 1900, il restait 4 665 Indiens, 5 371 Congos et 432 Chinois.

Les Chinois, quant à eux, se sont rapidement intégrés à la population locale en abandonnant rapidement les champs de cannes pour se tourner vers le commerce.

Sur 10 521 Congos, il n'y eut en effet que deux à retourner en Afrique. Au 31 décembre 1900, secondes générations comprises, il restait 5 345 Congos, soit près de treize fois plus que les 432 Chinois, qui n'eurent qu'un rapatrié. Les Indiens comptèrent 11 951 rapatriés.

La Martinique n'a alors jamais connu de graves tensions inter-ethniques malgré son passé très mouvementé et les différentes communautés vivent en relative harmonie.

Contrairement à beaucoup d'idées reçues, il y a toujours eu des Amérindiens aux Antilles françaises. Cependant à partir du milieu du XIXe siècle, les Amérindiens ont été de plus en plus confondus avec les immigrants asiatiques à cause de leur ressemblance physique très proche.

En 1861, de nombreux martiniquais participent à l'intervention française au Mexique décidée par Napoléon III. Outre le peloton de gendarmes à cheval et la compagnie du génie colonial, une compagnie de volontaires créoles recrutés sur l'île se joint à l'expédition.

La grande crise sucrière (1884-1905)

L'éruption de la montagne Pelée de 1902

Panorama des ruines de Saint-Pierre après l'éruption de la montagne Pelée en 1902.

L'éruption de la montagne Pelée en 1902 a durablement marqué les esprits. Le 8 mai 1902, une terrible éruption provoquant la formation d'une nuée ardente tue tous les habitants de Saint-Pierre (à l'exception d'un prisonnier du nom de Louis-Auguste Cyparis, ou Sylbaris, sauvé par l'épaisseur des murs de son cachot) et des environs de la ville (30 000 morts). Le 30 août suivant, alors qu'un géologue s'était déplacé de Paris et avait prévenu du danger d'une nouvelle éruption, une nuée ardente tua encore 1 300 personnes au Morne Rouge.

An tan Robè, la Seconde Guerre mondiale

À la suite de la débâcle de l'armée française en juin 1940, le maréchal Pétain nomme l'amiral Georges Robert, Haut commissaire de la France aux Antilles. Dès lors, il devient le représentant du régime de Vichy en Martinique, où il est en poste.

Il gère la situation des possessions françaises face aux intérêts britanniques et surtout américains. Avec ces derniers, il obtient une sorte d'arrangement à l'amiable qui cantonne les possessions françaises d'Amérique dans une certaine neutralité et entend préserver ainsi la souveraineté nationale sur les colonies. Il veillera aux réserves d'or de la Banque de France entreposées provisoirement au fort Desaix à Fort-de-France.

L'amiral Robert impose un régime de rigueur et de répression accaparant les rares ressources disponibles et en particulier la nourriture qui n'arrivait dans l'île que via les ravitaillements américains. Le 9 mai 1942, l'Amiral Hoover dénonce les accords franco-américains passés pour les Antilles et exige l'immobilisation de tous les navires français dans la zone. Il impose alors un blocus sur les îles françaises d'Amérique, qui aggrave encore les conditions de vie des Antillais.

L'absence de commerce avec la métropole entraîne une pénurie quasi générale et une disette chronique. Les produits de première nécessité comme la farine, la viande salée, le savon, le tissu firent défaut et furent remplacés tant bien que mal par des productions locales. La mortalité infantile crût de façon dramatique.

L'amiral Robert était un collaborateur zélé qui affichait clairement son mépris des populations de couleur. Il a tout fait pour empêcher le ralliement des Antillais et des Guyanais aux forces françaises libres multipliant les exactions contre les dissidents. Pourtant de nombreux Martiniquais ont rejoint par des moyens de fortunes, les îles anglaises de la Dominique et de Sainte-Lucie pour ensuite renforcer les troupes du général de Gaulle en Angleterre.

En avril 1943, la population se soulève contre l'administration vichyste autour du Comité Martiniquais de Libération Nationale (CMLN) avec les leaders Victor Sévère et Emmanuel Rimbaud. Le 24 juin, la foule est dans la rue à Fort-de-France aux cris de «Vive la France, Vive de Gaulle». Le 29 juin 1943, la 3e compagnie basée au camp de Balata et placée sous l'autorité du Commandant Tourtet, entre en mutinerie et se joint au mouvement de résistance.

L'Amiral Robert quitte contraint et forcé l'île en juillet 1943. Le pouvoir est aussitôt remis entre les mains d'Henri Hoppenot, l'ambassadeur de la France combattante à Washington, qui proclame le ralliement de la Martinique à la France libre le 14 juillet 1943[38]. Louis Ponton venu d'Afrique équatoriale devient le nouveau gouverneur de la Martinique.

Les aînés martiniquais évoquent encore cette période en disant « an tan Robè », c'est-à-dire « du temps de Robert ».

L'assimilation et la course vers l'égalité de droit

La situation des Martiniquais après guerre est misérable. La Loi de départementalisation de 1946, défendue par le jeune député martiniquais Aimé Césaire, proclame l'assimilation des citoyens martiniquais à la nation française, instituant une forme de décolonisation inédite.

Si certains militants anticolonialistes se montrent critiques sur la départementalisation, lui préférant l'indépendance, d'autres soutiennent le projet en raison de la menace que représentent les États-Unis. Selon Daniel Guérin, auteur de Les Antilles décolonisées, « Certains possédants antillais, blancs ou même mulâtres, ne verraient pas sans déplaisir les États-Unis s'installer aux Antilles où le flot montant des revendications sociales met en danger leurs privilèges »[39].

Ce n'est qu'en 1996 sous la présidence de Jacques Chirac que les martiniquais obtiennent une égalité de droit complète avec les Français de métropole et l'accès complet aux mêmes aides sociales. Le SMIC ultramarin est aligné sur celui de France métropolitaine.

Répression coloniale et émancipation à la Martinique

Le 20 décembre 1959, un banal accrochage entre un automobiliste métropolitain blanc et un motocycliste martiniquais noir déclenche trois jours d'émeutes à Fort-de-France, connues comme « les Trois Glorieuses », en référence aux trois journées révolutionnaires parisiennes de juillet 1830[40]. Ces émeutes font 3 victimes - trois jeunes gens, tués par les forces de l'ordre (Christian Marajo, Julien Betzi et Edmond-Eloi Véronique dit « Rosile » âgés respectivement de 15, 20 et 21 ans[40]) - et ébranlent durablement les Martiniquais. Il s'agit de la première grande crise qui intervient après la départementalisation de 1946[41].

Juridiquement, le Conseil d'État considère dans un avis de 1947 que : « les départements algériens sont des départements d'outre-mer »[Texte 1]. Dans le cadre d'un appareil répressif plus vaste dans un contexte tributaire de l'effervescence des évènements d'Algérie, le 15 octobre 1960 est prise l'ordonnance Debré qui autorise les pouvoirs publics français à procéder à l'exil forcé en métropole des fonctionnaires de l'Outre-Mer soupçonnés par le pouvoir gaulliste d'encourager à la subversion et à l'agitation anticolonialiste par leur prises de position. Cette ordonnance, condamnée par le Conseil d'État, ne sera abrogée que le 10 octobre 1972[42].

En mars 1961, les ouvriers agricoles de l'île se mettent en grève pour réclamer des augmentations du salaire et une amélioration des conditions de travail. Le 24 mars, trois responsables syndicaux sont arrêtés dans la matinée. Devant les protestations, les syndicalistes sont relâchés le soir même, quand les gardes mobiles décident de tirer sans sommations sur la foule devant l'église du Lamentin. Cet épisode, resté dans l'histoire sous le nom de la « fusillade du Lamentin », fait trois morts - la couturière Suzanne Marie-Calixte et les ouvriers agricoles Alexandre Laurencine et Édouard Valide - ainsi que de nombreux blessés. À cette occasion, Georges Gratiant, maire communiste du Lamentin, prononce le célèbre « discours sur les trois tombes » pour dénoncer la répression coloniale. Les 22 et 23 avril 1961, à Paris, est créé le Front antillo-guyanais pour l'autonomie (FAGA) entre autres par Édouard Glissant, Marcel Manville, Albert Béville et Cosnay Marie-Joseph[43] qui seront tous deux interdits de séjour dans leur île[44].

Le 14 octobre 1962, sous l'impulsion de quelques étudiants, est créé l'Organisation de la Jeunesse Anticolonialiste Martiniquaise (OJAM). Le 23 décembre, le Manifeste de l'OJAM est placardé sur tous les murs de l'île afin de commémorer les émeutes de 59. Les 18 jeunes auteurs de ce manifeste sont arrêtés, emprisonnés à Fresnes et accusés d'atteinte à la sûreté de l'État. Ils sont jugés, lors d'un procès politique en 1964 qui se soldera par un acquittement général. Dans le même temps, le BUMIDOM est créé en 1963 pour favoriser l'émigration des habitants des départements d'outre-mer vers la France métropolitaine.

Un lycéen est abattu en 1971 par la police lors de la venue du Ministre Pierre Messmer[45]. Le 14 février 1974, les gardes mobiles métropolitains s'attaquent à des ouvriers agricoles de la banane qui font grève au lieu-dit Chalvet à Basse-Pointe, occasionnant de nombreux blessés par balles et un mort[43]. Deux jours plus tard, le corps d'un étudiant de 17 ans - Georges Marie-Louise - tué par les forces de l'ordre est retrouvé abandonné non loin, provoquant de nouvelles manifestations qui se soldent par une augmentation de salaires mais laissent un souvenir marquant[43]. Au début des années 1980, plusieurs attentats à la bombe sont perpétrés contre des bâtiments de l'État français en Martinique - le siège de Radio France Outre-Mer, Palais de Justice, gendarmerie... - revendiqués par l'Alliance révolutionnaire caraïbe[46].

L'indépendantiste Alfred Marie-Jeanne, membre du Mouvement Indépendantiste Martiniquais fondé en 1978, est élu député en 1997 puis président du conseil régional de la Martinique l'année suivante.

Projet de valorisation culturelle et patrimoniale

Dans les années 2000 est lancé par la président du Conseil régional de la Martinique Serge Letchimy un projet de valorisation culturelle et patrimoniale de la Martinique[47], dirigé depuis 2011 par l'écrivain Patrick Chamoiseau notamment à Saint-Pierre et aux Trois-Îlets[48,49]. Il vise à faire participer les Martiniquais au balisage mémoriel de leur île pour se réapproprier leur espace et leur histoire (amérindienne, esclavagiste et coloniale).

Quelques dates relatives à l'histoire de la Martinique

- 130 apr. J.-C. : apparition des premiers habitants de la Martinique: les Arawaks originaire d'Amérique du Sud.
- 295 apr. J.-C. : les Arawaks sont décimés à la suite de l'éruption de la montagne Pelée.
- 400 apr. J.-C. : retour des Arawaks et repeuplement de l'île.
- 600 apr. J.-C. : une autre civilisation, les Caraïbes, originaire d'Amérique du Sud, exterminent les Arawaks et s'installent sur l'île pendant plusieurs siècles.
- 1502 : le 15 juin, Christophe Colomb découvre la Martinique. Il est le premier européen à découvrir officiellement l'île.
- 1635 : le 17 septembre, prise de possession de la Martinique par Pierre Belain d'Esnambuc, sous la protection de Richelieu, au nom de la Compagnie des Isles d'Amérique. Début de la colonisation française. P. Belain d'Esnambuc fonde la ville de Saint-Pierre.
- 1642 : Louis XIII autorise la déportation d'esclaves africains dans les colonies : début de la Traite des Noirs.
- 1669 : le Gouverneur Jean-Charles de Baas fonde la ville de Fort-Royal (aujourd'hui Fort-de-France).
- 1674, décembre : la Martinique est rattachée au Domaine du roi.
- 1766 : le 2 août naissance à Saint-Pierre de Louis Delgrès, chef de la résistance contre les troupes du général Antoine Richepanse envoyées par Napoléon 1er pour rétablir l'esclavage en Guadeloupe.
- 1793 : le 4 février, Jean Baptiste Dubuc signe les accords de Whitehall à Londres soumettant la Martinique aux Britanniques tant que la royauté ne sera pas rétablie en France. Cela garantit notamment le maintien de l'esclavage.
- 1794 : la Convention vote l'abolition de l'esclavage, qui ne sera pas appliquée à la Martinique du fait de l'occupation par les Anglais.
- 1794 : les Anglais débarquent en Martinique le 6 février. Le Général Rochambeau capitule le 21 mars après un siège de 43 jours au Fort Saint-Louis.
- De 1794 à 1802 : première occupation anglaise (8 ans) de la Martinique. Le Traité de Whitehall du 19 février 1794, signé à Londres entre la Couronne britannique et les grands planteurs de la Martinique, de la Guadeloupe et de Saint-Domingue, leur permet d'échapper à la Révolution française et de bloquer l'abolition de l'esclavage votée le mois précédent par la Convention.

- 1996 : l'égalité sociale entre la France et les DOM est réalisée sous la présidence de Jacques Chirac. Alignement du SMIC des DOM sur celui de la France métropolitaine.
- 1997 : l'indépendantiste Alfred Marie-Jeanne est élu député de la Martinique puis en 1998 il est élu président du Conseil Régional. C'est une première dans l'histoire de la Martinique.
- 2003 : une évolution institutionnelle été envisagée, dans laquelle le conseil régional et le conseil général fusionneraient en une institution unique. Cette proposition a été rejetée à 50,48 % (abstention 56,06 %) par le referendum du 7 décembre 2003.
- 2005 : le 16 août, crash d'un vol charter de la compagnie colombienne West Caribbean entre le Panama et la Martinique. L'avion un MD80 avec à son bord 160 passagers dont 152 martiniquais s'écrasait après quelques heures de vol à proximité de la ville de Machiques au Venezuela. Cet accident d'avion avait provoqué une grande émotion au sein de la population martiniquaise.
- 2008 : Aimé Césaire meurt le 17 avril à l'âge de 94 ans, il fut député et maire de Fort-de-France durant 56 ans. Des obsèques nationales lui ont été rendues le 20 avril 2008 à Fort-de-France, en présence du chef de l'État et devant plusieurs milliers de personnes réunies au stade Pierre Aliker.
- 2009 : grève générale du 5 février au 14 mars
- 2010 : les 10 et 24 janvier 2010, deux référendums sont organisés sur l'évolution statutaire et organisationnelle de la Martinique. La première question posé était « Approuvez-vous la transformation de la Martinique en une collectivité d'outre-mer régie par l'article 74 de la Constitution, dotée d'une organisation particulière tenant compte de ses intérêts propres au sein de la République ? ». Comme le résultat a été non à 78,89 % (abstention 44,65 %), un second vote a eu lieu avec pour intitulé : « Approuvez-vous la création en Martinique d'une collectivité unique exerçant les compétences dévolues au département et à la région tout en demeurant régie par l'article 73 de la Constitution ? ». Le résultat de ce second vote a été positif à 68,30 % (abstention 64,19 %). Le projet de loi organique visant à créer un statut de collectivité unique a été présenté en Conseil des ministres le 26 janvier 2011. Seules la Martinique et la Guyane seront dotées de ce statut. La première élection des membres des assemblées de Guyane et de Martinique aura lieu en décembre 2015[52].

ILLUMINATI, SORCIÈRES ET ORGIES Voici ce qui est célébré le 1er mai

13:57 Date d'inscription 01.05.2021.

Le 1886er mai ou Journée internationale du travail est une journée qui commémore les victimes des grandes manifestations ouvrières à Chicago en XNUMX, mais ce n'est pas la seule fête célébrée ce jour-là.

La nuit de Walpurgis est célébrée dans la nuit du 30 avril au 1er mai, et aujourd'hui elle est officiellement célébrée dans les traditions scandinaves, allemandes et baltes.

PHOTO : Wikipédia

Il tire son nom moderne de Sainte-Walbourge (710-779), une sainte et nonne connue pour son jeûne. C'est officiellement une fête chrétienne, mais depuis le XVIIe siècle, la croyance selon laquelle les sorcières se rassemblent la nuit de Walpurgis s'est répandue en Allemagne, et cette croyance est devenue plus tard une partie de la culture populaire.

Selon la légende, cette nuit-là, les sorcières se rassemblaient sur la montagne Broken (Allemagne) où elles communiquaient directement avec les dieux, organisaient des rituels de sacrifices sanglants et sacrifiaient souvent des enfants - c'était l'inspiration du "Faust" de Goethe.

cette journée est célébrée en l'honneur de la nature et de la fertilité. A cette occasion, des feux sont allumés, des jeux sont joués et des danses sont exécutées dans la partie de la nature autour du pilier autour de laquelle sont noués des rubans d'une couleur qui symbolise le phallus. Dans ces jeux rituels, les anciennes divinités démoniaques Baal, Green Man, Pan, Green George sont également mentionnées, et une orgie a eu lieu cette nuit-là.

À cause de tout ce qui précède, Anton Sandor Levey a fondé l'Église néo-sataniste ce jour-là. Comme cette institution est encore assez banale, la nuit est utilisée pour la drogue et les orgies.

Le mois de mai a été nommé d'après la déesse grecque de la fertilité Maia, qui est étroitement associée à la déesse romaine Bona Dea, qui est célébrée aujourd'hui. Ce n'est que le premier mai, dans l'Empire romain, que le sacrifice du sang a été dépénalisé, il était symbolisé par un serpent, et il était surtout célébré par les esclaves.

Un mélange intéressant de diverses manifestations prouve que les peuples anciens avaient des dates identiques de célébration de la nature, des forces positives et négatives et des dieux traditionnels.

In Her Own Image: Slave Women and the Re-imagining of the Polish Black Madonna as Ezili Dantò, the Fierce Female Lwa of Haitian Vodou

Abstract
This article negates the stereotypes of slave women in Haiti as weak, passive and compliant to colonialism and also challenges the archetype of hypersexualised bodies without minds. The Vodou Lwa Ezili Dantò is discussed with the aim to reclaim a cogitating Black female subjectivity. We evince that slave women's agency, their creativity and resistance to colonial paradigms were manifested in sacrality, as we explore how the Polish Black Madonna became Haitian Vodou spirit Ezili Dantò. We uncover what female metaphysics reveal about the memories, complexities and identities of the women responsible for their engendering.

Ezili Dantò is a Vodou spirit, what is known by Vodouisants as a lwa. She is the compassionate mother of the oppressed and abused, protector of women and children, victims of sexual assault, the forgotten and more recently, lesbians. Ezili is far more sensuous, not to mention cantankerous, than the Virginal Marian advocation from which she was inspired. Considered cho, a 'hot' spirit, Ezili Dantò is invoked for love spells, often those which involve sensuality and lust. She is thus often alluded to by Vodouisants as a lwa of love, jealously, passion and sex. As she is mute, those 'mounted' by her spirit, may lose the capacity to speak. They may dance erotically. She is equally known for her uncontrollable wrath and her vindictive nature. Voduisants relate that she exacts vengeance on those who harm women and children. Ezili's moods are myriad, plunging from the apogee of joy to the depths of despair. She is a complex character.

In this article, by unravelling the chronicle of Ezili Dantor, we reclaim the history of Haitian women as active agents in the inception of the Vodou religion. Little literature exists on women's role in forging faith in this context. Black women have frequently been ignored or ethnocentrically conceptualised in the literature that relates to the New World (Bush 1990; Gautier 2010; Dayan 1994; Kafka 1997; Morrissey 1989). Enslaved women have often been reduced to caricatures that portray them as passive, feeble victims compliant in their New World roles and in need of a protector. They have been reduced to their physicality, either as asexual stereotypes, such as the 'mammy', the nurturing mother, or the hardy fieldworker (Coppola 2012:28). Inversely, Black women have been hypersexualized as aggressive sexual predators whose appetites are 'at best inappropriate and, at worst, insatiable' (Hill Collins 1990:83). We still have not divested ourselves of the images of our dark colonial past, which perdure, as studies of depictions of Black women in Hip Hop, Hollywood, pornography and TV culture attest (Harris-Perry 2011; Williams 2011). Symbolically, violent representations remain crucial 'in the ideological justification for race, gender and class oppression' (Hill Collins 1990:68).

Many recently published historical accounts continue to neglect the role of women in the Haitian colony (Donnadieu 2014; Dillon and Drexler 2016; Geggus 2002; Girard 2014). Dayan is one of the few authors who has produced novel and probing work which examines the experiences of Haitian women during the colonial era, as well as exploring the meanings attributed to feminine Vodou lwas (Dayan 1994, 1998). Her work analyses these topics through a literary lens, as well as appealing to social psychology. Her primary focus is on how Haitian women have been portrayed diachronically in narrative fiction and how such work has informed, as well as reflected, the cultural imagination. There is also a growing, yet still limited corpus of historical work by authors such as Bush, Gautier, Morrisey and Kafka (ibid) that seeks to include women in accounts of colonial life. Yet, this offers no insights on women's religious roles nor their cultural heritage. Our article differs from existing scholarship, in that it takes an anthropological stance that seeks to understand Haitian women's histories, roles and cultural legacies through the exploration of the Vodou lwa, Ezili Danto.

We coalesce the examination of historical texts and colonial records with ethnographic fieldwork data to reinterpret existing research, focusing on themes salient to anthropological discourse. These are topics that have not been hitherto alluded to in such a context: agency, weapons of the weak and power from below. As anthropologists, we seek to trace cultural continuities in religious praxis, referring to African belief and social mores. As trained scholars of religion,[1] our angle differs from that of the above-cited authors. In this article, we explore what female metaphysics reveals about the agency, complexities, contradictions, memories and identities of the women responsible for their engendering, through the lens of Ezili. If as Feuerbach (1967:187) and Nietzsche (2010) assert 'man created God in his own image', then our question is how have female divinities been made in the image of women?

We evince that Ezili Dantò, like the spiritual practice she belongs to, goes beyond dichotomies. Modus significandi metamorphose with malleability. Ezili subverts binaries. She confounds gendered and racial stereotypes to provide palimpsestuous and polysemous meanings that are multilayered and multivocal. Above all, in describing the history of Ezili Dantò, we aim to illume 'the invisible Black woman' (Bush 1990) and reclaim her agency. We argue that if Ezili deeply resembles slave women it is because she is a sacred manifestation of the agency of those bondwomen. They sought psychically and physically through spirituality to resist the misfitting metaphysics and models of self and other imposed upon them by the colonialists. Today, women continue to appeal to Ezili to subvert binaries and question stereotypes.

As has been suggested, stereotypes entrenched in Cartesian dualism reduce Black women to a body without mind: 'the Other', who is both 'primitive' and 'animal-like' (Lyons and Lyons 2004:9). Represented as inferior, irrational, non-cogitating beings, these images have denied Black women their intelligence, agency, complexity and ability to creatively navigate, negate and challenge the mechanisms of power and the people who have sought to oppress them. The static stereotypes of passive female slaves that still infect much of the literature on the New World are a post-colonial carbuncle that continues to ooze colonial conceptions, thereby obfuscating the realities of Black women, that we seek to salvage.

A perusal of colonial archives (de Coulon 1797; Garran 1979-1814; Tarbé 1791) reveals that Black women were far from being passive and weak. Some history books written in the last decades on the colonisation of the Caribbean assert this, although they do not explore female faith. These largely remain a niche 'genre'. Usually penned by women (for women), this corpus seeks to counterpoise the innumerable narratives that treat slaves as a genderless mass. The authors aim to dislodge accounts that celebrate the victories of male leaders and that ignore the role of Black women in resistance, as well as their unique ordeals given the triple oppression of sexism, racism and economic hardship (Chancy 1997).

Much historical literature makes no mention of the denial of enslaved women's basic human right to bear and raise their children (Morrissey 1989). This combined with the rigours of the Code Noir, which compelled all slaves to be divested of their names, culture, and language, provides ample evidence for why it was 'arguably women who were more troublesome than men' thus more likely to seek to resist the reign of terror of their White Masters (Bush 1990:63). Whilst Toussaint l'Ouverture, Henri Christophe and Jean-Jacques Dessalines, to name but a few, are writ large in accounts, enslaved women 'have remained nameless' (Gautier 2010:221). The handful mentioned is briefly bracketed off as minor anecdotes, such as Suzanne Béliar, Toya Montou and Marie-Jeanne Lamartinière. Yet many bondwomen participated as freedom fighters in the Haitian revolution, commanding sections of the army that led to their independence from their slave masters. Vodou high priestesses termed Manbos — such as Cécile Fatiman another character who makes but a fleeting appearance in some accounts, whilst is discredited in others (Geggus 2002) — played a vital role in providing 'superhuman courage' and spiritual strength to insurgents (Gautier 2010:227). But what of the women whose names have not appeared in historical records? Our novel research proposes that Ezili, although revealingly a mute spirit, may provide some clues as to the complex personas of the women who engendered her, embodied her during possession and served her spirit.

The enslaved woman's participation in Vodou, we propose, was an act of resistance. It was a means by which to assert her spirituality. It also comprised a creative and ratiocinating tactic to reformulate and refashion her own conceptions of gender and personhood through manipulation of multiplicities of meaning. To participate in any rituals other than Catholic was punishable by whipping and branding. Furthermore, anyone apprehended at a gathering already branded would be sentenced to death. We must surmise that women who took part in Vodou rituals were undeniably the obverse of the stereotypes of passive and simplistic Black women that abound.

These women, despite being violated, tortured and exploited, refused to be immured by the subordinate roles imposed upon them by their slave masters. They escaped the latter's clutches as through possession they negated the boundaries of personhood and agency, as Janice Boddy has described in reference to the Zar Cult of Northern Sudan (Boddy 1989). When Haitian women were mounted by lwa, such as Ezili, they interrogated and reassessed notions of self and other, as well as defying colonial authority structures. As Covington-Ward suggests 'the spiritual realm often provides access to an alternative form of authority through which people can upset the prevailing social order through effective use of their bodies' (Covington-Ward 2016:11). Likewise, as Castor has described in reference to Ifà worship in Trinidad, rites of possession create sites of social action where communities can express forms of spiritual citizenship (Castor 2017). Much like in Trinidad, in Haiti, through Vodou rituals, women could honour the lives and appease the spirits of those lost in the slave trade outside of the proper rituals and far from home, reclaiming social justice.

We will commence by providing a brief history of Haiti, as well as supplying a description of some of the many difficulties endured by bondwomen. We will also offer a brief background on Vodou. Information will be presented on the religious and cultural contexts from whence the slaves originated so as to clearly draw parallels and furnish the reader with a frame of reference that will situate our argument on Ezili. The latter will be elaborated in part two of this article.

The mixed methodology that is the basis of this article, consisted of perusal of colonial archives and historical records, digital and traditional ethnography, participant observation as well as formal and informal interviews with Voduisants, both online and in person. One of us has worked in person with a wide-range of Vodouisants since 2001, most of whom of Haitian origins, in Latin America and the USA, namely in New Orleans and Florida. The other researcher conducted digital ethnography joining numerous Vodou-forums (such as forumhaiti.com), groups on Facebook (such as Katiopa Kamit) and other networking sites. They also interviewed various Vodou-practising Haitian immigrants in Canada who were part of the cultural group la Maison d'Haiti, based in Montreal, Canada. The Anthropologist in our team of two, is an Africanist by training, specialising in West African religious traditions and the Religious Studies scholar is a Brazilianist who has published extensively on Afro-Brazilian Umbanda and Candomblé. As most of the slaves originally hailed from West and Central Africa, we also used our knowledge of these traditions and cross-referenced resources from this region, as well as Brazil and Cuba, to gain deeper perspectives and seek to understand the longue durée of religious activities and cultural values. We reinterpreted pre-existing research on Vodou as well as historical accounts based on our mixed methodological approach.

The Ineffable Barbarity of Slavery

If Hispaniola's production was prodigious, it was due to the barbarous exploitation of slaves who initially received no emolument, and later were paid a pittance. Between 1681 and 1791, over 860,000 Africans consisting of men, women and children were shipped to Saint-Domingue. Multitudinous people were required to work the plantations, after the Indigenous population had been decimated. Due to the inhumane conditions, many Africans died both in Haiti, and also aboard the slave ships. These were floating concentration camps. Sailors cognisant of the atrocities adopted the aphorism 'Beware and take care of the Bight of Benin; For the one that comes out, There are forty go in' (Rediker 2008:17).

Africans of variegated classes, ethnic groups, ages and genders, usually snatched during formal warfare, informal raids or kidnapping were sold into slavery. Chained together, they endured the atrocities of imprisonment, violence, rape, disease and premature death. A plethora of people peppered the plantations from across West and West Central Africa, including Senegambia and the Gold Coast (Moreau de Saint-Méry 1797). Egregious working conditions, paltry nutrition, poor shelter, interminable work hours, corporal and capital punishment entailed that life expectancy was shockingly short.

The Code Noir legitimised the dehumanisation of slaves, legally defining slaves and their offspring as the chattel of their owners. It forbade them from speaking their own language, utilising their own names — new ones were allotted — and from practising their cultural mores, including their own religions. Large gatherings of slaves were prohibited. Estate owners were encouraged to baptise their slaves and compelled to instruct their slaves in Catechism. Likewise, planters purposely parted newly arrived Africans from members of their cohort. They did so to ensure that linguistic, cultural and communal bonds were severed, seeking to create a tabula rasa upon which the non-identity of slave could be inscribed. Nevertheless, far from assimilating, relinquishing and becoming 'docile' bodies, many slaves, both men and women, overtly and covertly resisted.

The Aberrant Position of the Bondwoman

Black women have frequently been ignored in accounts of resistance in Haiti. Many history books on the Caribbean appear to omit the role of women tout court (Buck-Morss 2009; Coupeau 2008; Donnadieu 2014; Dillon and Drexler 2016; Dubois 2012; Geggus 2002; Girard 2014). Their sui generis difficulties, namely the triple oppression and intersections of sexism, racism and economic hardship are overlooked. As outlined, bondwomen have been portrayed as passively accepting their New World roles. In some academic scholarship, such as that by the anthropologist Peter Wilson, they have been described as 'more readily and firmly attached' to White society than their male counterparts (Wilson 1973). Nonetheless, perusal of colonial records reveals that Black women were frequently punished for their everyday acts of resistance, such as refusal to work or purposeful sabotage of tasks (Bush 1990:56; Garran 1979-1814; Tarbé 1791)[2] thereby negating views of compliant Black women. Kafka (1997) has combed colonial records noting that women featured in many protests against abominable working conditions, sometimes they were the leaders or acted alone as agitators. We suggest in this article that women also took active roles in Vodou, embodying lwa, such as Ezili Danto, who served as a means to assert themselves and contest colonial impositions.

The colonial literature of the epoch reveals the misogynoir of the White colonisers who hypersexualised Black woman. When visible, they were only so as silent bodies that were depicted as 'dark and debased' (Dayan 1994:8). White women were in contradistinction the apotheosis of the Victorian values of submissiveness, piety and purity. Women of colour in the Caribbean have also been depicted as possessing 'strong reproductive bodies, apt for the hard work in plantations', once again 'representing the opposite of the weakness and delicacy of the White female body' (Ruiz 2012:3).

Although forced sexual relations were common, some slave women learnt the value of sexual relationships with White men. We cannot discount that in some circumstances actual amorous affairs developed (Gautier 2010:150). Nevertheless, such relationships might be pursued by Black women as a strategy to improve their modus vivendi (Morrissey 1989:147*)*. Although bondwomen might engage in relationships with their White masters to reap financial benefits, or in the hopes of being manumitted, often they were intimidated into such sexual relationships. Moreau de Saint-Méry, whilst reiterating the myth of hypersexualized African women, for example as resorting to their 'native charms' to get their way, acknowledges that for male slaves 'the honour of their wives and chastity of their daughters were matters of the slightest consideration for the masters' (1797:39).

Although the Code Noir proscribed mutilation, it condoned whipping. Total or semi-nudity was enforced during whip-lashings. Bondwomen were often subjected to the sadistic, twin torture of rape and whipping. Rape is the ultimate form of 'dehumanisation, objectification, and domination' (Anderson 2012:625). According to the colonial paradigm, Jezebel stereotypes not only vindicated the commodification of bodies in the profitable business venture that was slavery but also furthermore justified the sexual abuse of women by White slave-owners (Harris-Perry 2011:55–56). The labelling of Black women as promiscuous and lascivious exonerated masters from rape, which was ipso facto not a crime.

It is likely that Black women rather than tractable, would have been more zealous than Black male slaves to resist the colonial system. Although some might have had privileged positions through relationships with White men, the majority were at the nadir of the skin and gender hierarchy that was the stanchion of colonial ideology. Many Black male slaves had low paying jobs in construction and agriculture. Nevertheless, numerous men were given access to skilled labour as sugar boilers, valets and watchmen (Moitt 2001:43). Such roles could potentially improve their status and economic autonomy. Black women had no access to such roles, were economically persecuted, and paid less than their male counterparts for the same work.

[2] See also how slave women were said to have plotted to have their white masters killed in National Archives, Paris, D/XXV/28, p.287, 'Troubles de Saint Domingue: Règlement de Police sur la culture et les cultivateurs, Procès-verbaux relatifs à l'exécution de ces règlements et autres pièces au soutien des opérations et de la correspondances des commissaires civiles, février 1794' (28 Feb. 1794).

During the early days of slavery, plantation owners deemed pregnancy an impetus to production, as the bondwoman would be unable to work as productively. It was customary for slave owners to beat pregnant woman, delivering blows to their wombs, thereby ensuring miscarriage. In the French West Indies, women were often staked to the ground next to a hollow and whipped until the unborn child fell into the trough (Gautier 2010:86). Miscarriages were frequent due to gruelling toil. When a woman did manage to complete her pregnancy, slave owners seldom demonstrated an interest in ensuring children's well-being. Bondwomen were deprived of the right to raise their children. Their young might at any time be wrested from them and sold to other plantation owners. The father might also be traded to another planter. Paternity was disregarded by slaveholders. Marriage between slaves was illicit. The fact that Ezili Danto, as we will describe, is often depicted as a wrathful mother, ready to protect her child at all costs, we believe, reflects this dark history and the onerous experiences of motherhood in the Caribbean colony.

Women, however, did not blindly accept such circumstances. They resisted in multifarious ways. Although, due to ties to children and the dangers of the road, women were less likely than men to resort to marronage, they found other creative ways to manifest their agency. Some covertly resisted, feigning sickness to escape work hours or intentionally damaging crops. Others mounted official protests.[3] Some joined resistance groups. Others sought undercover roles in the slave revolt, spying on their masters, poisoning their food or stealing supplies to source the slave army.

Vodou formed an important mode of resistance. The revolution began in 1791 with a Vodou ceremony at Bois Caïman that was led by a female priestess, or Manbo, Cécile Fatiman, who led proceedings, alongside Boukman Dutty, an oungan or male priest. Fatiman has been excluded from many accounts that rely on colonial records and by historians who omit the role of women from chronicles, such as Jean Fouchard (2017). Yet accounts, such as Etienne Charlier (1954), that rely on the testimony of descendants of participants and analysis of local lore confirm Fatiman's presence. We were told by numerous devotees that during the ceremony — and this claim is supported in many academic accounts, as well as frequently depicted by Haitian artists — that Fatiman was mounted by Ezili that very night. According to Karine, a Voduisant from Orlando, 'the manbo started dancing listlessly, mounted by the spirit, Ezili Dantò. At the end of the ceremony she sacrificed a black pig to Ezili for protection. All the attendees were then invited to anoint themselves with the blood as they vowed to unite and kill their White oppressors.' Despite her central role in that ceremony, Cécile Fatiman disappears from historical narratives and like the nimieties of silent Black Haitian women, is effaced. Nevertheless, we argue that an analysis of Ezili Dantò will allow for a better understanding of the women who created her largely in their own image.

[3] For example, National Archives, Paris, D/XXV/37, 'Troubles de Saint Domingue: Lettres et Pétitions de divers individus et autres pièces adressées aux Cer Polverel, l'un des Commissaires N(aux) Civiles, mars 1794' (3 March 1794).

Vodou Vivified: a New Faith in a New World

Vodou must be understood as born from a cocktail of convictions that coalesced in the New World. Vodou has been misconstrued and portrayed as barbaric, bacchanalian, orgiastic and even satanic. The 'imagined religion' which permeates Western popular culture has little to do with the actual practice serving 'as a venue for the expression of more-or-less undiluted racial anxieties, manifested as lurid fantasies about Black peoples' (McGee 2012:232). Tellingly, practitioners have typically chosen not to objectify Vodou as a religion. They state that they 'serve the spirits'. Static definitions of religion demand self-reflexivity. These reflect our preconceptions rather than emic understandings that, as in the case of Vodou, involve ambivalence, and contradiction (Bellegarde-Smith and Michel 2006).

Haitian Vodou's inception commenced with communities of captives assembling together. They sought succour in spirituality, wishing to preserve and celebrate their mystical metaphysics, cohering congeries of complex ritual acts and beliefs. Faced with onerous conditions, captives sought to propitiate spiritual forces to intervene. More importantly, the repressive context of plantation life prevented them from expressing themselves. Africans 'nurtured the desire for both physical and cultural freedom' hence they utilised whatever 'means were available to them to preserve and perpetuate their sense of self', their cosmologies and ontological weltanschauung (Edmonds and Gonzalez 2010:113). Despite the interdictions of the Code Noir, which penalised large gatherings of slaves and prohibited African spiritual practices, captives furtively slunk into the womb of the night to meet in the woods and perform their rituals and dances in secrecy.

Initially, captives hailed from disparate regions of the African continent which had diverging beliefs and dissimilar languages. This made spoken communication arduous. Nevertheless, their spiritual practices had common elements, such as spirit possession, supplication and sacrifices to spirits related to nature, ethnobotany, ancestor worship as well as rituals led by male and female priestesses, as we have previously evinced (Our Publication 2003). Due to such affinities, religion comprised a sacred lingua franca. Vodou also allowed during what Westerners call possession, — a term which Vodouisants do not employ — for those mounted by spirits to enact different personas and express their own unique conceptions of self, gender, place and time.

Many academics have chosen to focus on the fons et origo of Vodou, which points to the multiplicity of ethnicities and creeds that were meshed to create a spiritual practice that has been compared to gumbo. Some scholars, such as de Heusch and Métraux, have insisted on the Africanicité of Vodou (Métraux 1959; de Heusch 1989).[4] To make such statements is to undermine the creativity and agency of those diverse people brought together in Haiti who from myriad influences created new spiritualities. Such assertions also shirk the Amerindian influences in Vodou and overlook the Freemason and Catholic elements which were ingeniously intermingled.

Lwa, or spirit entities, come from three main families, or nanchon (nations): Rada, Petro and Ghede. Rada spirits are said to be of Dahomeyan origins. According to Voduisants, they are calm and cool. Ghede are the spirits of deceased ancestors. Ancestor worship, as detailed, is ubiquitous across much of Africa. Petro lwa were greatly influenced by Kongolese and Angolan cosmology.[5] Ezili Dantò is a Petro lwa. The Petro spirits are known to be 'fiery' and 'angry' (Edmonds and Gonzalez 2010:111). Whereas the drumbeats played for Rada spirits are measured and timely, those of the Petro are strident and syncopated. It is during drumming that spirits are said to mount the participants who are their horses, chwal. The appellation of Vodou rituals reveals founders came from disparate African nations.[6] Such rites generally take place to seek advice, healing and to perform service to the spirits.

In her Image

A lwa in Haitian Vodou is a spirit. There are numerous lwa, they are also known as 'misté', mysteries, or 'anvizib', invisibles. They have many manifestations which evoke the metaphysics of the multiplicity of personhood. Lwa are spirits who serve as intermediaries between the Supreme Creator, Bondye (Bon Dieu, God). He is a deus otiosus, a distant figure that cannot be propitiated as lwa such as Ezili Dantò can. Lwa aid human beings in their daily affairs and may carry messages from the dead. The primary medium of approaching lwa is through ceremonies led by priestesses, manbo and priests, houngan. Each lwa has its own distinct persona, specific dances, drum patterns, songs and tastes for particular worldly items. They also have their own vévé,[7] used to summon them. Lwa must not merely be prayed to, indeed Vodou is not so much about belief but rather praxis (Bellegarde-Smith and Michel 2013:463). A Vodou practitioner must make sacrifices to influence the spirits and enter into a relationship of reciprocity with them so that petitions will be looked upon favourably. Experienced initiates, hounsi, are regularly mounted by lwas during rituals, enabling them to take on the characteristics and powers of that spirit so that the mysteries may be spoken.

Lwa, also may mean image. How have female lwas been fashioned in the image of those women that hewed them from their memories, experiences, desires, ontologies and need for agency? It is beyond the scope of this paper to explore the innumerable female lwas. Nevertheless, Ezili Dantò, her story, iconography, philosophy and performance, may offer us a glimpse into the past to unseal the hushed casket of the women who have long been silenced. After all, 'Haitian history has been written by men' (Dayan:17) about men, as we previously detailed.

During slavery, as outlined, African women were subject to ineffable exploitation and dehumanisation by colonisers both physically and mentally, forcing them to abandon the structures, languages, customs and cultures whereby they could convey their sense of self and experiences (Coppola 2012:31). Yet equally by omitting enslaved women's unique ordeals from the historical record, they have been depersonalised, muted and denied agency. When Black women have appeared in literature and colonial records, it is as a hypersexualised, corporal presence or the simplistic mammy, in toto as 'African/Caribbean woman as body without mind and as primitive "other"' (Anim-Addo 2007:11). Our examination of the lwa, Ezili Dantò, aims to counterpoise this tendency and display what Philip terms 'thinking Black female subjectivity'(Philip 1997:135).

[5] Indeed, many lwa bear names of Kongo origin such as Simbi, Nkita and Mbumba, spirits that are well-known in the sacred practices of lower Zaire (see de Heusch 1989: 293).

[6] For example, Rit Seneka indicates its origins from Senegal, as does Rit Bizango, which refers to Bissango Island. Rit Boumba which refers to a river in Cameroun whilst Rit Ibo refers to the Igbo people of southern Nigeria (Jil and Jil 2009: 160).

[7] These are geometrical patterns that represent the lwa generally used to invoke them.

Ezili, and other female lwa, could be said to have been 'made in the image' of captive women, allowing them to articulate themselves. As Barber evokes, in her work on the Yoruba and their connection to their Orisa 'the idea that gods are made by men, not men by gods' is not only a 'sociological truism' but also a 'central impulse to devotion' (Barber 1981:724). It is women who made and to this today continue to be mounted by Ezili, a lwa whose complex, shifting, multifaceted persona goes beyond simplistic depictions of Black women to evince an omnifarious conception of personhood, that is unbounded by binaries and interrogates the categories created by colonial, Cartesian and patriarchal paradigms. Ezili must not only be construed as a spirit who empowered women who had no rights nor voice but also as a sentient, contemplative mode of self-generated resistance and expression. Before we analyse Ezili Dantò, we must first recall the origins of the women who engendered her, served her and adored her as this will allow us to understand their context and how Ezili represents continuity and change.

Herstories

Once again, the roles that enslaved women would have maintained in their homelands have been neglected in historical accounts. Thanks to the hard work of female scholars such as Dayan, Bush inter alia, we now have a solid corpus that relates the ordeals of slave women in the Caribbean. Yet there remains scant speculation about, or investigation into, the origins of these women. This may be due to the lack of hard evidence detailing the contextual origins of slave women, however, given the records maintained by slave traders, it does not take a vast leap of imagination nor hyperbolic indulgence to hypothesise.

In pre-colonial West and West Central Africa, from whence many of the slaves hailed, we are aware that women played an active, participatory role in many societies, which anthropologists have confirmed in their studies of the region. As Farrar points out, 'female title-holders placed in the highest levels of the political order were a common feature of ancient and pre-colonial African political systems' (Farrar 1997:579). Some of the Caribbean bondwomen would have originally also been slaves in Africa before their departure to the New World, since some communities chose to provide traders with their extant servants. Yet historical records attest that many women were captured during informal warfare and raiding. These bondwomen, therefore, originated from a wide range of sectors within African society (Geggus 1982; Rediker 2008) and indubitably would have had positions of power in their native lands.

Research into the native regions of these slaves confirms that not all but numerous women in West and West Central Africa maintained important roles politically, economically and spiritually. Such as amongst the matrilineal Akan peoples, where the Ohemmaa, Queen Mother, was not only responsible for electing the king but also under certain circumstances might assume full control of central authority thereby becoming the 'king', the Omanhene (Rattray 1969:81–85). In Benin, women held active, combative roles and fought during conflicts against outside aggressors. Much has written about the female regiments who came to be known as 'the Amazons of Dahomey' (Law 1993). Women also occupied important roles in their religious traditions, such as amongst the Yoruba where Iyaláwo and Ìyánífá, priestesses, were highly respected for their mystical powers. Even today amongst the Yoruba, 'women possess certain extraordinary power equal to or greater than that of the gods or ancestors' reflected in terms such as 'our mothers, the gods of society, owners of the world' noting that this power can be 'beneficent or destructive' (Drewal and Drewal 1983). In the kingdom of Kongo, elite women exercised indirect as well as direct power, controlling entire sections of the country, whilst in the Angolan empires of Ndongo and Matamba, women took formal control of the state (Thornton 2006). As Bádéjo avouches, an analysis of mythicoreligious iconography, cosmology and oral literary traditions reveal that African women enveloped 'a complex matrix of power' (Bádéjo 1998:94).

It is impossible to confirm, and we cannot generalise as per all captive women, nevertheless it is unquestionable that some African women enslaved in Haiti came from societies where concepts of gender and gendered roles were entirely dissimilar to those subordinate roles they had to take on in the Haitian colony, cultural communities wherein women yielded economic, spiritual and/or political power. They also hailed from societies where concepts of personhood were vastly different. As anthropologists, Comaroff and Comaroff (2001) have evinced, the notion of the person as circumscribed and static is distinctly European. African people have other metaphysical models, these are often dynamic, whereby personhood is processual, rather than a mode of 'being' it is a mode of 'becoming'. The idea of 'autoplexy' to describe notions of African personhood, suggests 'playing and shifting with a multiplicity of …roles and identity patterns' (ibid: 273). Amongst the Akan, we also note conceptions of 'the multiplicity of the self' which are central to Vodou (Strongman 2008).

By exploring the iconography and personality of Ezili Dantò, and analysing it, we can better understand how this lwa provided a sense of continuity for slave women, allowing them to encapsulate memories of their homelands whilst also providing a means to record their actual experiences. Importantly, this lwa was a means for women to resist possession by the White man, his ontologies, and subservient roles thereby eschewing and, even if but temporarily, escaping physical as well as metaphysical impositions. As Boddy suggests, possession may negate the boundaries of personhood and agency and alter 'women's perceptions of themselves, each other' as women experience 'formlessness' (Boddy 1989:6, 274). As we will detail, Ezili is transformative, yet also transcends Cartesian and binary models, whilst re-appropriating positions of powerlessness to reclaim agency and mystery for herself. This divulges much about the women who created her. As Levinskaya has pointed out, religions do not exist primevally but are 'man-made' (Levinskaya 1993). In this case Ezili is 'woman-made'.

Ezili

The name Ezili is believed to derive from the Fon word Azlí, which refers to a lake and to the Vodun spirit of the lake. But Ezili is not of Fon origin alone. Water spirits are ubiquitous across Africa. As van Stipriaan points out 'in West-African … religions, water spirits, which are more often than not female, have played or still play a prominent role' (van Stipriaan 2003). As these aquatic spirits traversed the water, they encountered local beliefs and were morphed by those who conceived of them for their needs. Equally, Taino Amerindians venerated a spirit of fresh water and fecundity, known as Atabey. Her characteristics also imbued this lwa. Born on Haitian soil, Ezili is the spiritual child of many mothers of myriad origins and she has multiple manifestations that, existing simultaneously, attest to the complexities of her makers. Ezili, like her Taino and African ancestors, has long been associated with water, and even in the eyes of devotees today is a symbol of sexual fertility, a cosmic womb, a mother of the world (Desmangles 1992:131).

Ezili exists in multiple guises, Ezili Freda, Lasyrenn and Granne Ezili to name but a few aspects of this lwa. It is beyond the scope of this paper to consider them. Our focus is Ezili Dantò. Her surname, Dantò, we were told, is said to come from D'En tort, which means Ezili of the 'wronged'. This evinces her distinctness as per other manifestations of Ezili, as she is the lwa who wrathfully exacts vengeance for those who have been maligned and abused. From our understandings of the conditions that slave women found themselves entrapped in, Ezili clearly represents their anger at their situation and likely allowed them to express social justice through the spiritual realm by honouring the memories of those harmed.[8]

Her story commences in the midst of the slave revolts. Polish legionnaires were sent by Bonaparte to quell the unrest that was shaking France's richest colony. The war was cruel. The Poles garbed inappropriately for, and unaccustomed to the tropical climes, were decimated by the rebellious slaves, as well as by diseases such as yellow fever. Numerous Poles, treated poorly by the French, switched sides as the revolution progressed. They brought with them their most important religious icons, notably Our Lady of Czestochowa (Rzeznik 2016), one of many Black Madonnas of mediaeval Europe (Fig. 1). There is no consensus as to why these Virgins were depicted with dark skin. Arguments vary, some suggest that the images may have been created to match the appearance of Indigenous people or that they were blackened over time due to smoke and ageing. Vodouisants, as we have seen, were banned under the Code Noir, from propitiating their own spirits. Ever innovative, they re-appropriated the Catholic saints whom they were encouraged to venerate, as part of the Vodou pantheon of spirits. Notwithstanding, they did so not through a Christian optic but rather transubstantiated these saints syncretically into representations of a lwa. This meant slaves could attend church and appear to be following the Code Noir, whilst mentally invoking Vodou spirits. As we have previously detailed Damballah, for example, the sky lwa whose vévé is dioscuric serpents, was syncretised with St. Patrick, who in Christian iconography is depicted with a snake at his feet (Our publication).

Gazing at the visage of Our Lady of Czestochowa, it is not effortful to imagine her tantalising appeal to Vodouisants, in particular female initiates, who identified her as one of the many aspects of Ezili, naming her Ezili Dantò (Cvetnić 2017). The chromolithographs of the mater salvatoris depict a Black-skinned Virgin, with two long scars on her cheek. In the crook of her left arm she protectively clutches a Black Christ child. Her expression is stoic, yet compassionate. The wounded visage of Our Lady of Czestochowa must have carried potent significance to the Haitian people who had been physically and psychologically scarred at the hands of the colonisers. In the horrors of the colony, where mothers struggled to protect their children from their [8] As Castor points out in her work on Ifà worship in Castor (2017, 152).

Fig. 1 Our Lady of Czestochowa

White masters and might be separated from them at any time, the Black Madonna's tender and defensive stance to her child evoked important emotions for slave women. These are surely what led Vodouisants to ascribe particular powers and characteristics to Ezili that spoke of their trials and tribulations.

Noegenesis: A Sacred Multiplicity of Her

Our gods, goddesses, and deities represent our trajectories, memories, vulnerabilities, possibilities and the incomprehensibilities we encounter. They are a bricolage of that which we esteem, the desires and dreams of innumerable people and their fight for social justice. Haitian women engendered and embodied Ezili Dantò, in order that specific notions of femininity be honoured, explored and kept in existence. Through the spirit medium of Ezili they inscribed their memories, evinced their values, contesting the identities imposed upon them as they represented womanhood in its multiplicities, contradictions and mysteries.

Lewis argues that women's possession cults are 'thinly disguised protest movements' in societies where women are oppressed (Lewis 1989, 26). Yet although possession may prima facie appear as social resistance, when women receive the spirits, this may allow them to 'continually rework contradictions' and achieve healing through 'depersonalization and reconstitution' (Comaroff 1985:226, 232). In a state of trance, women may, through mind-displacing manipulation, experience multiple subjectivities since spirits 'obliterate their mounts' consciousness in order to fully articulate a wholly "other" persona in the act of possession' allowing them to 'to mediate, subvert, or reinforce… relations, conventions, and contradictions that are often the echoes of … her own muted voice' (Masquelier 2001:157–158). Likewise, we must recall the 'importance of bodily movement for carrying cultural ideals and histories', and passing these on to others, noting how bodily gestures may reclaim power for communities 'as a way of remembering' (Covington-Ward 2016:13) thereby allowing communities to prevent their subaltern stories from being erased.

Slave women in Haiti were dehumanised. Ezili, we argue, was a tool for women to express their many facets and histories. They were robbed of their identities, forced to be subordinate to colonialists who exploited them, abused them, raped them, stole their children to sell to others. The Virginal figure of the Black Madonna replete with her Christian chorography bore little relevance to the experiences of slave women. They re-appropriated her, translating her into their own terms to map new mythologies and metaphysics. Through this noegenesis, the Black Madonna became Ezili Dantò.

Whereas in Poland, Our Lady of Czestochowa was claimed to be 'Healer of the Sick, Mother of Mercy and Queen of Poland', in Haiti she was re-imagined as a protector of women and children, as well as the sexually abused as devotees across the Americas have explained to us. Today Ezili continues to have this reputation. She is described by Vodouisants as a fierce mother who protects people, and this has been extended, as we were informed, to the LGBTQ community in more modern times. Yet we should not question the assumption that lesbians did not exist during the colonial era and might have been inexorably drawn into possession by Ezili. We should recall, that even if the term lesbian is a Western construct, that unlike in colonial, Western, Victorian society, in pre-Colonial African communities, such as amongst the so-called 'Amazons of Dahomey', the women warriors of Benin — a region where many slaves were captured from same-sex female relationships were common, as were woman to woman marriages (Blackwood and Wieringa 1999:42).

Mary, as a spiritual mother, was meek, mild and full of mercy. Ezili whilst gentle and compassionate with women and children, was synchronously envisaged as a battle-axe who vindictively exacted vengeance on those who harmed women, children and the abused. Ezili is sacrality suffused with the storm of anger of women who suffered ineffable physical and mental cruelty. The women who were beaten, who were raped, who lost their children, whether to miscarriage or to estate owners who sold them to others and who indubitably maltreated those children. Slave women could neither forgive nor forget, thus neither can Erzulie. She bears 'the traces of torture and revenge' (Dayan 1998:35). Ezili Ge Rouje (red eyes), as Laetitia, a Haitian immigrant living in Florida explained to us, is the shadow of Dantò, Ezili at her most bellicose. She represents abused, irate women over the ages. Ezili is depicted with sanguineous sockets seeping blood and animus. Indeed, we were told by Laetitia, as well as other Voduisants, that one of Ezili's colours, aside from navy blue, is blood red.

In the Polish image, Our Lady of Czestochowa wears seven jewels in her crown. Likewise, Dantò's characteristic number is seven. In Christianity, the number seven is of import, referring to the seven sacraments, the seven deadly sins, the seven joys and sorrows of Mary. Yet again, this element is morphed into maternal terms by bondwomen, whilst also disclosing their dolor, as well as determination. We were told by numerous female Vodouisants both on-line and in person, that Ezili's seven jewels refer to her beloved seven children, but also alludes to the seven jabs of a knife she endured, as the song 'Seven Stabs' relates. This song is well known by most Vodouisants and we recorded variations of the same verses in various locations across the Americas:

Set koud kouto, set koud pwenyad
Prete'm dedin a pou m'al vomi sang mwen
Sang ape koule
Seven stabs of the knife, seven stabs of the dagger
Hand me that basin, I am going to vomit blood
The blood runs down

Prima facie this appears to be a song about Ezili's defeat. As we were told, far from this, it depicts the lwa's power and obdurate ferocity. Notwithstanding multiple stab wounds, she can still hold a basin, vomit blood and persevere. Another song that we noted used during rites related to Dantò also evokes her determination and belligerent nature:

J*ou ma' koule*
Jou ma' koule
Jou ma' koule
Map vomi sang mwen bay yo
The day I am run down
The day I am run down
The day I am run down
I will vomit my blood and give it to them

This song describes how even when worn down and defeated, justice will still be meted out by Ezili. Kerline described to us how 'handing a basin of her blood to someone shows how vexed she is', it also symbolises her readiness to retaliate. The mythology of the seven stabs wrests victory from defeat. We believe that, if seen through the lens of memory, this song could well be interpreted as a record of the torments endured by bondwomen. At a deeper level, it screams defiantly of the mental as well as physical strength of the Black slave mothers, who contested the power of the colonialists whose abuse could spill their blood, break their bones but not crush their spirits. In singing these lines, Vodouisants continue to embody and honour the memory of abused slave women who resisted being beaten down, mentally, even if they were abused physically by slave drivers.

Polish sources have various hypotheses as to why the portrait of Our Lady of Czestochowa has a scarred cheek. One of the commonly recounted explanations is that these were inflicted by irate Hussites who in 1430 attacked the Pauline Monastery where the icon was housed (Niedźwiedź 2010). Denouncing Marian devotion, they pillaged the shrine, desecrating the Black Madonna with three sword slashes to her right cheek. Haitian mythology has again altered this account to co-align with realities of life in the colony. Voduisants frequently related to us that Ezili Dantò's scar is the result of wounds she received fighting in the Haitian Revolution. Women fought alongside men. Debbie, a Vodouisant from Orlando, told us that Ezili Dantò is believed to have possessed Manbo Marinette, a female revolutionary who fought in the war for independence against France who she has now become syncretised with.

Manbo Marinette's name means dry wood. It is recounted that Marinette was burnt alive for fighting against the French and for her part in the Bois Caiman ceremony that launched the revolution. Marinette is symbolised by Anima Sola, the Catholic image of a female soul amidst the flames of purgatory. Joan of Arc is also used to represent Marinette. As Debbie related to us, the legend is that the Manbo's tongue was cut out by her own people, who feared she would give away her secrets if captured. Those possessed by her spirit can only utter 'ke-ke-ke' or 'de-de-de'. Like Ezili, Marinette is mute.

The fact that slave women chose to create and venerate a spirit that cannot speak, speaks volumes about the muzzled voice of Black women, who, as has been described, have long been depicted as a weak, wordless, non-cogitating, corporal mass. Yet in the guise of Ezili, bondwomen re-appropriated silence as strength, for her secrets cannot be stolen. Her thoughts cannot be extracted and are hers alone. As anthropologists such as Ardener (1975), and Hill (2010) have contended as a 'muted group', women appear inarticulate in the context of their surroundings, as well as vis-à-vis the men who appear to dominate them. Yet women manifest other ways to express themselves. Hill's work on female Sufi religious leaders has revealed that the dissociation of women from their voices in West Africa 'owes … much to West African traditions of power and nobility' (Hill 2018: 205). In Western phallogocentric schemas, the voice has been equated with power. Nevertheless, alternative paradigms evince the prepotency of not needing to speak to deliver a message. This simultaneously evokes the ambiguity and remoteness of silence, avowing a transcendental intimation beyond the mundane modulations of vocalisation, and moreover, in that which cannot be defined, allowing for the preservation of mysteries. And of course, lwa are known as 'misté'.[9] Ezili Dantò despite, or perhaps because of, her tonguelessness is one of the most beloved and revered misté of them all.

Notwithstanding her mysticism, Ezili also evokes the multiplicity of changing sentiments of the slave women who shaped her. As we have seen Ezili's sentiments include rage and maternal love. She is a cho, a 'hot' spirit of passion, vengeance, as well as jealousy. Some Voduisants related that the lwa's scars are the result of a quarrel with her sister Ezili Freda, over a lover. She stabbed Freda with her dagger, who then scarred her with the poniard. Contrary to the Marian advocation from which she was engendered, Ezili Dantò is sensuous and passionate. She is often invoked in love spells, as well as supplicated for conception and childbirth. In Vodou, the Christ child that features in the Polish icon is transformed into Ezili Dantò's lover and son, Ti-Jean, according to some Vodou practitioners. Yet we were also told, that for some, the babe is considered her daughter Anais, also known as Ti Koukoun. Aside from her possible love affair with Ti Jean, Ezili is said to be married to the lwa known as Simbi Makaya, who is the master magician, or Ogou, who is the lwa of power, depending on the Vodou variant. She is intimately linked to the realm of reproduction. Vodouisants see no contradiction between her purity, virginity and her sensuality, promiscuity. Virginity in Vodou cosmology is understood unorthodoxly, rather than a physical condition it implies beauty, a transcendence that 'she is of another world, another reality' (Deren 1970:144). One undefiled by the corruptions of the profane mundane.

Furthermore, as Bádéjọ points out Western, patriarchal paradigms 'confused the relationship between women and nature by demanding that women be virginal and motherly at the same time' (Bádéjo 1998:101). Ezili Dantò displaces unnatural models of femininity replacing them with the lived realities of slave women. This includes not only enjoyment of one's sexuality but also inversely contesting the unwanted claims made on women's bodies by colonisers. Rage is a way of reclaiming one's psychic domains and an affront to those who try to enforce roles such as physical and sexual submissiveness, but sensuality is also a means to assert one's physical autonomy. When those mounted by Ezili dance erotically, their bodies and sexuality are overtaken by the spiritual forces in the form of the divine feminine, dispossessing themselves of male colonial control. If situations of sexual abuse and rape must be understood 'as an affront to the embodied subject …. a sexually specific act that destroys (if only temporarily) the intersubjective, embodied agency and therefore personhood of a woman' (Cahill 2001:13), then possession by Ezili reveals how the spiritual realm may disrupt the extant social order providing an alternative form of embodied, spiritual authority that supersedes all others.[10] Cultural performances of the body may delegitimate the status quo and bolster communities through common appeals to sacred authority.

Ezili Dantò also reveals bondwomen's complex understanding of sexuality, as the lwa subverts gender dualisms. Ezili is tough, hard-working and independent yet at other times she is feminine and maternal, with a penchant for perfume. Sometimes her masculine traits lead her to be seen as androgynous (Conner 2005:143). Vodouisants related to us that she is the defender of lesbians. She may vacillate between feminine and masculine traits. Today, some Vodouisants claim that although Ezili Dantò is a single mother who has given birth, she is bisexual or even a lesbian herself. She is said to oscillate in her attractions towards the genders. It is largely women who are mounted by Ezili's spirit, but the lwa does not discriminate. Male, female or transgender hounsi may become a chwal for the lwa, regardless of their gender or sexuality, and potentially become re-gendered. In Vodou trance 'self can be substituted temporarily by subjectivity of another gender' (Strongman 2008:14). The lwa's non-dualism and gender fluidity, as well as the complexity of the gender dynamics involved in what Westerners term possession, harkens to Black women's desire to maintain a metaphysics which hails from African origins and desist from accepting the edicts of Catholicism. Whilst Western, Cartesian philosophy situates the self as static and steadfast, African ontologies, as we have seen, allude to a self that exists as a process, transcorporeal and uncircumscribed in its multiplicities. In the space of the colony, where gendered roles according to Victorian dictates, of active male versus passive female were combined with the racism to lower Black women to the nadir, Ezili Dantò, a lwa that unsettles the precepts of such gender and sexual norms, reveals that bondwomen contested the codes of gender. Ezili morphed a Marian model of meek femininity into a means of subverting submissive status and deconstructing dualistic directives through sustentation of African metaphysics.

Indeed, the items which hounsi gift to their lwa on Tuesdays, her day, reveal the complexities, memories and fears of the slave women who created Ezili. She is said to have a love for the trappings of femininity, such as a fondness for luxurious French perfume, in particular Rêve d'Or and Magie Noir. Today, Voduisants typically spritz the scents around her ogatwa, altar. She is said by many to like strong cigarettes, rum (preferably Barbancourt), crème de cacao and sometimes wine. She also has a penchant for silver or white gold jewellery, and rings with blue or red stones in them. The desire for such items, is not a 'dream of luxury' (Deren 1970:138), as Dayan has pointed out (1995), but rather a memory and mimicry of the excesses of the colonialists whose opulent lifestyles came at the expense of the backbreaking toil of slave labour. They had the power to deny or grant slave women extravagances, gifting them such items, but these often came at a high cost, in return for sexual relationships that may have been established nolens volens. If these led to children, mothers had no rights over them. From our analysis, we believe this explains why, on her ogatwa, the lwa also asks for masculine, phallic items, usually daggers, knives, swords, and other sharp objects. These, we argue, are re-appropriated as weapons of female protection and retaliation, recalling the many injustices done to slave women. Yet when Ezili also requests dolls, she reveals slave women's longing for maternity, and the gift of childhood innocence. Her vévé an ornate heart with a dagger piercing it, evokes the wounded heart of the slave woman, seeking love in a space of death.

In the Polish depictions of the Black Madonna, the Christ child clutches a Bible, which Vodouisants believe represents a coffin. Thanatological symbolism and memento mori pervade Vodou. After all, due to brutal exploitation, physical and mental abuse by the colonisers, life for slaves 'was nasty, brutish and short' (Hobbes 1651). The fragility of life was omnipresent. Death was always near. Adult and infant mortality rates were exceptionally high (Morrissey 1989:120). Yet, death is not something to be feared within the Vodou paradigm, but an 'undeniable existential truth' and 'an imminent homecoming' where spirits welcome the deceased into the eternal paradise of Guinea, a mythologised, Africanised promised land where the ancestors await (Cosentino 2012:136–138).

Conclusion

As Michel and Bellegarde-Smith posit Vodou is a form of humanism (Bellegarde-Smith and Michel 2006, 2013). It provides a practical means of comprehending the world, as well as ways of being in the world. McCarthy Brown asserts that Vodou is not only a 'repository for wisdom accumulated by a people who have lived through slavery, hunger, disease, repression, corruption, and violence—all in excess but also allows Voduisants to cope with suffering whilst strengthening survivors and survival instincts' (McCarthy Brown 2010:10). Ezili Dantò, although mute like the voice of slave women in Haitian history, tells the story of bondwomen, who ripped from their homes and dehumanised by the horrors of colonialism, reimagined, rehumanised and mysticised the Black Madonna in their own image. Ezili is a window into their memories, vulnerabilities, and identities. Far from being passive and weak, slave women resisted in many ways whether through profane means, such as armed resistance, or in seeking solace in the sacred. They fled into the depths of the forests where they assembled vespertinally with menfolk far from the prying eyes of the colonialists. There they engendered powerful lwas such as Ezili Dantò, reclaiming their identities, preserving their past, rewriting the present and unsettling the patriarchal paradigms that impinged upon them.

Des documents nouvellement obtenus montrent que le pédophile Jeffrey Epstein a visité la Maison Blanche des Clinton à 17 reprises, dont deux fois en une journée à trois occasions distinctes.

« Epstein, qui est décédé en 2019, a rendu visite à Bill Clinton au manoir exécutif sur une période de trois ans, la première invitation ayant eu lieu juste un mois après son investiture en janvier 1993 », rapporte le Daily Mail.

> « Les journaux montrent que le défunt financier s'est présenté 14 jours distincts, faisant même deux visites en une seule journée à trois occasions différentes. »

Les documents détaillent comment Epstein se rendait spécifiquement dans l'aile ouest, rendant presque certaine sa rencontre avec le président Clinton.

Les invitations d'Epstein ont été envoyées par « les plus hauts conseillers et assistants de Clinton », y compris un qui a plus tard occupé le poste de secrétaire au Trésor, montrent les journaux.

Le premier témoin du procès de Ghislaine Maxwell, Lawrence Paul Visoski Jr, a déclaré lors de son témoignage cette semaine qu'il avait vu Clinton à plusieurs reprises dans le fameux jet privé « Lolita Express » d'Epstein.

Des photos apparues en janvier 2020 montrent Clinton posant avec la proxénète présumée Ghislaine Maxwell et une autre avec l'esclave sexuelle Chauntae Davies.

D'autres images ont été publiées montrant Clinton profitant d'un massage du dos de Davies lors d'un voyage humanitaire avec Epstein en Afrique en septembre 2002.

Les archives montrent que Clinton a effectué au moins 26 voyages à bord du « Lolita Express », abandonnant les services secrets pour cinq d'entre eux.

Clinton nie avoir jamais visité la tristement célèbre « île aux pédophiles » d'Epstein, mais le documentaire de Netflix Jeffrey Epstein: Filthy Rich de Netflix « comprend une interview d'un employé de longue date de l'île affirmant qu'il y a vu l'ancien président ».

"Le Nègre ignore que ses ancêtres, qui se sont adaptés aux conditions matérielles de la vallée du Nil, sont les plus anciens guides de l'humanité dans la voie de la civilisation" Cheikh Anta Diop

Les 9 parties de l'Etre humain dans la pensée égyptienne et le Vodun

Le chiffre 9 est le chiffre sacré de l'Afrique. Nous l'avons expliqué dans notre article sur la religion africaine. Nos ancêtres ont donc egalement théorisé que l'humain est composé de 9 entités ontologiques et non pas 3 (âme, énergie, corps) comme cela est communément enseigné. Ces 9 entités sont dans la civilisation pharaonique :

LE DJET (ou sab) : Le corps physique, qui devient KHAT (putrescible et corruptible) âpres la mort.

LE SAHU : C'est l'entité spirituelle du corps qui entoure le corps physique LE KHAIBIT : C'est l'ombre attachée au corps physique et qui reste invisible. Cette ombre devient LE SHOUT lorsqu'elle se détache du corps pour devenir visible sous l'effet de la lumière.

BA : C'est l'âme dynamique, mobile et volatile qui protège la momie, et insuffle le souffle vital à l'homme

LE REN : C'est le nom porté par la personne, le nom qui révèle l'essence ontologique de l'homme. Donner un nom est donc quelque chose d'important. C'est pourquoi dans nos traditions depuis la nuit des temps, les noms ne sont jamais donnés par hasard.

LE KA : C'est la force vitale transcendante, le réceptacle de l'énergie divine

LE IB : C'est le cœur non comme organe, mais comme siège de la conscience intime, comme siège de la pensée, siège des intentions et des émotions qui se manifestent a travers le corps physique

LE SEKHEM : La force irrésistible qui protège ou détruit l'homme

Le AKH ou AK : C'est l'esprit lumineux et impérissable, immortel du défunt ressuscité.

A titre d'exemple, on retrouve les mêmes entités ontologiques chez les peuples Adja-Fon du Bénin actuel, c'est à dire dans le Vodun. Les 9 entités sont :

AGBAZA : Le corps physique qui se désagrège (putrescible et corruptible)

OUTOU : C'est l'entité spirituelle du corps qui entoure le corps physique

YE (Yè) : L'ombre

WINSAGU : C'est l'âme dynamique, mobile

NYI : Le nom qui révèle l'être

L'INDON : La force vitale, c'est la force vitale transcendante, le réceptacle de l'énergie divine

AI : La conscience intime, le siège de la pensée

HONHNLON : La force qui protège ou détruit

SE (Sè) : L'esprit immortel impérissable, l'esprit divin du défunt

Il est possible de faire la même comparaison (celle qui à été faite avec les peuples Adja-Fon du Bénin) avec tous les peuples traditionnels (Yoruba, Bassa, Ewe, Akan, etc.....) qui sont sur notre continent.

Cette manière de concevoir l'Etre a joué un rôle central dans la compréhension de la mort et le culte des ancêtres comme nous l'avons expliqué ici

Selassie, which translates to "Power of the Trinity."

A new spiritual movement, represented by his birth name, was also sparked by his coronation. It had its origins in Jamaica but is now widely practiced all over the world. Although its adherents are often referred to as "Rastafarians," the term "Rastafari" or "Rasta" is more commonly used. Rastafarians, who hold that Ethiopia is Zion, the promised land for Black people, have a deep ideological connection to the cult of Selassie.

One of the earliest to declare Haile Selassie divine was Father Joseph Hibbert. One of the first Rastafari preachers, he played a key role in spreading the religion across Jamaica in the 1930s. Father Joseph Hibbert was born in Jamaica in 1894, and he and his adoptive father moved to Costa Rica in 1911. He stayed there for about 20 years, "workin', learnin', and I return back to Jamaica 1931, the month of October, the 12th, I reach back in Jamaica. In an interview in 1983, he said, "I started properly to preach the Ethiopian Coptic Church in 1932."

Father Joseph Hibbert

He rented 28 acres of land and grew bananas there while he was in Costa Rica. In 1924, he became a member of the Masonic-affiliated Ancient Mystic Order of Ethiopia. Some have hypothesized that it was a Masonic-inspired fraternal organization called the Prince Hall Masonic Lodge. Before returning to Jamaica, where he “preached Haile Selassie as the King of Kings, the returned Messiah, and the Redeemer of Israel,” Hibbert became a Master Mason of this Order.

He established the Ethiopian Coptic Faith Ministry in the St. Andrew Parish, where he began preaching in the Benoah District. Later, he relocated his ministry to Kingston, where he met Leonard P. Howell, another preacher who was instructing Rastafarians. After collaborating with Howell for a while, Hibbert went on to found the Ethiopian Coptic Faith on his own.

Bible verses and stories from the Old Testament that, according to derekbishton.com, proved that “Ras Tafari is the reincarnated body of Jesus Christ” were included in Hibbert’s sermon. This is a new era, a new creation.

According to the website, Hibbert’s message centered around the concept of reincarnation. “Isiah was reborn as Elias, who can now be demonstrated to be John the Baptist (see Matthew 17). Jesus Christ has been reborn as Ras Tafari today. And John the Baptist reappeared as Marcus Mosiah Garvey, yet another herald, spokesperson, and trumpeter.

“Moses took the scroll of Joseph and freed the Israelites from Egypt by leading the children away from the country. To free all the children and all of Africa, Haile Selassie must have led an army of 80,000 men and fought in an aircraft for seven months.

Advertisement

Emperor Haile Selassie is the “creator of Israel, the holy man of Israel, the king of men,” according to Hibbert and other Rastafari preachers.

A number of Rastas would find inspiration in Haile Selassie, from his speech to the League of Nations (which would later serve as the basis for Bob Marley’s hit song “War”) to his work in establishing the Organization of African Unity. Then, in 1948, he showed the Rasta community special treatment by allocating land in Shashamane for returnees from the Diaspora, including Rastas. Until the coup that ended his reign and drastically reduced the land granted to these repatriates, he paid several visits to their settlement.

It was in 1966 that Haile Selassie personally traveled to Jamaica to persuade Rastafarians to make the trek to Shashamane. Hibbert may have been among the Rastafari elders who had the opportunity to meet Haile Selassie during the trip.

Even though he had been dead since 1986, most Rastas remembered Hibbert as a legendary Rastafarian educator. Bongo Zack, a Rasta born in Jamaica but living in Houston, Texas at the time, recalled seeing Hibbert perform in Kingston in the early 1930s when he spoke with derekbishton.com.

“When I was a young boy, the first thing I clearly recall is Mr. Hibbert marching in front of our house every Sunday while waving a red, gold, and green Ethiopian flag. Mr. Hibbert used to wear a white robe with a red, gold, and green sash and a leather belt with a cup to hoist a flag pole, and he would march right down to the corner and signal everyone that a meeting was going to take place that evening.

Looking up at this man brought back memories from when I was a young boy. Because I am a young man who has always worn trousers, and Mr. Hibbert was the first adult male I have ever seen in a robe, I found this to be particularly amusing. He was an unusual man from Costa Rica.

Mystery Of The Black Irish People: Who Were They?

AncientPages.com | May 24, 2016 | Civilizations, Featured Stories, News

Ellen Lloyd - AncientPages.com - You might have heard the term "Black Irish" before, but who were these people? Where did they live and come from?

The term "Black Irish" is generally used for people of Irish origin with dark features, black hair, darker skin, and dark eyes. Interestingly, the term is rarely referred to in Ireland but has circulated Ireland has been subject to numerous invasions from several different countries throughout history. The Celts arrived on the island about the year 500 B.C. The Vikings arrived in Ireland as early as 795 A.D. and funded the Norse Kingdom of Dublin in 839 A.D.

The Kingdom of Dublin ended in 1171 when the Normans arrived. The Normans faced these Hiberno-Norse kingdoms in Ireland, and gradually, society began to evolve into what is now known as Norman Ireland.

It is very likely the Vikings would have stayed in Ireland much longer if it hadn't been for the famous Irish hero Brian Boru who dared to chase off the Vikings, often called dark invaders or black foreigners. The Gaelic word for foreigner is "gall," and for black (or dark) is "dubh."

Many of the invaders' families took Gaelic names that utilized these two descriptive words. The term' Doyle' is in Irish "O'Dubhghaill," which means "dark foreigner, " revealing their heritage as an invading force with dark intentions.

In 1588, members of the Spanish army were shipwrecked on the coast of Ireland. If they had stayed on the island and began families, their genes could have been spread throughout generations.

However, most historians believe that most of these Spanish soldiers were handed over to the British authorities and executed, so it's unlikely that any who survived could've impacted the country's gene pool.

During the Great Famine of 1845 to 1849, hundreds of thousands of Irish peasants emigrated to America. It resulted in their being labeled "black" because they escaped from this new kind of black death. After the famine, many Irish reached America, Canada, Australia, and beyond.

The relationship between Ireland and Britain was weak during the 1800s, which resulted in mistrust. The British government did not offer enough assistance to help solve the problems.

The British may have used 'Black' as a derogatory term.

It is challenging to determine when the term "Black Irish" was first used, but it seems several historical events in Ireland contributed to the word's birth. As we have seen, there are numerous theories about how the term originated.

The theory that the "Black Irish" are descendants of any small foreign group that integrated with the Irish and survived is unlikely. It seems more likely that "Black Irish" is a descriptive term rather

15 Disturbing Facts About Elizabeth Bathory, History's Most Murderous Woman

Carly Silver

Updated September 23, 2021 • 1.0m views • 23 items

Who was Elizabeth Bathory? The most murderous woman in the history of the world, according to the Guinness Book of World Records. This Hungarian countess, who flourished in the late 16th and early 17th centuries, tortured and killed anywhere between 50 and 650 young women for pure pleasure. She reportedly bathed in their blood to keep herself young and sexy, watched them freeze to death for fun, and was allegedly one of the inspirations for the character Dracula.

These Elizabeth Bathory facts are just part of this intriguing woman's story. The real life of Elizabeth Bathory included her role as an incredibly rich and powerful noblewoman in Hungary/Transylvania. She was the niece of a king, mother of a secret love child, and a sexually adventurous dame who also happened to enjoy torturing women. Well-educated, she spoke several languages and spawned hundreds of gory legends that persist until this day.

As A Child, She Witnessed Terrible Scenes Of Torture

As a little girl, the spoiled, petulant Elizabeth was never chastised for any bad behavior, even though she was prone to fits of rage and violence. From the time she was a young girl, she experienced seizures, wild mood swings, and terrible migraines.

She also observed scenes of horrific torture, including one episode where she watched local authorities slit open the belly of a living horse, cram a criminal inside it, and stitch it closed, leaving the living criminal to writhe and struggle until both the human and the horse were dead.

She Had A Secret Love Child At 13 And Married A Sadistic Husband

After taking a lover at age 13 and giving birth to a secret love child, Elizabeth was married shortly before turning 15 to a nobleman named Ferenc Nadasdy. He was allegedly as into dark stuff as his wife, cruelly torturing Ottoman captives and sticking pieces of paper between his servants' toes and setting them on fire. For his ferocity in battle against Ottoman Turks, he earned the nickname "The Black Knight."

Her Aunt Was Rumored To Be A Murderous Bisexual Witch

Elizabeth came from one of the most powerful noble families in Transylvania. Her uncle, Stephen Bathory, married the queen regnant of Poland and

Elizabeth came from one of the most powerful noble families in Transylvania. Her uncle, Stephen Bathory, married the queen regnant of Poland and was a fierce warrior, but things went left when it came to her aunt, Klara Bathory. Contemporary accounts state Klara took a lover who killed her husband, but rumor has it she smothered her second husband herself. Other accounts have Klara as a bisexual murderess who practiced sorcery in her spare time and instructed Elizabeth in the dark arts. (Of course, the sexuality of powerful women has also been used to condemn them, so all of these rumors need to be taken with a grain of salt.)

Eventually, Klara was imprisoned, but the legend grew: She became known as a sexually rapacious vixen who seduced her prison guards. Another story claims Klara and one of her male lovers were captured by an Ottoman pasha, who skewered the young man on a spit, and the Ottoman garrison repeatedly raped Klara.

She Supposedly Bathed In Virgins' Blood To Keep Herself Young

Elizabeth was reputed to have bitten her young female victims and sucked blood from their wounds, making her one of the inspirations for Bram Stoker's Dracula.

Reportedly, later in her murderous career, she also bathed in the blood of the virgins she tortured, believing this would keep her forever young and beautiful. However, these stories of her literal bloodbaths come from a later account that mythologized and perhaps exaggerated her cruelty.

She Made Girls Freeze To Death In The Snow Or Burned Them With Hot Irons

After marrying The Black Knight, Elizabeth expanded her torture tactics. She stuck young girls in spike-lined cages and hung them from the ceiling and threw others in the snow, tossing cold water on them so they froze to death. Elizabeth enjoyed putting red-hot coins into servant girls' palms; she also thrust pokers into the fire and used them to burn her servants' faces. To top it off, she also tore off their fingers with pincers.

She Smeared Girls In Honey And Sent Them To Be Attacked By Bees

Following the suggestion of her husband Count Nadasdy, Elizabeth smeared servant girls in honey and put them outside for a full day so they would be bitten by bugs and stung by bees. Though the two were frequently separated, Nadasdy would send his wife torture advice from the battlefield while he was away as a sort of "love letter."

She May Have Engaged In Cannibalism

Along with the other ways she terrorized imprisoned girls, Elizabeth supposedly bit off chunks of their flesh. According to some stories, she forced one young woman to cook and eat her own flesh - and she may have partaken of human meat herself.

After Her Husband's Death, She Grew Even More Violent

Eventually, Elizabeth outgrew her husband's torture tactics and began to learn new methods of wreaking havoc on those around her, especially servant girls. She wrote to Nadasdy that her servant Thorko had taught her a new method of cursing: "Beat a black hen to death, then smear the blood on your enemy or his clothes to condemn him."

After her husband died in 1604, Elizabeth became even more extreme. Records from her later trials indicate Elizabeth shoved needles underneath girls' fingernails or into their faces. She would bite chunks of flesh from their bodies or poke their breasts with sharp pincers.

The 'Blood Countess' Was Reputedly Also Very Promiscuous

Nicknamed "The Blood Countess," Elizabeth was said to have a nearly unlimited libido. In addition to the teenage love affair that produced an illegitimate child, and then her husband, the count, Elizabeth seduced a local hunk named Ironhead later in life. Rumors of bisexuality only hail from centuries after her life.

Elizabeth May Have Been An Inbred Psychopath - Or A Victim Of The Patriarchy

In an attempt to understand why Elizabeth was so murderous, scholars have investigated every aspect of her life. Was she clinically insane due to incest? After all, her parents were distant cousins (they were from different branches of the Bathory family), but that was pretty common in Renaissance Europe and not everyone from that time period was a serial killer. Others have argued that various brutalities she may have witnessed as a kid may have triggered her sadistic ways.

But perhaps Bathory's misdeeds were exaggerated because of her explicit sexuality, seen as a threat to the patriarchy. Her pursuit of multiple lovers, in and out of the marriage bed, could have been seen as threatening to the institutions supported by the male authorities who later condemned her. After all, we only know a few basic facts about her life, and a lot of her negative reputation comes from later accounts.

Elizabeth Tripped Herself Up When She Tried To Expand Her Torture Tactics

For a number of years, Elizabeth was content to torture - and potentially bathe in the blood of - young peasant girls who came to serve her from nearby towns. But eventually the parents of local Average Janes caught on to her brutal ways and stopped sending their daughters up to her castle.

In her later days, Elizabeth became more daring. She began fostering young noblewomen from poor families across Transylvania and even Croatia, offering to teach them at a school for girls supposedly run out of her castle. But the parents of aristocratic girls could and did make a political fuss that caught the attention of local authorities (although conflicting reports state she may have passed local peasant ladies off as noble girls).

Elizabeth also gave herself away when she murdered a famous choir singer who couldn't - or wouldn't - belt out a tune for her. Unlike a poor peasant from the country, this well-known singer was immediately missed when she disappeared.

The King Of Hungary Finally Discovered Her Terrible Crimes

Allegedly jealous of the Protestant Bathory-Nadasdy family's wealth, Matthias II, the Catholic king of Hungary, picked up on these allegations about Elizabeth and decided to get even. He and his parliament ordered the royal deputy in Hungary, Count George Thurzo, to investigate her. Perhaps they were suspicious because they believed in witchcraft, or perhaps a sexually powerful woman was threatening to their beliefs. Also, if Elizabeth - by now a widow - was tried and convicted, then all of her wealth would revert to the crown and all of the debts the king owed to Bathory would be erased.

Thurzo was a friend to the Bathory family, however, and he helped Elizabeth escape prosecution. As a result, Elizabeth wasn't put on trial herself, but her accomplices were.

The Most Horrific Types of Medieval Torture

Giselle Edwards

LIST RULES Vote up the devices that would have been horrific to experience.

This list of gross torture methods used in medieval times proves how these medieval torture devices were some of the most sadistic machines in history. Using devices like the Judas cradle, pear of anguish, and Spanish donkey, torture inflicted anguish on convicts, hostages, and disagreeable folks. History books call them horrific forms of torture, and most people wouldn't wish these sorts of treatments on their worst enemies. Read through this list of horrifying types of medieval punishment and be thankful that you were born a couple centuries after their presence.

1 The Judas Cradle

Reaching the peak of its popularity during the Spanish Inquisition of the 1600s, this was also known as the Judas Chair or the Guilded Cradle. The Judas Cradle was a torture device where the victim would be placed on top of a wooden pyramid with the triangular end inserted in the victim's anus or vagina. Arms and feet were tied or weighted in order to ensure maximum pain as gravity slowly pulled the victim downward.

More often than not, the Judas Cradle was used to extract confessions or specific information from victims, so the addition of weights could increase the horror. Depending on the rate of the pyramid-sitter's progress, this torture could last anywhere from a few hours to a full day.

While the torture was not usually intended to be fatal, it often was. Since the device was never cleaned, survivors experienced a high incidence of infection, which was effectively a death sentence in the centuries before antibiotics.

As you may have assumed from its name, torturers used the breast ripper primarily to inflict pain upon women. The claws were often heated up before being attached to the victim's exposed breasts. Women were strapped to a table or wall while a torturer pulled the device away. There was a similar device called the Iron Spider that was attached to walls and worked the same way with the woman pulled away from the wall.

If the victim wasn't killed, she would be left mutilated for life. This treatment was a punishment for accused adulterers, unwed mothers, witches, and heretics.

3 Flaying

Thought to have originated with the Assyrians, "flaying" broadly describes an ancient technique that was most popular in various Middle Eastern and African regions roughly 1,000 years ago. In the Middle Ages, it was frequently used to torture and execute criminals, captured soldiers, and those accused of witchcraft.

Usually, the victim was tied to a pole in a public square or high-traffic area of the community. Using a small knife, the torturer would methodically remove strips of the tortured's skin, peeling back sections to reveal the musculature beneath.

This slow process often began at the victim's face and proceeded down towards their feet. Many victims died from shock or blood loss before the torturer reached their hips. In some cases, the remaining skin was then publicly displayed as a warning against breaking the law or witchcraft.

4 The Brazen Bull

Possibly the most imaginative means of sadistic torment, the brazen bull unleashed pain on victims in ancient Greece. The tyrant Phalaris allegedly commissioned this torture device to exercise his sadistic streak. Victims were sealed inside the gleaming bull and slowly burned to death. A series of pipes on the inside made it sound as if the victim's wailing and thrashing were the sound of an actual bull, giving this torture implement a decidedly macabre streak.

Even though this torture was not used commonly during the Middle Ages compared to its reputation in the Greek and Roman Eras, it was allegedly still

Even though this torture was not used commonly during the Middle Ages compared to its reputation in the Greek and Roman Eras, it was allegedly still used in Central Europe. This torture was similar to being boiled alive, just without the water.

5 The Crocodile Tube

A rare and slightly mysterious form of torture, the Crocodile Tube is thought to have been used only occasionally to extract confessions from accused heretics.

The victim was placed inside a spike-filled cylinder just big enough for their body, with head and feet exposed on either end. The tube was then shut, leaving the victim totally immobilized and impaled on the spikes.

And that's not all. There was often a small fire burning just beneath the cylinder, gradually heating the tube until the torturer extracted a confession – or the victim died. The torturer could inflict all manner of unpleasantness on the victim's exposed face and feet, mutilating their head and toes in order to hurry the process along.

Less a method of torture than a means of execution, impalement was typical of medieval punishment due to its simplicity. It was exactly what it sounds like: a large spike was inserted longitudinally, usually via the anus and emerging around the chest, shoulders, neck, or head.

Like so many tortures, impalement didn't originate in the Middle Ages. In fact, impalement was codified as a punishment in the Code of Hammurabi in 1772 BCE. The medieval period did mark maybe the most notorious impalings, however, thanks to the aptly named Vlad the Impaler.

Vlad III Dracula relied on impalement to keep order in Wallachia, his little corner of 15th-century Romania. It was in his battles against the Ottoman Empire that resulted in historical notoriety, though, as he's said to have impaled as many as 20,000 Ottoman Turks outside the city of Targoviste in order to dissuade the next wave from advancing.

7 The Spanish Donkey

Known colloquially as a wooden horse or a Chevalet, the Spanish Donkey followed a similar principal as the Judas Cradle, letting gravity do most of the work. Victims – almost always women – were seated astride the apparatus, a vertical wood board with an inverted V-shaped wedge on top. Weights were then attached to their feet, placing all the combined pressure on that one sharp point to create a sensation like being split down the middle.

While there are accounts of this method being used on blasphemers during the Spanish Inquisition, the so-called Spanish Donkey is a play on a familiar form, one that extended to the United States, from the "riding the rail" punishments of the early Colonial Era to "The Mule," on which Confederate soldiers captured in the Civil War would ride until they lost consciousness.

8 The Heretic's Fork

The Heretic's Fork was primarily used during the Spanish Inquisition. The instrument consisted of two forks set end to end and strapped around the victim's neck. The tines of the fork penetrated the flesh under the chin at one end and the upper sternum in the other. With their hands behind their backs, victims was made to kneel or stand upright. This forced any liars or blasphemers subjected to the punishment to strain to keep their chin elevated.

Obviously, sleeping, speaking, or even swallowing were impossible. As such, it's often speculated that the Heretic's Fork was just one part of the process, perhaps one used to silence a victim after obtaining a confession. In any case, this was not often a fatal torture, though the risk of infection was high.

9 The Pear Of Anguish

For years, examples of the Pear of Anguish have been displayed in museums as examples of late-medieval torture implements. In theory, this pear-shaped device would be inserted into a person's mouth, anus, or vagina, then a screw would be turned, causing the separate "leaves" to expand outwards, causing enormous pain and distension.

There are, however, no primary sources suggesting that this was ever the case, and there is no evidence of a Pear of Anguish even existing until the early 1600s, when, according to 1639's L'Inventaire général de l'histoire des larrons, thieves used similar mechanisms to gag victims.

Historian Chris Bishop has largely discredited the notion that the Pears of Anguish that can be found in museums today were used for torture in the

Historian Chris Bishop has largely discredited the notion that the Pears of Anguish that can be found in museums today were used for torture in the Middle Ages, but their actual use is mysterious. Bishop theorizes that what's now known as the Pear of Anguish could have a use as prosaic as "shoe-extenders, or sock-stretchers, or glove-wideners."

WAS THIS MASSIVE SWORD FROM THE 15TH CENTURY USED BY A GIANT SAMURAI?

Was this Massive Sword from the 15th Century used by a Giant Samurai?

The Norimitsu Odachi is displayed in its full glory at the Kibitsu Shrine in the Okayama Prefecture. The giant sword has captivated Japan and its foreign visitors with its size and grandeur.

The Norimitsu is so large, legends have stated that the weapon was once forged and wielded by a giant warrior. Other than its measurements, 12.37 feet in length and 31.97 lbs in weight, the exact origins of the Norimitsu Odachi continues to be shrouded in mystery.

A Look into the Mysterious Norimitsu Odachi

Samurais have been a part of Japanese culture since the start of the tenth century. They were fierce warriors who swore oaths to protect their respective clans. One of the things they were most renowned for was their primary weapon of choice: the sword.

Get Notifications ×

The giant sword is 12½ feet long (3.8m), the body being 7 ½ feet (2.3m) and the nakago 5 feet (150m). It weighs about 31lb 15.47249oz pounds (14.5 kg). 1)

There are a wide variety of blades produced by the skilled swordsmiths of Japan. The katana is without a doubt the most popular one due to its connection to the samurai.

A lesser-known traditional Japanese sword is the odachi, which literally translates to “large/great sword.” In order to be classified as an odachi, the weapon must have a blade length of 3 shaku (35.79 inches or 90.91 cm), though there have been some records of blades reaching around 6.56 feet in length.

Get Notifications ×

What was the purpose of the odachi?

The odachi functioned either as ceremonial objects or infantry swords. As an offering to a shrine's patron gods. Some odachi was actually used as an offering to the gods to protect warriors in battle. Others were displayed in temples as mythological symbols.

As a ceremonial object. Production of the odachi was at an all-time high during the Edo period where it was used in various ceremonies. Researchers have also stated that the odachi had a more "ritualistic" role when it came to war, similar to that of flags during a battle.

The odachi was also said to be a weapon of choice during the fourteenth century, specifically the Nanboku-chō period. This claim is backed up by literary works such as the Heike Monogatari and the Taiheiki.

As a weapon for war, the odachi's large size proved to be a problem. It was believed that samurai would carry it on their back or by hand.

During the Muromachi era, samurais would have their assistants carry the massive sword to help draw it during battle. Foot soldiers were more likely to carry the sword slung across their backs as opposed to katanas, which were typically carried on the side.

Fumon Tanaka, a traditional Japanese martial arts practitioner, uses a special drawing technique for a "shorter" odachi. It involves pulling out the sheath rather than drawing the actual blade. Swordsmanship schools around the country have adopted this method, as well as the Shin musō Hayashizaki-ryū and Iaidō.

Production and decline

Forging the odachi proved to be no easy feat. Their length made heat treatment more complicated due to its expense and technique. Polishing was quite the challenge too.

Because of their size, the odachi needed to be hung from the ceiling or carefully placed in a stationary position to be polished as opposed to normal swords that are merely moved over polishing stones.

The odachi's reverence dwindled down after the 1615 Siege of Osaka (Osaka Natsu no Jin), in which the Tokugawa Shogunate annihilated the Toyotomi clan. The loss was said to be due to the Shogunal government prohibiting swords above a set length. Odachi swordsmiths were forced to cut down the length to meet the standards.

So what is the truth behind the Norimitsu Odachi?

Everyone agrees that if the sword truly had an owner who took it out to battle, they would have been a giant of unproportionate measures.

However, if one were to disregard mythology and folklore, it looks like the Norimitsu odachi was nothing more than a ceremonial sword created by a skillful craftsman. Whoever was behind the forging of this beautiful weapon certainly wanted to showcase their skills—or wealth, for that matter.

How Urban Planning Shaped Old Benin City

BYRON NICHOLAS · FEBRUARY 3, 2020

PDFmyURL

I wanted to start this year's Black History Month by publicizing a very afro-centric perspective to urban planning by celebrating the physical planning of the West African Kingdom of Benin (Old Benin Kingdom), now known as the City of Benin in present day Nigeria (New Benin City). Urban planning schools in the west provide little insight about urban planning practices throughout the continent of Africa. We learn about medieval Italian and Greek cities, with little mention about the City of Benin, the Great Zimbabwe, Timbuktu in Mali, The Kingdom of Kush, and many others.

The Kingdom of Benin was an autonomous country, with an effective military and extremely talented and skilled artisan workforce. Benin City was the principal city of Edo (Bini) kingdom of Benin which flourished from the 13th–19th century, whose Oba of Benin (or traditional ruler) whose royal family is highly respected and revered to this today. The post colonial urban landscape is more dystopian, as it resembles most other auto-centric cities throughout the developing world. Although, modern Benin City's urban form is not even close to the uniqueness of its predecessor, its famous artisan works of Bronze sculptures decorated throughout the City provides a colorful remembrance of Old Benin City.

Benin City, had the largest walls made of earthwork longer than the Great Wall of China, developed the world's most famous art works from bronze, and utilized urban planning principles prior to European colonialism. Although, old Benin City is termed as ancient, it existed more recently than most have thought, possibly when your great grandparents were alive.

The following are excerpts from Andrew Godwin Onokerhoraye's Urbanism as an organ of Traditional African Civilization: The Example of Benin, Nigeria / Urban Planning, Peer-Reviewed Journal Article, Civilizations 1975 Institute of Sociology of the University of Brussels:

Civil Engineering

"The rise of Benin lead to the development of a strong defense system. The City of Benin developed a strong defense against external aggressors. The city was protected against enemy invasion by digging large ditches and building huge earthworks that involved considerable civil engineering skills. Three ditches and earthworks were made around the city between the 12 and 15th centuries. With the inner wall most being the most sophisticated of the three walls, it is estimated that the entire project took a labor force of approximately 5,000 men working 10 hours a day for seven days a week for 9 months to be completed."

City Planning

"It was determined that good town planning is an important outcome of urban development in Benin. Benin City was designed differently from other Nigerian cities where there were just one or two main roads and smaller streets. Most of Benin City streets formed a chessboard pattern divided by intersecting approximately rectilinear streets."

Not that European standard should be upheld, but as Onokerhoraye explains, European visitors described Benin City's excellent layout, in 1602. A Dutch native, Dierick Ruiters described the main street of Benin as seven or eight times broader than Warne Street in Amsterdam. Dapper in 1668 said it has 30 straight streets about 120 feet broad with intersecting streets at right angles to them.

Arts and Crafts

"Arts and Crafts evolved as a form of economic activity among its inhabitants. Although agriculture provided the main economic base of the urban area, the concentration of a large number of people in Benin soon led to the development of various types of arts and crafts."

"Most of the important indigenous crafts of the kingdom were in the hands of special ward-guilds in the city. It is important to note that beautiful art pieces are ubiquitous to the new Benin City's common areas."

"Agriculture provided the main economic base of the urban area but the concentration of a large number of pole in Benin area but the concentration of a large number of pele in Benin soon led to the development of various types of Arts and Crafts as a form of economic activity among its inhabitants. There were guilds of blacksmiths and brassmiths, wood and ivory carvers, leather workers, weavers of special embroidered cloths, drum-makers, locksmiths, and carpenters. The blacksmith smelt iron, and fashioned agricultural implements for the farmers. They also produced domestic utensils and implements of war. Women too participated in the art industry, particularly in weaving."

Benin City was destroyed in 1897 by the British, who attacked after the Edo assaulted an earlier British expedition, which had been told not to enter the city during a religious festival but nonetheless attempted to do so. Before burning the city down, the British pillaged it, taking many of its famous bronzes, ivory, and other treasures.

Traces of the old wall and moat remain, but the new city is a close-packed pattern of houses and streets converging on the palace and compound of the oba (sacred king) and the government offices. In the main square is a statue of Emotan, a woman honoured for assisting a 15th-century prince attempting to regain power and who later became Oba Ewuare. The present oba retains traditional and advisory roles in government.

Old Benin City serves as a reminder that African civilizations thrived before and without European influences. The city should also be a reminder for future development throughout the continent for form following function, sustainability, arts, culture, and ingenuity as factors to design an inclusive and efficient city.

Granada Land is the Promised Land of Israel

Granada land is the promised land of Israel, due to its abundance in milk (pearls) & honey (Gold). In this blog post is embedded YouTube video from Khandrop entitled, "America the promised land instead of Milk we find pearls, and Gold instead of honey." This video is a good start to demonstrated that the Americas is the promised land, however, we have so much more evidence.

THE KINGDOM OF JUDAH WAS IN UTAH:

The Bestselling Book, "When Rocks Cry Out," by Horace Butler has already demonstrated that Peru was Jerusalem and that the Kingdom of Judah is in Utah, so this chapter should be no surprise. How did Mr. Butler prove that the Kingdom of Judah was in Utah? Well he used the King James Version Bible, Deuteronomy 34:1-3, which reads as follows:

1 And Moses went up from the plains of Moab unto the mountain of Nebo, to the top of Pisgah, that is over against Jericho. And the Lord shewed him all the land of Gilead, unto Dan,

2 And all Naphtali, and the land of Ephraim, and Manasseh, and all the land of Judah, unto the utmost sea,

3 And the south, and the plain of the valley of Jericho, the city of palm trees, unto Zoar.

The strange thing about the description of the Kingdom of Judah given in

The strange thing about the description of the Kingdom of Judah given in Deuteronomy 34 is that all these Biblical place names can be found in Utah. Below is a list of Biblical place names in Utah (Judah) confirmed by Rabbi, Moshe Davis:

Manasseh, Utah.

Mount Nebo, Utah.

Mount Pisgah, Utah.

Jericho, Utah.

South Gilead Way, Utah

Ephraim, Utah.

Daniel, Utah (Dan is short for Daniel).

Nephi, Utah (short for Naphtali).

Moab, Utah.

Eden, Utah.
Goshen, Utah.
Jordan, Salt lake.
Mt. Carmel Junction Utah.
North Eden Canyon, Utah.
Zion Canyon, Utah.
Zion National Park, Utah.
Benjamin, Utah
Enoch, Utah.
Joseph, Utah.
Levan, Utah.
Providence, Utah.
Salem, Utah (Salem = Jerusalem).
Utah Nickname: Beehive State.

There is a mountain in eastern Nevada named Mount Moriah and it is over 12,000 feet high. In Utah, not only is there a River Jordan, but it runs out of a freshwater lake and into the Great Salt Lake, which is remarkably like the Dead Sea. There is also a Mount Nebo in Utah, approximately 12,000 feet high, so yes..., with evidence this strong, the real Judah was in Utah. People try to say that it was the Mormons that gave these places in Utah Biblical names to support their position as Jews; however, this explanation fails miserably, because there are no 12,000 feet high mountains in modern-day Israel; therefore, the real Judah or Israel had to be in Utah, because it fits the description of the Kingdom of Judah perfectly.

The name "Utah" is derived from the name of the Ute tribe. It means "people of the mountains" in the Ute language.[16]. According to other sources "Utah" is derived from the Apache name "Yudah" which means "Tall." In the Spanish language it was said as "Yuta," subsequently the English-speaking people adapted the word "Utah." There is no J in Hebrew, therefore, Judah is Yudah, especially, when you consider the fact that the J and Y have the same meaning and numerical value and are interchangeable as a result.

ISLAM COMES FROM THE ORIENT (EAST):

Why is this YouTube video that I shared, "The Sacred City of Mecca: Have we got it wrong," correct?: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=TIw1OPH6QvM&feature=emb_logo. Well, because Islam comes from the Orient (the East, which is really the west). I see 10,000 butt-hurt Muslims disliked the YouTube video, well, because the truth hurts and it does not care who it offends. Now, when we include all of the Moorish/ Tartarian architecture that was in the Americas and still is, game over for the hijack. (see images of corn palaces in Iowa and in South Dakota for some examples). Islam is not foreign to the Americas, because Islam and all religions come from the Americas, since the Americas is the True old world. Everything that we have credited Africa and the Middle East for has to also be credited to the Americas too, because the Americas is the old world.

Civilization came from India Superior (Asia Major), aka, ancient India, which was in North America (see blog images). Yes, North America was once Asia, aka, the Orient (East), aka, India Superior. In this blog post is an old-world map by Orontius Finaeus from 1531 and a 1548 Spanish World map showing you India superior (Asia Major) and China being in North America, which is the true Orient or the far East. "The Orient is a term for the East": https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Orient.

I did a blog post, "The Old World is the New World," which demonstrates that the Americas is Asia Major and I gave an image of the original compass that shows you that the Far East was actually our modern-day West (see blog image). This blog post and the blog image of the original compass proves that they flipped the compass and also the maps on us, because the Americas is the True old World: https://www.americaistheoldworld.com/the-old-world-is-the-new-world/.

Moslem Muurs, aka, Sufis, established Islam: https://www.facebook.com/Americaisthetrueoldworld/posts/1442264222504540. I talk about Mu Discovered, Atlantis found, the Kaba, and so much more in my new book, "America is the True Old World," which can be purchased above by clicking on

These European masons took a blood oath to never reveal to the children of the Moors who they truly were. As Azeem Hopkins Bey quotes in his book, "What Your History Books failed to Tell you," George Washington Chairman of the Continental Congress of 1774 is documented saying: "If we would agree to take the Fezzes, and Turbans off the Moors' Heads and remove the sandals from their feet and enforce it with severe punishments, and also swear a death oath between ourselves to religiously, and faith fully not allow anyone to teach the Moorish Children whom they really are or who their forefathers were. And only allow the Moorish Children to be taught that they were truly Negros, Black people and Colored Folks." George Washington stated that 200 years from today the Moorish people would not know their nationality nor the national name of their forefathers also they would not know from which land or ancestors that they descended from." [end quote].

Islam was in America and had a big influence on America, because you have a total of 565 names, 484 in America and 81 in Canada, of villages, towns, cities, mountains, lakes, rivers and etcetera, are etymologically Arabic; which were designated by locals long before the arrival of Columbus. Many of these names are in fact the same as names of Islamic places; Mecca in Indiana, Medina in Idaho, Medina in New York, Medina and Hazen in North Dakota, Medina in Ohio, Medina in Tennessee, Medina in Texas, Medina and Arva in Ontario, Mahomet in Illinois and Mona in Utah, are just a few noticeable names at the outset. A closer analysis of the names of native tribes will immediately reveal their Arabic etymological ancestry; Anasazi, Apache, Arawak, Arikana, Chavin, Cherokee, Cree, Hohokam, Hupa, Hopi, Makkah, Mohician, Mohawk, Nazca, Zulu, and Zuni are only a few.

Yes, Islam was everywhere in the Americas. One just has to look for it, because you can see the evidence from Queen Califia (California), to Allah-Bumya (Alabama), to Tallah-Hasse (Tallahassee), to Medina Ohio, to Moorestown New Jersey, to Islamorada Florida, and to Al-hambra California; so yes, Moslems have left a big impact on America.

What happen to the Berbers/ Saracens (Moslems) of the Americas? Well, have you ever heard of the Spanish Inquisition, via, the Dum Diversas of 1452, issued by the Pope, authorizing Christians to enslave Saracens and non-believers and to take their lands, because no one disappeared? It's just that everyone has become ignorant. There are over 500 cities and towns in UNITED STATES named after Muslims and a huge part of Europe as well. The textbooks, History (His-Story), and education of today are all manipulated; therefore, Western Academics will not get us out of our deep sleep, because Western Academics is the Institution that has put WE THE PEOPLE (Lenape Muurs/ Washitaw) to sleep to begin with. We need our own Institutions and scholars that are not compromised by Oaths and by Western Academics.

The Moor and Islam comes from the Orient (the far East): https://www.facebook.com/Americaisthetrueoldworld/posts/2584437584953859. What's also interesting is that "Oriental means Western Scholar who Studies Islam," according to the book, "Orientalism," by Edward Said. Islam came from the Orient: https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Orientalism.

Additionally, if you read subsection 4 of this Delaware Law it will tell you that the Lenape Indians were formerly known as Moors: https://law.justia.com/codes/delaware/2016/title-29/chapter-1/section-106. The Lenape were Delaware Muurs/ Moors, originally. However, the word Lenape means "WE THE PEOPLE" (the Preamble of the US Constitution), or "TRUE PEOPLE." Lenape also means Serpent or dragon (Naga/Nigga). Likewise, all of the Native American tribes and Indian names like Sioux and Dakota also mean serpent or Dragon, because the Muurs/ Indians named themselves after the Serpent wisdom that they worshipped when the Muurs ruled the world: https://www.facebook.com/Americaisthetrueoldworld/posts/2462245353839750.

Based upon the above, Islam did come from the Orient, but where at in the East (the Americas) did Islam come from? Did it come from Mecca Missouri, Mecca in South America, Mecca California, Media Indiana, Mecca Indiana, Morocco Indiana, or Morocco Illinois? Did it come from Sufism (Sophia), which was a science that comes from India? Do all religions come from India Superior in the Americas?: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=GnV0HAePvAQ&t=1875s. (NOTE: the video I just shared from "Liftingtheveil," on YouTube is about India being the oldest civilization is correct, but the Video failed to specify that it was the Mayan Indians (INDIA), and not the Indian from Hindustan/ India, that actually civilized the world.)

For more evidence that Indian and Moor is one and the same is my family history. The Chavis are descendants of the Berber Cherokee Chief, Ishmael Chavis: https://www.facebook.com/Americaisthetrueoldworld/posts/2610479292349688.

When you read the Chavis link I gave above, you will notice how Ishmael Chavis' son, John Chavis, became Black and African-American, which is the current racial classification for so-called black people to this very day. How was this racial classification possible when he was the son of a Berber Muur that was a Cherokee Indian chief? This is evidence of paper genocide against the Berber Indians, aka, Muurs, because you clearly see how the Chavis family was initially Berber Muurs (Saracens), then the family became Cherokee Indians, then the family became Mulatoes, then the family became Black; and now the Chavis Family and all of the other overthrown Muurs are called African-Americans to this very day. African-American is a new term that was invented by Jesse Jackson in the 80's when he ran for president.

According to "Christopher Columbus was Driven by 3 winds," which can be read in its entirety at: https://www.commondreams.org/views/2014/10/11/christopher-columbus-driven-ill-winds?fbclid=IwAR2r32Iwc3jCgkqrkeXimwGj5alKZRQHqdWAGqcVtj9IhK2SFQSnDx8LpeU. "Columbus's Nina, Pinta and Santa Maria were driven across the Atlantic by the same ill winds that from 1095 to 1272 launched nine European Crusades to capture Moslem Jerusalem (Granada land: Israel/ promised land). Defeated and humiliated the invaders suffered staggering human losses, left royal treasuries depleted, and convinced Christian leaders to only pay lip service to another try.

Except for Christopher Columbus. Born Christopher Colon this ambitious Genoese craved adventure, was given to religious mysticism to the point he accepted God's personal command to free the Holy Land. He also saw God's hand in cloud formations, splashing waves, and distant stars, and had read a religious book that convinced him the world would end in 150 years. He claimed at sea he once saw three mermaids dancing on waves, and was sure in distant lands he would meet men with tails or heads of dogs. God had chosen him specifically to see Christianity victorious "throughout the universe." And he would follow His command to convert or destroy Moslems, Jews and other non-believers. Columbus's earliest sea experiences were as a youth serving on Portuguese slave-trading ships along Africa's Atlantic coast. He learned men, women and children could be captured and sold for enormous profits. With enough slaves and gold, even a lowly Columbus could finally end the infidel grip on Holy Land." [end quote].

Now, in the eyes of the Hijack Roman Hebrews (Knights Templar), aka, the Holy Roman Empire, the Habsburg Dynasty, the Holy Land was in possession of infidels, aka, Moslems (Muurs/ Moors); therefore, the Pope authorized the Knights Templar, via, the Dum diversas of 1452 to take Moslem Jerusalem (the Americas/ Granada land, or the promised land of Israel) away from the Muurs, whom were Saracens: https://the-red-thread.net/genealogy/andrews.html.

Here is the Dum Diversas, which authorized the Knights Templar (knights of Christ) to conquer Saracens (Muurs/ Moors) and pagans (Hebrews/ Jews), take their possessions, and to subject them to perpetual servitude (slavery): https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Dum_Diversas. This papal Bull and none of them were ever rescinded, which is the current problem that Muurs in the Americas face, as Saracens, whom are the RED ONES, aka, the lost Tribe of Israel. This papal Bull was issued against the Muurs, as Saracens, in order to take our Moslem-Jerusalem away from us, which was Granada land. Read this Facebook post that I wrote for evidence that the Americas is Granada (Israel/ promised land): https://www.facebook.com/Americaisthetrueoldworld/posts/2516310255099926.

Notice on the 1597 map of Granada Nova, you will see the famed seven cities of Cibola, aka, the seven cities of gold, surrounding a lake on the said map. Granada has the same name as the Pomegranate in Spanish. The Spanish word for the fruit is Granada and therefore the symbol of the promised land/ Israel, because the pomegranate appears throughout the streets of Granada in Spain, as you wander around the city. The Pomegranate is also associated with the promise land of Israel, because a pomegranate is a metaphor for the richness of the promised land of Israel (Deut. 8:8); in the Song of Solomon, Sulamith's cheeks are compared to halves of a pomegranate (Cant. 4: 3).

The pomegranate is a symbol of life and fertility, due to the many seeds, but also as a symbol of power (imperial orb), blood and death. Pomegranates already symbolized fertility, beauty, and eternal life, in Greek and Persian mythology. The Ancient Greeks considered a pomegranate a symbol of fertility and associated it with the goddesses Demeter, Persephone, Aphrodite, and Athena.

In Christian symbolism, the numerous seeds in this fruit represent the Church, unity in faith and a community of believers; in the same vein, a pomegranate appears in depictions of Mary as 'the Mother of the Church'. (See Madonna of the Pomegranate).

Pomegranates play an important role as a symbol of righteousness in Judaism, as they supposedly contain 613 seeds, which correspond to the 613 commandments of the Torah. Thus, at Rosh Hashanah (Jewish New Year), Jews eat this fruit one seed at a time, for as many wishes as possible to be fulfilled.

In Buddhism, pomegranates, peaches, and lemons are considered three blessed kinds of fruit. The pomegranate when fully bloomed resembles the shape of the 6-pointed star of David, which is a Symbol of Judah. Yes, the ole saying, "A picture is worth a thousand words," is true in this instance.

The Koran mentions a pomegranate three times (6:99, 6:141 and 55:68), representing, for example, the good things created by God, whether earthly fruit or that of Paradise, hence it is also sometimes referred to as the 'apple of paradise'. In the Middle Ages, the resemblance between a pomegranate and an imperial orb made it a symbol of power. Albrecht Dürer painted two portraits of Holy Roman Emperor Maximilian I, holding a pomegranate, to represent the imperial orb. Since then pomegranates have been an aphrodisiac and are an ingredient of many love potions.

Now, that we know the significance of the pomegranate, let us talk more about Granada land (Israel/ Promised land), which covered a large portion of the Americas according to the maps I have shared in this chapter. The maps also show you the mythical city of Cibola, which was famous for its Seven cities of Gold. The mythical city of Quivira was one of those 7 golden cities. Quivira is now in the Kansas (sons of Khan) state region, which is in Wichita territory. We also know that Wichita is a corruption of the Washitaw Muur Empire. The Washitaw Muurs were known as the Mound Builders and the Ancient Ones. The UNITED NATIONS has already recognized the Washitaw Muurs as the oldest indigenous people on the planet.

The old maps and links show you the mythical city of Anian (Ani/ Anu), which is heavily associated with the Kingdom of the mythological Priest-King/ Dragon-King/ Black Panther, Prester John. Yes, Anian was very real. "It is in the Mythical that we have the truth." ~ Greek proverb. My advice family is to look for the truth in every myth, because our history was so great that it was too much to hide; therefore, all of our great history that they couldn't hide from us they just told us that it was mythical so that we would not attach ourselves to the greatness. History is especially important, because it gives you a sense of competency and it lets you know who you once were, so that you can achieve the same results again. If history were not one of the most important subjects to learn they would not have spent billions, if not trillions, of dollars hiding your history from you.

Below are additional maps that we can use as evidence. I gave the links to the maps so that you can click on the links, so you can zoom in and see it for yourself.

1650, Barry Lawrence Ruderman Map of America from the Stanford Library: https://searchworks.stanford.edu/view/vr898bw7334. Notice that this map shows you Cibola, Granada, and Quivira. Please click on the link I gave from the Stanford University library, so that you can zoom in to see it better.

1683, Manesson-Mallet, Allain, map of California and New Mexico. Please click on the link I gave from the Stanford University library, so that you can zoom in to see it better. Notice Nueva Granada on the map when you zoom in: https://exhibits.stanford.edu/california-as-a.../.../gr011nv4870

1660, Doncker, Hendrick, map of Nueva Granada and California as an Island. Please click on the link I gave from the Stanford University library, so that you can zoom in to see it better. Notice Nueva Granada on the map when you zoom in: https://exhibits.stanford.edu/california-as-a.../.../qt469cf8909.

1666, Loon, J. van, map of Nova Granada and California as an Island. Please click on the link I gave from the Stanford University library, so that you can zoom in to see it better. Notice Nova Granada on the map when you zoom in: https://exhibits.stanford.edu/california-as-a.../.../zy439mc5915.

1711 Map of California as an Island and the Gulf of California or Red Sea: https://exhibits.stanford.edu/california-as-a.../.../xy324jt5865. The significance of this map is that it is further evidence to prove that the Americas is the promised land, aka, Granada, because the Khalifa Muurs or Israelites from California had to cross the Red Sea to get to Granada, aka, the Promised land/Israel, which is the land of Milk and Honey, due to its abundance of resources (wealth); especially, Gold (Honey) and Pearls/ Precious stones (Milk). Khandrop on YouTube did a great video to demonstrate that the Americas is the promised land: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=ZxFDB_CBoZ0&t=2907s.

RFG Chosen One did a great youtube video called, "The Americas – The True Egypt and Israel": https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=R7XveyiqtHs&t=3s, in which he explained that the America's has more natural resources than Africa. I agree with him too.

Here is another Red Sea map. This 1719 Map of California shows you California as an Island and the Gulf of California or Red Sea: https://exhibits.stanford.edu/california-as-a.../.../yc810rj3545.

Here is the Old Testament Map of America and it is another Red Sea map (see blog image). This map shows you Moab, Jerusalem, Egypt, Babylon, Mesopotamia, and etc. Notice the Red Sea that separates California from Granada land/ the promised land of Israel.

Also, in this blog post is a 1745 map of the state of California by R. W. Seale. This 1745 map shows you the State of California as an Island and it shows you that the Island of California was separated from Granada land (the rest of mainland America) by the Red Sea or the California sea. The Interesting thing about this 1745 map is that the map cartographer R. W. Seale said that he made this 1745 map as a satire, lol. No..., this map is no Satire and it is very real; especially, when you consider the other maps and links that confirm that California was once an Island separated from the promised land or Granada land by the Red Sea. Its too much evidence to say that this 1745 map is satire.

THE ISRAELITES HAD TO CROSS THE RED SEA TO GET INTO GRANADA LAND (the promised land/ Israel):

According to the Exodus story of the Bible found in the Book of Exodus 14:1-30, Moses led the Israelites from Egypt to the Promised land, but they had to cross the Red Sea to get to the Promised land (Granada land), because they were being chased by the Egyptians. Moses parted the Red Sea with his Rod or staff so that the Children of Israel could cross over to the promised land. The Egyptians that pursed Moses and the Israelites were drowned in the Red sea. So far, you have seen maps and links showing you the state of California as an island and being seperated by the Red sea from Granada land/ the promised land of Israel.

The interesting thing about the landmass on the other side of the Red Sea, which was Granada land (see blog image and links of maps), is that Granada means Israel or the Promised land, since the word Granada, literally means "pomegranate" in Spanish. The Pomegranate is a symbol of the Star of David (a symbol of Judah/ Israel), because when this fruit is fully bloomed it resembles the 6-pointed star of David (see blog image). Previously, I demonstrated the power and riches of Granada land (Israel/ Promised land) by proving that the mythical 7 golden cities of Cibola were real. Cibola (Shamballa) is the origin of the word Calalus. Calalus, which was a Roman Jewish Colony in America, means promised land. Additionally, the State of California has it owns Holy land in San Diego, California called "Tierra Santa." Tierra Santa, Spanish for "holy land," or "holy ground", is a community within the city of San Diego, California. California is also called the Golden State, because of its abundance of Gold and it is famous for its Gold Rush.

Just to support the videos I shared from Khandrop and RFG the Chosen one, about the Americas being the land of Milk and Honey, we have to also factor in the Golden Kingdom of Queen Khalifa (Califia) in California and the seven cities of Cibola, which was surrounded by a lake in Granada Land. Queen Khalifa was a Muurish Empress whose empire stretched from Hawaii to South America. History writes off Queen Khalifa as a Spanish Myth, because she went to war with the Spanish. However, Queen Khalifa was no myth. She was real and she ruled over the Cushites or Ethiopians in the Land of Cush (the Americas).

Evidence to suggest that Queen Khalifa was real is the fact that she ruled over an Island. The evidence in this post confirms that the state of California, which was named after Queen Califia, was once an Island that was separated by the Red Sea from the Promised land of Israel or Granada Land (the rest of mainland America). More Evidence that Queen Califia was no myth is the fact that the seal of the State of California bears her image (see blog image). Also, a team of researchers has confirmed that Queen Khalifa and her Amazons were very real. This article is entitled, "The History of Queen Califia and the California Blacks:"https://eurweb.com/2015/04/19/the-history-of-queen-califia-and-the-california-blacks/. The DC Comic Book Character, "Wonder Woman," is based off of Queen Khalifa, because Queen Khalifa was a witch (a Priest-Queen) and a great warrior. Queen Khalifa was basically a female Prester John.

Totonteac is also one of the mythical golden cities of Cibola, so yes there was more than Seven golden cities of Cibola. Totonteac is also on virtually all the Granada maps that I shared in this blog, so yes it did exist too. There were 9 cities of gold in Granada Land if you add in the golden city of Quivira, Totonteac, and the 7 cities of Gold that surround the lake in Granada Land. There were more than 9 because Queen Khalifa had a Golden Kingdom in California. Queen Khalifa use to walk around on gold dust because her Kingdom was just that rich. Plus, there were cities of Gold in Central and South America too that we can also factor in. The interesting thing about Totonteac is that Area 51 is built on top of this ancient golden city!

We know that Granada is associated with Maurs/ Muurs/ Moors, aka, Hebrew Israelite Muurs, because Granada was the Alma Mater of the Muurs; and I found a book, "The Anatomy of Melancholy: What it Is, with All the Kinds Causes, Symptomes," by Robert Burton, from 1628 that describes a inhabitant of Totonteac as being a Barbarian (which is just code for Berber/ Negro/ Indian) from Totonteac (see blog image of the Book diagram). Notice that the book quote also refers to the inhabitant of Tontonteac as a 'Saldanian Negro.' Saladin was an Islamic Blackamoor that was a General that fought during the Medieval crusades. This is significant because if a major Golden city like Totonteac had melanite (dark or Black) inhabitants that means that the other cities of Granada Land were just as melanite.

According to the online etymological dictionary, which is 21 different sources, we read this for the etymology of the name Moor: "North African, Berber," late 14c., from O.Fr. More, from M.L. Morus, from L. Maurus "inhabitant of Mauritania," from Gk. Mauros, perhaps a native name, or else cognate with mauros "black." Being a dark people in relation to Europeans, their name in the Middle Ages was asynonym for "Negro;" later (16c.-17c.) used indiscriminately of Muslims (Persians, Arabs, etc.) but especially those in India. If you notice the second definition in the etymon, the name Moor also means "Berber" which is one of our ancient race names as well. In the Negro Laws of South Carolina of 1839 reads as such: "The term Negro is confined to slave Africans (Ancient Berbers) and their descendants."[2] [1] The Cambridge Ancient History, Vol. 11: The High Empire, A.D. 70-192. (see image of the Negro Law that states that Negroes are descendants of the Ancient Berbers).

Indians were also called Niggers, which is a noun and adjective, according to the Oxford English Dictionary http://www.oed.com/viewdictionaryentry/Entry/126934 . (See Oxford Definition 3.a.). The Black/Copper color people that inhabit the continents from Canada until Argentina have been called the Americans since almost 100,000 years before even the USA existed as a country. Mahogany is a reddish-brown color. It is approximately the color of the wood mahogany. American (AMER'ICAN), adjective pertaining to America. AMER'ICAN, noun: a native of America; originally applied to the aboriginals, or copper-colored races, found here by the Europeans; but now applied to the descendants of Europeans born in America. Websters Dictionary 1828 – Webster's Dictionary 1828 – American: https://bit.ly/3iArg5i.

The Coronado Expedition (Invasion) had nothing to do with race, since the invasion was all about seizing Granada Land/ the promised land of Israel from the Moslems, but mostly, the seven golden cities of Cibola, in which he found. Unfortunately, those seven cities of Gold were looted and the gold was shipped to Rome (the Vatican), England, Spain, France, London, and other Illuminati families. The Gold that was taken from the Americas enabled the Illuminati to take over the world, so now you all understand why Rome (the Eagle/ the phoenix) had to take the gold that once belonged to and was guarded by the Naga/ Dragon people, whom are the Chosen people.

Why were all of the Corn Places destroyed, except for the First Corn palace in South Dakota (dragon/ serpent), which still exists? Well, because the buildings did not fit in with the current narrative of the Americas being a uncivilized, New World, so most of the old world, pre-mud flood, buildings were either destroyed or converted into federal buildings, courthouses, Governor's mansion, Capital buildings, post offices, state buildings, Universities, and etc. Freemasonry also means, "the masonry that was free," because all Europeans had to do was dig out these Moorish/ Tartarian structures from the mud after the great comet of 1811-1812, had completely destroyed the Old World Order, via, massive earthquakes, massive tidal waves, massive Volcano eruptions, a great mud flood, and etc.

Please, read this Facebook post I wrote About the Fairhaven Hotel, because this post proves that it was a great mud flood that destroyed the Old World order that was ruled by Muurs. The legend of Fairhaven is that it was built by Vikings. I can believe that because the Vikings were Saracens/ Berbers and they allegedly discovered America first:
https://www.facebook.com/Americaisthetrueoldworld/posts/2090376994359923.

For more mud flood evidence, please check out the Tampa Bay (Bey) Hotel. Look at that beautiful Tartarian red brick:
https://www.facebook.com/Americaisthetrueoldworld/posts/2525782027486082.

The US Capitol Building and all of the State Capitol Buildings in the UNITED STATES display Gothic and Greco-Roman Architecture, which is Moorish/ Tartarian craftsmanship. Yes, the Cherokee where the Real Romans and they built all of the Greco-Roman Architecture and the Cherokee Gothic Architecture in the Americas:
https://www.facebook.com/Americaisthetrueoldworld/posts/2578185658912385.

A Glimpse Of Life In An Ottoman Sultan's Harem

Jen Jeffers

Rarely have women in history played a more deliciously mysterious role than that of the 600 years of the Ottoman Empire, when what is modern-day Turkey and lands from the Balkans to Syria sat at the center of a great Empire. These were the days of the harem, when women - and girls as young as seven years old - were held in a secret world where they could be governed, educated, and primarily enjoyed by the sultan and his court.

But as slaves or subjects? Given as gifts or claimed as spoils of war, these women represented the caliphate's power, wealth, and sexual prowess. Just like a scene from Arabian Nights, daily life in an Ottoman harem was a life suspended in a secret paradise full of sensual delights - as well as endless rules, expectations, and boundaries. Derived from the Arabic word haram meaning sacred or forbidden, the harem was part of a legendary patriarchy that tried to bottle the essence of woman, capture it in all its glory, and use it solely for its own felicity.

The Ottoman Empire Evolved Into A Seriously Male-Dominated Society

During the 8th and 9th centuries, Turkish nomads were pushed from their homes, eventually converting to Islam when the Mongols arrived on the scene. By 1299 CE, the Ottoman Empire was established, bringing a lot of changes to the region, including taxation, social shifts, and a great deal of religious indoctrination. Between 1299 and 1923 CE, it also brought about a cultural phenomenon known as "The Imperial Harem," which held all the wives, servants, female relatives, and sultans' concubines in the court. As the Empire expanded its territory, sultans came and went; economic and social institutions evolved from the Byzantine Empire; and Islam became the pervasive law of the land.

Women Of The Harem Were Secluded And Hidden From The World

The entrance to a harem was hidden away in the center of an elaborate court. The women who occupied these immaculate spaces rarely left the confines of the court - but at least their surroundings were drop dead gorgeous. Placed in an ethereal world of green and blue tiled rooms, outlined in gold and lined with plush furniture, the outside world became a distant notion, only glimpsed through the occasional view of the Sea of Marmara.

Eunuchs, some of whom could become quite powerful within the court, monitored the women of the harem. No one was allowed to see them unless first carefully inspected by senior officials who ensured there was no funny business on either end. It was also forbidden for men to look upon another man's harem. But it was just not the eunuch who could weasel his way into positions of power. Women who lived in the harem, if they were smart and lucky enough, could also achieve great authority, respect, and wealth within the imperial court.

The Harem Was Gorgeous

The surroundings of the harem were beyond gorgeous. The center of the harem dwellers' realm was a great pavilion with a giant courtyard where the women could bathe in a pool or gaze upon a garden. It was blissfully peaceful and quiet, a place where contemplation and rest were commonplace. The courtyard was a gathering space for the women to read together, pray, or just share stories, and it offered a much-needed escape from the interiors of their confinement. Within their gilded cage were private apartments for the sultan and more than 400 rooms for sleeping, entertaining, and living.

The Imperial Harem typically housed scores of women, including the sultan's official wives, mother, daughters, female relatives, and servant girls. And of course, the eunuchs were always watching in the wings for any impropriety. The sons of the sultan also lived in the harem until they were about 12 years old, at which point they were considered men and allowed to appear as palace courtesans.

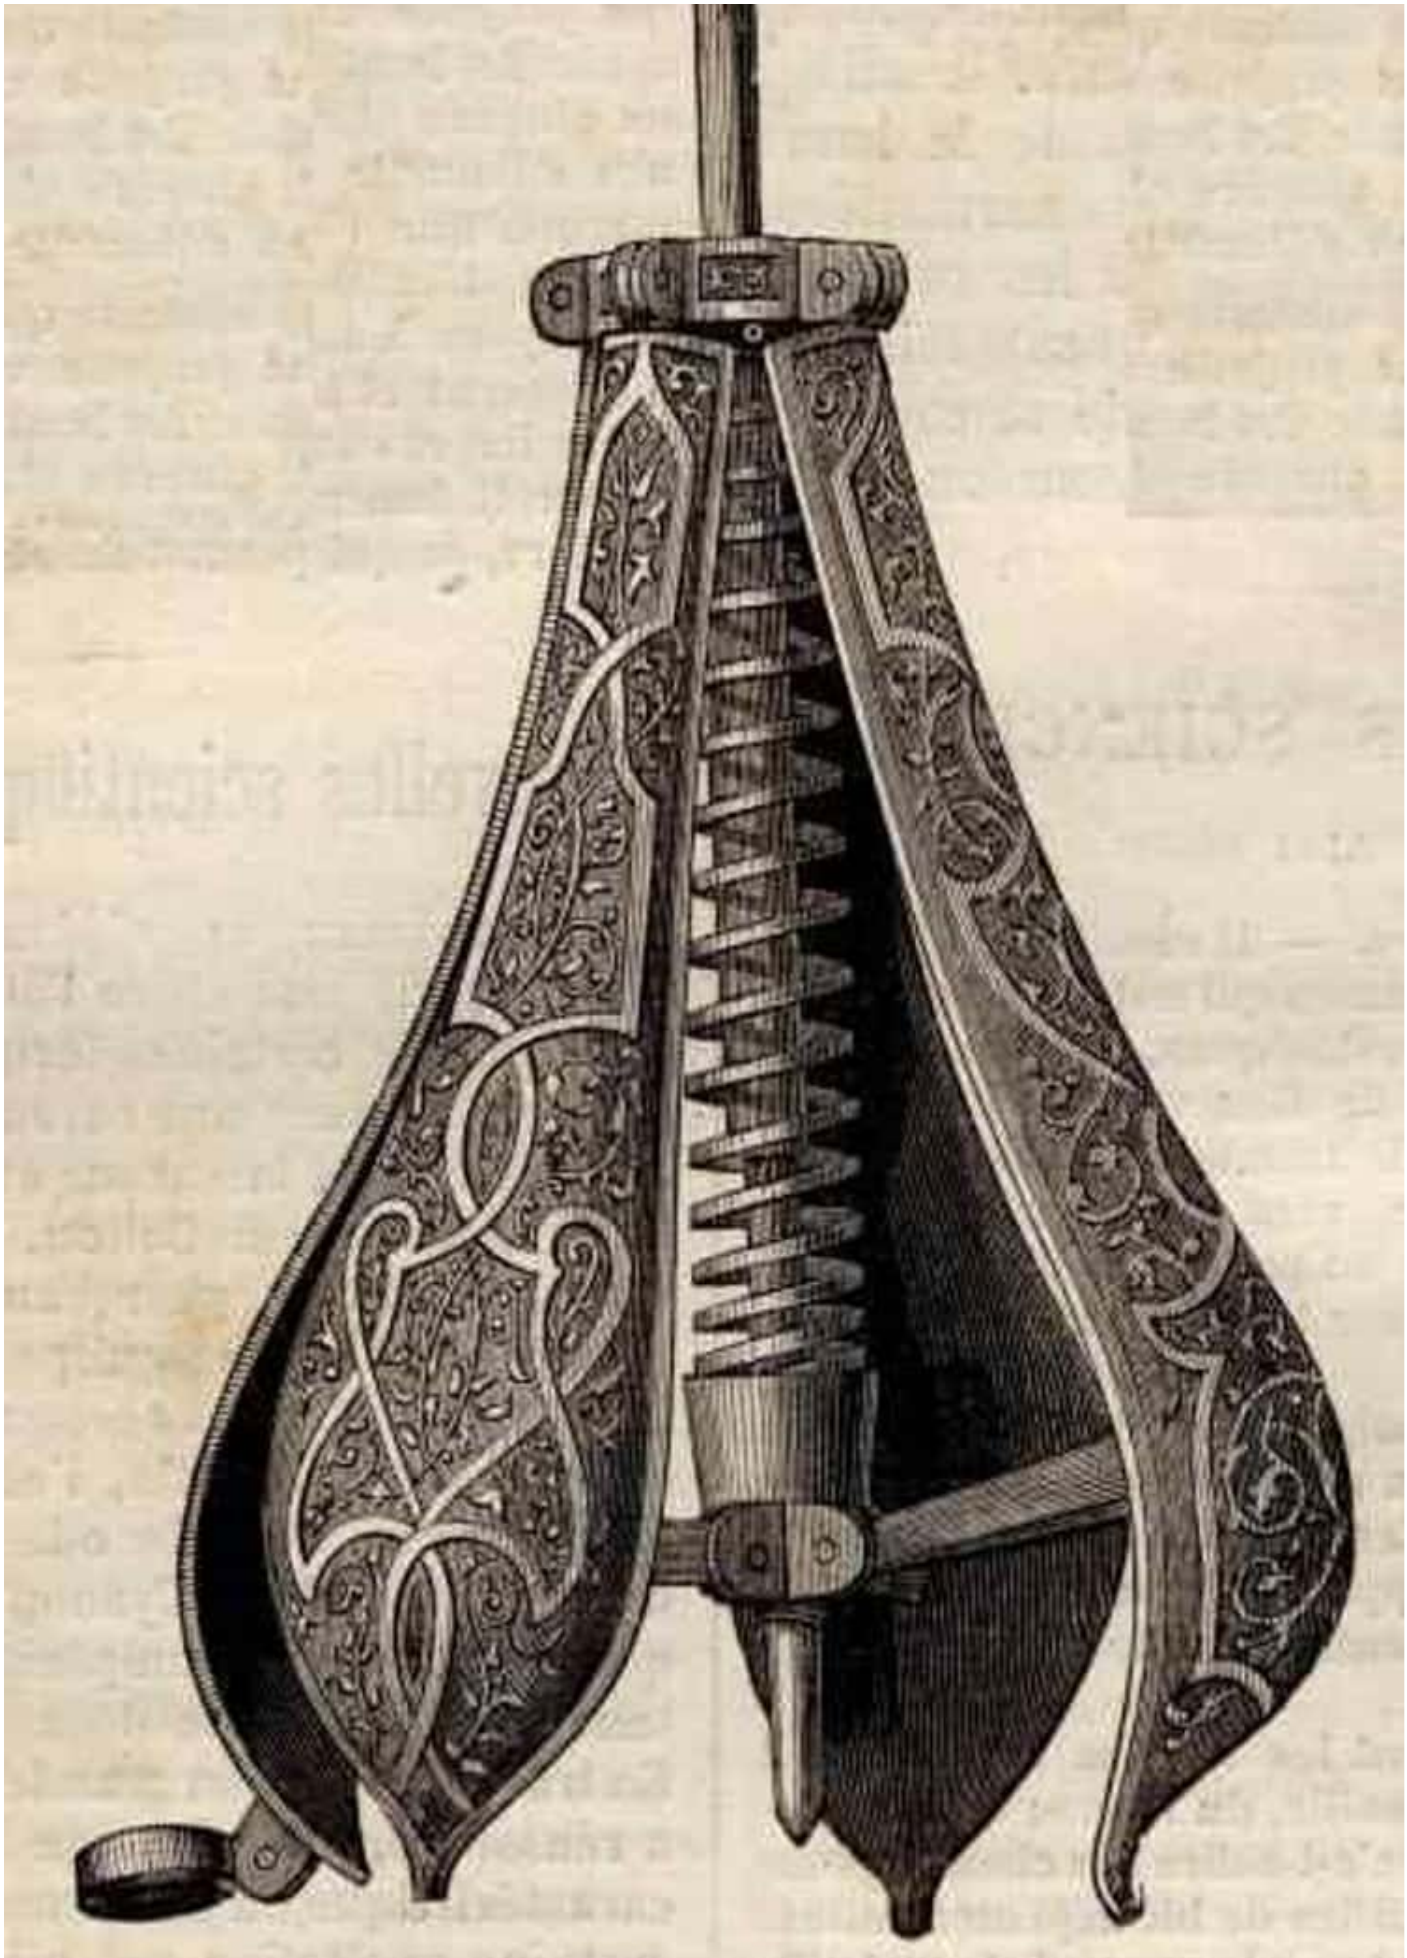
Things People Believe About Historical Torture That Are Just Not True



Genevieve Carlton
Updated July 19, 2022 • 211.9k views • 12 items

The iron maiden. The rack. The pear of anguish. Torture museums gleefully display these horrific devices, claiming they were used on thousands during the medieval era. But it turns out most of our beliefs about historical torture simply aren't true.

Nearly every article about gruesome torture devices includes forms of torture that never existed. Take the iron maiden, for example. It was invented in the 18th century to make the medieval era look more barbaric. Stories about bamboo torture pop up in literature, but there's no proof it ever took place. And the pear of anguish wasn't used to rip open orifices. In fact, it might have been a sock stretcher.

MYTH: Sexual Deviants Were Punished With The Pear Of Anguish

The Myth: After being inserted into one of a victim's various orifices, the pear of anguish was screwed open until the skin was stretched beyond endurance.

Where You've Seen It: Torture museums.

The Reality: The first mention of the pear of anguish comes from the 19th century, with no evidence that the device was used for torture. A recent examination of devices in torture museums shows it was too weak to open inside a bodily orifice. On top of that, the latch device could never be opened while the pear was inside someone's body.

As for the objects themselves, historian Chris Bishop says they were possibly sock stretchers or glove wideners.

MYTH: Criminals Experienced A Slow, Piercing Punishment In The Iron Maiden

The Myth: Victims were forced into a dark chamber studded with spikes. When the doors closed, the spikes pierced their bodies.

Where You've Seen It: Movies, the internet, torture museums, you name it.

The Reality: The iron maiden was a phony invention from the 18th century. Writer Johann Philipp Siebenkees claimed that, centuries earlier, a Nuremberg criminal perished inside an Egyptian mummy case lined with spikes. By the 19th century, fake iron maidens were on display across Europe, particularly in torture museums.

Multiple sources repeated the false stories, turning the iron maiden into a legendary medieval torture device.

MYTH: The Catholic Church Brutally Tortured Witches

The Myth: The Catholic Church brutally tortured women to force them to confess to witchcraft.

Where You've Seen It: Across popular culture.

The Reality: Accused witches were indeed tortured across Europe, largely in the 16th and 17th centuries. However, the Catholic Church rarely tortured accused witches. During the 1609-11 Basque witch hunt overseen by the Inquisition, only two suspects out of thousands were tortured - and both received a reduced sentence of banishment rather than execution.

Secular authorities were much more likely to torture accused witches, especially to force victims to accuse others. This is what spurred the largest witch hunts. The Inquisition, by contrast, was comparatively less brutal to the accused.

Le 20 janvier 1790, un groupe de huit personnes a soumis une pétition à la Chambre des représentants de Caroline du Sud. Ils y relatent leur détention chez les Portugais qui les ont faits prisonniers de guerre après les avoir capturés dans leur pays d'origine, le Maroc. Les individus disent avoir été livrés à un capitaine nommé Clark, qui leur a promis leur rachat par l'Ambassade du Maroc en Angleterre. Ils auraient retrouvé leur liberté, sauf que Clark n'a pas tenu ses promesses et les a conduits en Caroline du Sud. Revendus en esclaves, les individus ont défendu le fait qu'ils soient sujets d'un sultan allié des États-Unis, qui n'est autre que Mohammed Ben Abdallah (1757-1790). Après examen de leur pétition, la décision a été rendue par la Chambre : « Les personnes qui sont les Sujets de l'Empereur du Maroc étant Libres dans cet État ne sont pas justiciables selon la Loi commandant pour le meilleur ordre et la meilleure direction des Noirs et autres esclaves ». Ce principe implique que les Maures ne doivent pas être soumis aux lois dites du Negro Act. Ainsi, le Moors Sundry Act a été adopté la même année, pour octroyer aux Maures un statut particulier qui les reconnaît juridiquement comme « blancs ».

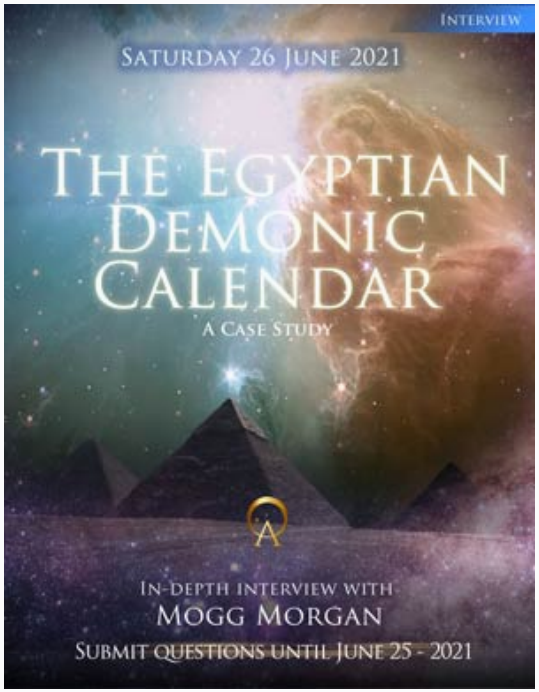
Egyptian Demons and Magic: Exorcising Evil Spirits

READ LATER | PRINT



Most of us are familiar with the images of the deities, kings and queens of Egypt; but for every one of the famous scenes reproduced from those times, smaller, more obscure supernatural figures are far more numerous. Many of these entities fall into a category of supernatural beings known as demons or daemons. They also have an ongoing existence after the pharaonic culture, the end of Paganism, the rise of Christianity, the coming of Islam, and even into our own modern era.

There is a clear continuity for these entities through time. When it comes to the old Egypt, the study of these supernatural entities is still in its infancy. Swansea University hosts a Demon Things database, established in 2016, and for budgetary reasons has a restricted timeline of 2000-1000 BC - but already it has thousands of entries.

Historically, the existence of something recognizable as demonic is first recorded even before written records, in images from Ice Age rock art. These entities have human bodies but with an animal head, the so-called "goat demon" being one of the earliest. Perhaps because this could also be a human wearing an animal mask, we call them demons rather than monsters.

- An Unbreakable Story: The Lost Roman Invention of Flexible Glass

Monsters first make an appearance much later after the invention of writing, and are usually human-headed but with an animal's body. For instance, the terrifying Pazuzu as seen in the first few frames of the horror movie The Exorcist.

My first exploration of the role of the demon in Egyptian magic was published in my book, Supernatural Assault in Ancient Egypt . Here demons are discussed alongside an Egyptian exorcism cult known as “Zar”. The meaning of Zar is uncertain but is likely from a north African language transplanted into Arabic as a loan word meaning “to visit” or “a visitation”.

The Magical Folk Tradition of Zar

The Zar cult is a folk magical tradition from the North African and Near Eastern world, principally Egypt and Sudan, but also Iran. It makes use of music and dance to “exorcise” intrusive spirits or Djinn. I first learnt of the cult from I. M. Lewis’s classic study of Ecstatic Religion a study of shamanism and spirit possession .

I was also much inspired by a chapter in Jan Fries ’ book on European trance technique known as Seidr, which he found analogous to the Zar tradition. In his book he reproduced an important foundation myth, as told to anthropologist Enno Littman’s in the 1950s. A female practitioner, known as Mama (Baba for male) told him that Zar was first performed in ancient Egypt to cure a King's daughter of a mysterious ailment.

These days Zar rites are still very much practiced in Egypt, but tend to be seen as a women's mystery. In fact, I've even been told that the tradition is only really accessible to women, but in as far as this is true, which it definitely isn't in Iran or Sudan, it would be a modern development. In Egypt, the Zar tradition is entangled with "Belly", more accurately Beladi dancing. Beladi means "village dancing" a style of dance originally practiced in Upper Egypt by men in combination with a martial arts tradition of stick fighting.

Possessed by Ghosts

In the 1930s Hans Winkler met several spirit mediums in Egypt and was able to record their stories in a lively account as "Ghost Riders of Upper Egypt". His principal informant was Abd al-Radi, a man regularly possessed by the ghost of his uncle, from which state he passed messages to those who came to seek his help.

Winkler combined this work with groundbreaking research on desert rock art, Sigils and “Characters” of Islamic sorcery, thus connecting the Islamic and pre-Islamic world of magical signs and symbols. As a Nazi, he soon returned to Germany and died in military service.

Islamic stamped amulet, 19th-century India. Executed on a very thin white paper, the amulet comprises a number of magic squares, Qur'anic verses, and divine or holy names all intended to bring good luck or provide protection to its owner. (Public Domain)

Over the last few years, several new studies have extended this work. Since the 1980s the academic study of magic has been revolutionized by practitioners and academics such as

Robert Ritner. He unraveled the details of ancient Egyptian demonology and showed how it eventually emerged as the driving force of all Egyptian magic.

Gods and Their Demonic Emissaries

The god Seth or Set is often advanced as the archetype of the demonic entity and leader of the demonic horde. Seth's "trickster nature" is well-known, but many of his "ambiguous qualities can be shared by other gods." So, for example, in what is arguably the world's oldest dramatic text, The Contendings of Horus & Seth , the otherwise good god Osiris threatens a demonic attack against the other gods in a celestial tribunal if they do not hurry and make a decision! The lioness goddess Sekhmet can also bring disease, being responsible for the annual epidemics of plague to strike Egypt in the dangerous interregnum between the old year and the new.

Set, an ancient Egyptian deity. (CC BY-SA 4.0)

Those who succumbed were struck down by one of her seven deadly arrows often personified as demonic emissaries. Demons such as Hatayw, Shamayw, and Akhw are common names in the Egyptian language. Hatayw is often translated as ‘Knife bearers’, ‘murderers’, ‘night spirits’. In the Late Egyptian language, the term is shortened first to Hawet, then Demotic Hayet, finally Coptic Shayet all meaning ‘inspiration’, ‘exorcism’, ‘doom’, ‘fate’, ‘fury’, or ‘curse’, depending on the context. Shamayw are ‘wandering demons’. Akhw variously as the ‘undead’, ‘transfigured dead’, ‘ghosts,’ rather like vampires. So perhaps Anne Rice’s fictional placement of the original vampire myth in ancient Egypt does have some basis in the mythology.

Ram-headed demon, hands outstretched probably to hold two snakes. From a royal tomb in the Valley of the Kings, Thebes, Egypt. End of the 18th Dynasty, around 1325 BC. (Jon Bodsworth/ Public Domain)

In the final millennial of ancient Egyptian history these demons became protectors in personal names such as Pa-na-hatayw or Nas-na-hatayw (both meaning “he of the slaughtering demons”). In Ptolemaic Thebes there was a full-blown cult of the Hatayw (genies) that had its own dedicated prophet or Hem-neter. Later still one finds the cult of syncretic deity Tutu (twtw), originally an oases god who rose to national popularity in Egypt. Tutu's name means "image" of the "collectivity" of disease-bringing demons!

Horrible Plague-Bringers

Magic often involves interactions with disease entities, supernatural or divine personifications of terrible plagues or smallpox. Late classical cultures of Hindu Tantra and Kaula have the same deeply ambiguous, "daemonic" goddesses. This is a clear example of where one fights fire with fire. So although "the Egyptians did not live in terror of their gods' capricious whims nor was Egyptian theology fixated on the vindictive or jealous nature of a god in the manner of Genesis 20:5, healing spells often paired demons and gods together as possible causes of disease.

The Biblical 'Fifth Plague of Egypt'. (Wellcome Images/ CC BY 4.0 )

The late Egyptian tale or Report of Wenamon has an episode in which Hatayw is translated as 'frenzied', and is used in a significant way to mean becoming possessed by a spirit, which then issues instructions to Wenamon to flee the city:

> "when he sacrificed to his gods...the god seized one of his noble youths, [a medium] making him frenzied, so that he said: "Bring [the god] hither! Bring the messenger of Amon who hath him. Send him and let him go." Now, when the frenzied youth continued in frenzy during this night, I found a ship bound for Egypt, and I loaded all my belongings into it. I waited for the darkness, saying:

> "When it descends, I will embark the god also, in order that no other eye may see him."

Hatayw is also used in the account of the Bentresh Stela, a monumental inscription of Persian times, although falsely ascribed to Ramesses II, presumably to give it extra clout. Evoking the name of a famous ancestor is standard practice in magical texts, Solomon being the most widespread example; see for example the pseudo-eponymous Testament of Solomon . It serves to give extra authority, that those hearing the contents, including spirits, will not risk contradicting —just in case.

The Bentresh Stela. (CC BY 3.0)

The Possessed Princess

This stele contains a long account of the relationship between Great King Ramesses and the distant princedom of Bakhtan, perhaps Bactria on the Pakistan/Afghan border. After a successful diplomatic exchange between the two kingdoms, they cement the relationship with a marriage of the Bactrian prince's sister, who becomes one of Ramesses many royal wives. Years later, news arrives from the young queen's homeland that a mysterious malady had seized the body of her younger sister, Bentresh, who is possessed by a spirit called an Akhw.

- Were The Worshipers of the Egyptian God Set Following a God or a Demon?
- Ancient Demons and Their Infernal Legacy

Ramesses summons priests from the Theban House of Life attached to the temple of the moon god Khonsu, experts in magic and demonology. One is dispatched to Bactria to investigate and reports that the princess Bentresh is indeed possessed by a spirit and that he is an enemy whom he can defeat, although the priest first needs a special statue to finish the job. This kind of image-magic involving statues is the bread and butter of ancient sorcery. A statue representing a special form of the moon god called "Khonsu-who-determines-fate" is duly dispatched from the temple to Bactria.

Khonsu, an ancient Egyptian god depicted as a mummiform child with a moon disk on his head. (CC BY-SA 4.0 )

After a very long journey the “god” arrives and preparation are made for a magical protection to cure the stricken princess. Then the spirit speaks to Khonsu, saying: “welcome in peace, great god, who expels disease demons! Bactria is your home, its people are your servants, and I am your servant! I shall go to the place from which I came, so as to set your heart at rest about that which you came for. May your majesty command to make a feast day with me and the prince of Bactria.” Then the ‘god’ motioned approval to his priest, saying let the prince of Bactria make a great offering before this spirit.

While all this was happening the prince and his soldiers were very frightened, but they did what was required, organized a great feast for the entire day and at the end of it the spirit departed and the princess was cured. The technique of animating statues with divine entities is a core technique of Egyptian magical practice. The way the statue indicates its desire usually involves some kind of forward or backward movement, rocking or changing of position.

How to Exorcise Demons? Say the Magic Word

The story is remarkably similar to the foundation myth of the modern day Zar cult as told to Enno Littman in the 1930s! It again shows that the “exorcism” in antique magic does not involve violent expulsion of a spirit, at least not as the preferred option. “Exorcism” is much more of a dialogue or transaction, which in this instance ends in a wild party at which all participants, including the sick person, undoubtedly had fun.

Both texts, the Voyage of Wenamun and the Bentresh Stela, use a similar technical magical word for the process of expelling the demon. This is the Hatayw – which has connotations of frenzied fury but also ecstasy leading to catharsis. It can be a power the magician casts or throws at a hostile entity, or a power that possesses the magician bestowing the ability to conjure and prophesize.

From the earliest times in the Old Kingdom it denoted a class of disease entities, but later, in the twilight of Egyptian culture, it meant the magician's power to enchant and conjure. It is from this base that the technique passed westwards into the grimoire traditions of Europe and eastwards to fuse with the religious impulse that in about the eighth to ninth century became Kaula and Tantra.

Demonology may well be making a comeback in our time as a complimentary therapy, an older version of the talking cure perhaps. Some research shows that Christianity's "Manichean" approach to demons may be bad for one's mental health. The ancient documents above demonstrate a more nuanced approach to a demonic reality, so the jury is still out as to whether this had a positive or negative effect on the ancient mind.

OUR MISSION

At Ancient Origins, we believe that one of the most important fields of knowledge we can pursue as human beings is our beginnings. And while some people may seem content with the story as it stands, our view is that there exist countless mysteries, scientific anomalies and surprising artifacts that have yet to be discovered and explained.

The goal of Ancient Origins is to highlight recent archaeological discoveries, peer-reviewed academic research and evidence, as well as offering alternative viewpoints and explanations of science, archaeology, mythology, religion and history around the globe.

We're the only Pop Archaeology site combining scientific research with out-of-the-box perspectives.

By bringing together top experts and authors, this archaeology website explores lost civilizations, examines sacred writings, tours ancient places, investigates ancient discoveries and questions mysterious happenings. Our open community is dedicated to digging into the origins of our species on planet earth, and question wherever the discoveries might take us. We seek to retell the story of our beginnings.

Tobacco pipes representing proverbs of the Asante (Representational Pipes), c. 1850 - 1930, Ghana.

“Representational Pipes are perhaps the most distinctive Ashanti pipe there is, and are common place in Museum Collections throughout Europe and Ghana. […]

Representational Pipes are easily identified by the sculpted bowl, which may take on any one of various anthropomorphic, zoomorphic or geometric forms (hence the name of the pipe type). As with most of the Asante visual arts, these forms are directly associated with proverbs.

That the pipes discussed here were used for smoking tobacco seems to be beyond doubt, for no such pipes have been found in a pre-European context. Rare are accounts of smoking herbs in pre-contact times. Yet historic documents are full of descriptions that tell of village residents trading for and smoking tobacco and illustrations show chiefs smoking pipes are common place. An example is seen in Isert’s tale of meeting the ruling chiefs at Ada, where two individuals are depicted smoking long stemmed pipes while seated in the middle of a palaver. Chiefs and other dignitaries are also portrayed holding tobacco pipes in Bowdich’s famous artistic rendition of greeting the Asantehene in Kumasi. These pipes are stylistically the same as those found in archaeological excavations.

By the end of the nineteenth century tobacco pipes became an attractive cultural curio for travellers to collect, and numerous tobacco pipes were brought back for display in museum collections across Europe”
-“On Tobacco Pipes in Asante”, by Brian Vivian

“Proverbial pipes were a luxury version of the daily smoking pipe. […] Some of these pipes had even been made as special commissions, which meant that their decoration exceeded their use value. The sculptural aspect of these pipes fits into the culture of which the known gold weights are a similar expression.

Tobacco consumption was not much less on the west coast of Africa than in Europe. Evidently tobacco originally came from the New World, supplied by European sailors either directly from Brazil or via a European country. The earliest mention of smoking comes from the English captain William Finch, who visited Sierra Leone in 1607. He discovered there that tobacco was grown at almost every hut and he described the importance of this herb by noting that “tobacco is half of the Negro's food”

It is unknown when tobacco was introduced to Ghana, although it would not have been much later than in nearby Sierra Leone. In 1705 a certain Bosman writes that tobacco is growing on the coast of Ghana. All natives seem to smoke tobacco, even though the negroes dealing with the Westerners have a clear preference for the tobacco supplied by the Portuguese or even tobacco that comes directly from Brazil. Smoking seems so important that the natives spend their last penny on it. Bosman praises the Negroes who smoke Spanish or Virgin tobacco for their good taste, but ridicules those who are content with Amersfoort tobacco. Apparently the imported local Dutch crop was not very highly regarded at the time.

From that time pipes were known, described by Bosman, with a stem of reeds or wood of six feet long, on which a pipe bowl made of stone or clay. This pipe bowl is called Taa sen in the Akan language. The stem of the pipe is so long because the pipe is not held in the hand but the pipe bowl is resting on the floor while smoking. In addition to the long-stemmed product, shorter pipes are also known.

That smoking was socially established is proven by another note, namely by a certain Mungo Park who writes at the end of the eighteenth century that in almost every city there is a kind of stage where people come together and smoke a pipe. At that time, smoking was seen as a pleasant pastime.

Important persons had a servant who assisted with smoking. Such a pipe keeper packed the pipe, lit it and monitored the fire, in other words they accompanied the entire smoking process.

For most pipe smokers, smoking was primarily a group event intended for moments of rest and relaxation. Tobacco was also burnt at funerals, to make the expulsion of the soul easier. When smokers died, it was customary to place their favourite pipe under their pillow, along with some tobacco.”

Ashanti representational pipe.

"This example would have had a separate, very long wood or reed stem. Its rectangular base steadied the pipe as it rested on the ground. It is in the form of a hornbill, taking the pose of the sankofa bird of Asante proverbs. It refers to the wisdom of looking back to discover how to go forward."

Ashanti representational pipe.

"Description: Tobacco pipe of earthenware with convex bowl on raised and weighted base with two triangular feet on the front and a flat bottom, ascending upright stem with modest stub. Bowl vertical tracks alternating with very fine and coarse lines, the bowl opening hemisphere with constricted ring. Stem three twisted smooth embossed bands between which two bands with four squares each with crosses. Stub with longitudinal strokes. Thin orange-brown engobe. Decoration originally rubbed with chalk.
Date: 1800-1880

Comments: One of the most common subjects executed in a skilful way. The repeating ornamental surface makes this pipe simple and peaceful in contrast to many pipes that are quite overwhelming. Nevertheless this pipe represents excellent craftsmanship and a great skill in shaping ceramic objects.

Meaning decoration: Depicted is a cooking pot or family pot in Akan language Abusua kuruwa."

"Description: Tobacco pipe of earthenware with high bowl on flat foot with two forward points, rising straight stem with stub. Bowl front embossed snake body with three zigzag around the bowl, neck and head end at the top of the stem with a sitting bird. Stem with three-storey layout with geometric-filled beds. Bowl base front between the protruding legs a rectangular roughened field, stem at the back a second seated bird. Stub ribbed along the length.

Date: 1850-1890

Comments: Unusual in its size as well as in its design because of the height which made it possible to zig zag the snake over bowl and stem so that an almost characteristic stylization is achieved. The bird motive on the stem shows the usual abstraction among the Ashanti art.

Meaning decoration: Depicted is a snake that normally lives on the ground and rarely takes a bird from the sky, this remarkable deed refers to lots of luck or an exceptional bargain."

"Description: Tobacco pipe of earthenware with figural bowl, flat bottom and rising stem with small stub. Bowl sitting bird on a flat rectangular base, looking left, the wings slightly spread, the bowl placed in the body, the smooth bowl opening protruding from the back of the bird, foot square with weighted corners, milling in between. Stem concentric bands alternately smooth and hatched. Under the stub a smooth button, small round stub with longitudinal strokes.

Date: 1800-1880

Comments: A beloved motive that is depicted in many different ways, this example is sturdy and craft fully executed with a scarce pattern of geometrical motives indicating the feathers of the bird.

Meaning decoration: In the iconography of the Asante four birds are distinguished: the eagle, crow, hawk and cockerel. This pipe depicts the eagle that refers to the expression: By coming and going the bird builds its nest, in other words for all labour time and patience is needed, finally leading to a result."

"Description: Tobacco pipe of earthenware with figural bowl, flat rectangular foot and rising stem with stub. Bowl standing leopard on four legs, the tail curled against the bowl opening, the head left and strongly stylized. The animal is covered with pressed circle holes that are derived from a mottled skin. Rectangular base with buttons on the corners, the raised edges with roughened fields. Stem light four-sided with panels on which incised geometric decoration, stub longitudinal standing lines. Decoration with traces of rubbed white chalk.

Meaning decoration: The leopard refers to the proverb: Kurotwiamansa toe nsuo mu a neho foe na ne ho nsensane woe hoe. The animal (kyeretwie or kurotwiamansa) is depicted as the symbol of strength: when fallen in the water only his skin becomes whet, not his spots. The meaning is that strong animals do not show a change in character when the circumstances change. Also: When the rain falls on the leopard, he gets wet on his skin, but the spots never disappear

(Rohrer p 15)."

"Description: Tobacco pipe of earthenware with figural bowl on a cylindrical base with two protruding rectangular points and an ascending stem with a discreet stub. Bowl a lying cochlea with the point on the right and the opening on the left, the cylindrical trunk with two intersecting rings, one smoothing the other with cogs, foot with a carved edge on the front and the sides, a hatched connection band between the two protruding points. Stem decoration in three concentric bands divided into compartments with geometric filling, under the stub a button. Stub with longitudinal lines.

Date: 1830-1880

Meaning decoration: When the snail is hiding, it will grow, also said as Far from the guns the soldiers are the oldest. Explanation: As long as you stay out of the danger there is no risk. Ashanti gold pipe, pre-1874.

"A composite tobacco pipe (tao-hyefuo) consisting of a lost wax cast gold pipe bowl (a) and its associated wood stem (b) decorated with gold wire with a sheet gold mouthpiece. The pipe bowl itself constitutes a hollow circular tube into which the mouthpiece fits and is decorated with an alternating series of plain and patterned undulating rings. The patterning consists of lines of evenly spaced dots. The curved foot of the pipe is extended at the front to form a squared off rest which is decorated with two panels of vertical zig-zag decoration and a middle panel of lines of vertical dot patterning. The other end of the foot is cast in the form of a scroll. The pipe bowl is surrounded by a corolla of six conical spikes decorated with a series of dot patterns. The hollow wood stem is decorated with a continuous length of twisted two filament wire, perhaps brass or an alloy of brass and gold, which is coiled around it at intervals. The mouthpiece is made from a piece of sheet gold that has been folded into a long cone and the edges soldered together. It is decorated with gold wire that was first coiled into a spring-like form and then wound around it. The tip of the mouthpiece is formed by two rings of gold wire which have been soldered on and a single ring encircles the lower end."

"It is clear that the tobacco pipe in the Ashanti culture has played an important role, both for men and for women. Important persons have a servant who assists with smoking. Such a pipe keeper packs the pipe, lights it and monitors the fire, in other words they accompany the entire smoking process. Such an elite smoking situation complete with servant for the pipe is depicted in an Ashanti bronze. An almost regal person sits on a chair, a guard stands behind him, the long pipe rests with the bowl on the ground, the pipe keeper takes care of it."

Singer-Storytellers: The Griot Tradition in We Africa

Griots, also known as jeli or bards, are traditional West African storytellers who have played a crucial role preserving the oral history and cultural heritage of their communities for centuries. With their unique blen storytelling, and oral history, griots bring to life the stories of their people, giving voice to their struggles a and keeping their cultural traditions alive. From birth to death, from war to peace, from love to loss, the ta griots are as diverse as they are captivating. Their music, steeped in emotion and rhythm, creates a pow unforgettable backdrop to their stories. Join us on a journey through the rich and fascinating world of gric storytellers.

The Griots - Africa's Master Storytellers

Today griots can still be found in many parts of West Africa. They live among various African ethnic mino as the Mande peoples , Fula, Hausa, Songhai, Tukuloor, and many more as well as among even smalle Many have also left their ancestral lands behind and emigrated. Traditional griot storytellers can be found that have large migrant African populations such as the United States and France.

Griot also known as jeli or jail in some regions (Circa 1901). (Public domain)

It is believed that the term griot comes from the French term "guirot" which in turn came from the Portugu "criado." This was the masculine singular term for servant and aptly describes the griot's role in their trad communities, as a servant to the community.

While griot is the term predominantly used in English, African languages have their own names which th refer to griots. In northern Mande areas, griots are known as jèli, while in the south they are known as jal other hand, the Yoruba refer to them as arokin while the Ful peoples refer to them as gawlo.

Generally speaking, after “griot” the most common name for them is “jeli.” This comes from the Manding which refers to the combined knowledge of the griots and their hereditary nature.

What Do Griots Do?

Griots are seen as the keepers of both African history and the traditions of their native peoples. They use storytelling, and oral history to preserve their cultural heritage. This makes them an essential part of Wes society.

Important social gatherings such as weddings and festivals often include a griot. It is the griot’s job to sin the hosting family’s history. When conflicts break out between warring factions or families it is the griot’s the disputes and function as a mediator by using their centuries of historical knowledge.

The mutual respect and familiarity both sides tend to have for the griot means that it is safe for the griot t communicate with both sides without fear of being attacked. As respected members of society, both parti know that attacking the griot would be unwise.

Griots are skilled musicians as well as orators. They’re known for their unique musical style which includ traditional instruments such as the kora (a stringed instrument), the balafon (similar to a xylophone), an (a uniquely shaped drum).

Many of the stories griots tell revolve around real historical events. These can be small in scale, like indiv histories, to recounting major historical events like wars and battles. They are also responsible for remin of their cultural heritage. This means recounting stories about the gods and the spirits of their ancestors.

These tales are normally used to impart moral lessons and cultural values to the younger generations. T can also take on a political edge with the griot using them to praise their patrons and to sing the praises local leaders.

Griots also have a strong moral obligation. It is often down to them to supply a voice for the marginalized oppressed within their communities. The stories griots tell highlight social and political issues like poverty and human rights abuses. Their songs promote peace, justice, and equality and give hope to those who suffering.

Becoming a Griot

Griots are their own ethnic group and tend to form an endogamous caste (meaning they usually only ma griots). This means griots are born into the role and receive their training from family members, who pass skills and knowledge from generation to generation.

Learning these skills is no easy task. Not only must they learn the arts of oral history, music, and storytel very young age, but they must learn huge amounts of history. It is a role that comes with a lot of respons small amount of pressure.

The Sahel Epics

A classic example of the type of story griots are responsible for sharing is the Sahel Epics . These stories from the Sahel region of West Africa and are some of the most important cultural expressions of the peo region.

These stories usually feature heroes and heroines who embark on epic journeys and face head-on great Traditionally these stories incorporate elements of folklore, religion, and real history.

if not thousands, of versions of this tale but they usually follow similar story beats.

It is usually said Sunjata was born under unusual circumstances, covered head to toe in thick hair, and p from the waist down. The more fantastical versions of the story have the young hero inheriting magical p his mother, which he uses to give himself the ability to walk. His magical gifts (or disability) then lead him from his community. After some years away he then returns as a powerful military leader.

Upon his return, he defeats the kingdom's evil sorcerer-king, Sumanguru Kante, and expels him and his the Mande homeland. The story then usually goes into detail about how Sumanguru fell to darkness by b obsessed with a magical balafon (similar to a xylophone) that belonged to forest genies. He eventually g hands on the magical instrument, but only after his sister sacrifices herself to the genies as payment. Su uses the magical instrument to rule Western Africa until Sunjata's eventual intervention.

The epic of Sunjata has remained a popular story to this day. It is said that if one tried to combine all the versions of the story and tell it as one it would take days to complete. The epic is so popular that lyrics fr have been adopted into the national anthem of Mali.

One of the reasons epics like this have remained so popular in West Africa is the fact they have a perso connection to the listeners. A young person from Mande will hear the griots praise the names of their anc they tell the Sunjata epic.

Sunjata's family name is Keita, which is a popular family name to this day, giving many listeners a familia to this ancient story. While the epics of other cultures, like the ancient Greeks, have remained static over centuries, the epics the griots tell continue to evolve, constantly adapting as their audiences change.

Griots In History

Griots aren't just repositories of history; they have their own fascinating history. While they have always t play the same cultural role, how they have been treated and their social standing has tended to change f time and from place to place.

For example, in the Mali Empire of West Africa (which lasted from 1226 to 1670), the griots were highly r and it was tradition for royal family members to give each other griots who acted as royal advisors.

The griots became an aristocratic caste and each higher-ranked family of warrior kings and emperors jatigi) had its own family of griots. In Malian tradition, you couldn't be a griot if you didn't have a jatigi, anc couldn't be called a jatigi if you had no griot. Most villages also had their own family of griots who were re for recording and retelling local histories etc.

On the other hand, things were very different for the griots who lived with the Mande people. In these soc griot was known as a jeli and they acted as advisors, singers, and storytellers. Unlike the griots within the Empire, however, these griots did not enjoy such high social standing. It was believed the griots held dee connections to the spiritual world and that their talents gave them social and political power over people. distrust and meant they weren't always respected or well-loved by the Mande people.

Ancient tradition singled the griots out as a separate people with their own caste. This meant that in the v they were treated differently than the Mande people. For example, griots were sometimes buried in trees in the ground because people believed doing so would pollute the earth. Griots also suffered from other s seclusions, a prime example being the fact that for a long time, the Mande people banned them from ma outside of the griot caste.

Despite their important role in preserving cultural heritage, griots have faced an increasing number of cha recent years. Many griot communities have been displaced by war, famine, and other types of violence. T to a tragic loss of local knowledge and traditions.

In some cases, the griots have faced persecution, and their instruments and cultural artifacts have been Thankfully despite these challenges, the griots have not backed down and their tradition continues to thri parts of Africa. The power of human voice in preserving cultural heritage

In conclusion, the tradition of the griot storyteller is a testament to the power of the human spirit and the i of preserving cultural heritage. Through their music, storytelling, and oral history, griots bring to life the st people and keep their cultural traditions alive.

Дании.

Флагманский корабль "Gribshunden" королевского датского флота затонул еще в 1495 году. Впервые его обнаружили на дне Балтийского моря, недалеко от берега рядом с городом Роннебю, Швеция, еще в 1970-х годах. Только в 2013 году ученые смогли идентифицировать его как военный корабль, который принадлежал королю Дании, Норвегии и Швеции Хансу в 2013 году. Через два года началось тщательное исследование этого корабля. А недавно была проведена очередная научная миссия. Новое исследование предполагает, что этот корабль служил настоящей плавучей крепостью для короля Ханса, ведь здесь были обнаружены пушки, пистолеты, арбалеты и кормовая надстройка судна, пишет Live Science.

Ученые под руководством Брендана Фоули из Лундского университета, Швеция, недавно закончили новое исследование корабля "Gribshunden". Новые находки предполагают, что флагман королевского флота служил для устрашения врагов и мог перевозить большое количество орудий и солдат.

По словам Фоули, этот корабль мог перевозить до 90 пушек, хотя они и были меньше по размерам, чем орудия на кораблях конца XVI века. Тем не менее этот корабль был грозным военным судном, на котором размещалось большое количество солдат, которые поддерживали огонь артиллерии выстрелами из пистолетов и арбалетов.

"Этот корабль, который был плавучей крепостью короля Дании Ханса был длиной 30 метров. Это было одно из первых судов, на котором размещалась артиллерия. Также стоит заметить, что при постройке корабля использовалась новая технология, благодаря чему "Gribshunden" был больше и прочнее некоторых своих современников конца XV века", — говорит Фоули.

По словам ученого, этот корабль король Ханс использовал так, как не делал ни один король того времени. Король Дании Ханс (1455-1513) правил страной с 1481 года по 1513 год, также он был королем Норвегии с 1483 по 1513 годы, а еще королем Швеции с 1497 по 1501 годы. Ученые считают, что король Ханс использовал свой флагман с середины 1480-х годов для устрашения соперников и часто путешествовал на нем перемещаясь между разными частями своего большого королевства.

Швеции. Но за два года до этого, Ханс сел на свой корабль и отплыл в Швецию для очередных переговоров. Когда король и его свита находились на борту корабль таинственным образом затонул, предположительно после того, как вспыхнул пожар. Свидетели тогда указывали на то, что в результате погибли 150 человек", — говорит Фоули.

По словам Фоули, многие пушки с корабля были вероятно спасены вскоре после затопления, потому как новое исследование корабля показало наличие меньше 20 орудий. Также ученые считают, что корабль затонул в результате взрыва пороха, так как на это указывает большая пробоина.

"Это один из первых кораблей, на котором перевозили порох. Поэтому о специальных мерах безопасно еще не думали", — говорит Фоули.

Ученые считают затонувший корабль "Gribshunden" прототипом для создания кораблей эпохи Великих географических открытий, на которых плавали Христофор Колумб и Васко да Гама.

Как уже писал Фокус, ученые обнаружили корабль, который отправил на "Титаник" предупреждение об айсберге. Его потопили в период Первой мировой войны.

Также Фокус писал о том, что у берегов Израиля спустя 1300 лет был обнаружен затонувший древний торговый корабль.

В Великобритании крохотный особняк выставили на продажу за более чем $305 тысяч (фото)

29 декабря 2021 в 22:44

Фото: Twitter | Один из самых маленьких особняков в Великобритании выставлен на продажу

Дом сделан в георгианском стиле и имеем площадь около 40 квадратных метров, а часть его жилых помещений находится за 225 000 фунтов стерлингов (примерно 303 508 долларов). Это великолепный дом в георгианском стиле, внесенный в список II категории, который описывают как "овеянный историей", пишет The Mirror.

Крошечный дом в поместье Гримстон-Парк в Тадкастере, Северный Йоркшир, которое было излюбленным местом британской монархии с 1800-х годов, имеет размеры всего 10 футов 5 дюймов на 8 футов 6 дюймов над землей и площадь всего 408 квадратных футов (примерно 38 кв.м).

Дом в форме куба выставлен на продажу за четверть миллиона фунтов, вместе с подземным жилым помещением и винтовой лестницей.

Это одна из двух сторожек, которые можно найти у входа в загородный дом в георгианском стиле II категории в парке.

Другой похожий дом был продан за 250 000 фунтов стерлингов в 2020 году. Средняя цена дома в городке Тадкастер составляет 338 000 фунтов стерлингов.

Как выглядит крошечный особняк?

Вниз по лестнице находится подвал длиной 13 футов с крошечной гостиной, кухней и ванной комнатой, обставленной характерной мебелью. Французские двери ведут в уютный сад с кустами и зоной отдыха.

Спальня

Роскошный домик построен из блоков известнякового ашлада, а фигура воина на коленях находится на ступенчатой крыше.

Снаружи есть лужайка в саду с садовой мебелью и чугунными перилами.

Ванная

Основное здание было преобразовано в элитное жилье и небольшой поселок, которым могут наслаждаться и новые владельцы этого крошечного дома.

Само поместье было посещено многими британскими монархиями с 1800-х годов и впервые появилось в Книге Судного дня в 1086 году. Оно может похвастаться потрясающей сельской местностью, находится в пределах досягаемости от инфраструктуры Tadcaster.

Внешняя часть дома

Крошечные дома стали популярны в последние годы, поскольку люди исследуют новые способы жизни, пишет издание.

Ранее Фокус писал о маленьком сборном домике, в котором живет Илон Маск после того, как продал всю свою "земную недвижимость".

13 moons & 28 days on all turtle shells. This equals 364 days, plus one day of rest. All indigenous people around the world knew the wisdom of the turtle and followed a 13 month calendar; after all, there are 13 moon cycles in a year & 27-29 days per cycle.

It's almost as if white man subtracted one month in order sever the connection between the people and the sun, moon & stars, which are themselves a giant clock.

Also we indians hv all our festive days based on our 13 month calender but the colonization changed the education system to 12 months
Another point i can add is at the entrance of all our ancient temples we hv tortoise engraved in stone and after we bow down to it we enter to pray
So much simiarities in this vast and different culture

Nimrod - the LORD of Christmas

The 25 December marked the birthday of Nimrod - not Jesus. Tammuz (often confused as Baby Jesus) was born of two pagan gods: (Nimrod - A sun God) and the Moon Goddess of Ancient Babylon (The Queen of Heaven). Mother and Child worship were common pagan practices during this time and so Tammuz and the Queen of Heaven are still worshipped today in many religions under many different names, for example, in Roman Catholicism, the statue of the Virgin Mary is actually not Mary but the the Queen of Heaven, and the so called baby Jesus in a manger is actually Tammuz.

Actually I have read parts of text that they never put in bible or the missing books and text descriptions of Caesar-and who we call Jesus. Wild cause almost everyone I talked to never seen these texts. It talks about what he looks like. They had to remove it, cause they were making Jesus Jewish and he never was. He was related to Europeans and Greek. So now they have an agenda to switch identities of religious figures, they have made Buddha a fat guy. And more. It's krazy how everyone doesn't know

Ведьминские города Украины: 4 места, где можно встретиться с колдуньей

Вчера, 18:10

Хэллоуин — это праздник, когда разная нечисть выбирается наружу, верили древние люди. Поэтому последняя ночь обросла легендами и сказаниями. Хоть получили звание "ведьминских". В каких украинских городах до сих пор можно встретить колдунью — читай в нашем материале.

Киев

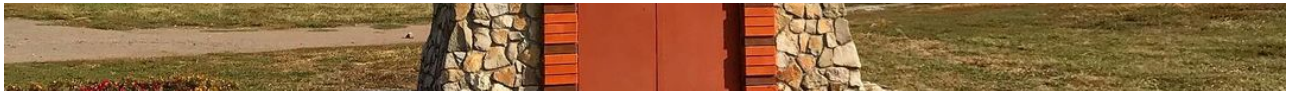
тайн. Официально в Киеве расположены 4 лысых горы, хотя утверждением местных жителей их ровно 13! Именно на Лысых горах собирались ведьмы на свои шабаши, поэтому, если ты хочешь острых ощущений посети одно из ведьмовских мест в столице.



Конотоп

"Ведьминскую" славу Конотоп получил после обнародования повести Григория Квитки-Основяненко "Конотопская ведьма". Поэтому ты можешь приехать в этот город и попытаться найти ведьм здесь. Главной контопской ведьмой считается героиня повести Явдоха Зубиха. В одном из писем писатель утверждал, что повесть написана на основе народных рассказов и реального факта утопления ведьм. Так что вполне вероятно, что гуляя по улицам Конотопа можно встретить несколько ведьм.

Небольшой городок в Киевской области также обрел славу ведьминского центра Украины. Рассказывают, будто в XX веке этот неприметный городок облюбовали ведьмы. Они выходили на Панскую гору для проведения своих обрядов. В это сложно поверить, но местные сравнительно недавно вызывали полицию, чтобы правоохранители наказали ведьм. Случилось это в 2013 году (!), когда в Тетиеве была засуха, а в селах в округе лил ливень. Местные жители заявили в правоохранительные органы, что несколько девушек, проживающих на Панской горе, залезли на крыши своих домов и размахивают трусами, отгоняя дождь. Полиция приехала на вызов и на удивление увидела описанную картину. Протокол не составляли, а вот белье изъяли и сожгли, и после этого в Тетиеве пошел долгожданный дождь.

Красивый средневековый город Каменец-Подольский также имеет в своем архиве "историю о ведьмах", да не одну, а почти 200! По словам историка и экскурсовода Анастасии Донец, которая проводит тематические экскурсии по городу "Охота на ведьм", в городе в XVII – XVIII веках рассматривалось около 200 дел "о чарах". Более 70% обвиняемых были женщины, им приписывали порчу имущества, урожая, кражу скота. Судьи к таким делам относились довольно-таки скептически, и не выносили суровых приговоров. Ведьм обязывали либо компенсировать ущерб, либо ограничивались предупреждениями.

Ранее мы рассказывали, какие 4 дела стоит совершить на Хэллоуин.

Дежурившего у гроба королевы Елизаветы II 18-летнего гвардейца нашли мертвым (фото)

02 октября 2022 в 18:15

Рядовой Бернелл-Уильямс служил в гвардейском кавалерийском полку "Королевские и синие" ездой и мечтал попасть на службу в элитный королевский полк.

Гвардеец Джек Бернелл-Уильямс, участвовавший в похоронах королевы Елизаветы, найден мертвым в казарме в Гайд-парке. Об этом сообщил британский таблоид Daily Mail.

Издание пишет, что 18-летний солдат сыграл ключевую роль в процессии, когда гроб ее Величества везли от Вестминстерского аббатства мимо Букингемского дворца к Веллингтонской арке.

Полиция в смерти гвардейца не нашла ничего сверхъестественного и назвала ее "неожиданной". Врачи хотели вернуть парня к жизни, но попытки не увенчались успехом.

Семья и друзья Бернелла-Уильямса были в восторге, когда он сопровождал гроб королевы Семья и друзья Бернелла-Уильямса были в восторге, когда он сопровождал гроб королевы в ее последнем путешествии, заметило издание Mirror.

В день похорон королевы семья солдата с гордостью публиковала видеозапись участия сына в церемонии. Журналисты отмечают, что его 42-летняя мать Лора из Бридженда в Южном Уэльсе очень эмоционально отреагировала на известие о смерти сына.

"Никогда не думала, что скажу это, но вся наша семья убита горем из-за внезапной кончины нашего замечательного сына Джека Уильямса", — написала женщина в соцсетях.

Где служил Джек Бернелл-Уильямс?

Рядовой Бернелл-Уильямс, служивший в британском гвардейском кавалерийском полку "Королевские и синие", был одним из новобранцев Конного полка домашней кавалерии.

"В это трудное время мы помним о семье и друзьях солдата, мы просим уважать их частную жизнь", — сказал представитель британской армии.

Бернелл-Уильямс с детства увлекался верховой ездой. У парня была мечта вступить в элитный королейский полк, второй по старшинству в иерархии британской армии. Помимо выполнения церемониальной охраны монарха, полк является передовой бронетанковой разведчастью.

Напомним, что ночью перед похоронами Елизаветы II умерла ее подруга и фрейлина, 88-летняя леди Мэри Рассел.Она была одной из шести женщин, которые несли шлейф королевы в 1953 году, когда ее короновали.

Желающие прощаться с королевой Елизаветой II до сих пор едут в Виндзорский замок и стоят в очереди.

Принц Гарри заявил, что был рожден как донор органов на случай, если что-то случится с его старшим братом

Вчера 21.16

Британский принц Гарри считает, что был рожден для того, чтобы при необходимости стать донором органов для своего старшего брата, принца Уильяма. Об этом 10 января написало издание Daily Mail, ссылаясь на отрывки из мемуаров принца Гарри под названием Spare.

В мемуарах принц Гарри пишет, что его родили на случай, "если что-то случится с Уильямом". Он уточнил, что подразумевает донорство крови, почки или костного мозга.

Младший сын короля Великобритании Чарльза III написал, что в семье его старшего брата называли наследником, а его – запасным. Принц Гарри признался, что чувствовал это с самого детства, а когда ему было 20 лет, его отец якобы пошутил, что выполнил свой долг, так как супруга, принцесса Диана родила ему "наследника и запасного".

Принц Уильям пока что не комментировал заявление младшего брата.

Контекст:

> Диана Спенсер вышла замуж за принца Чарльза 29 июля 1981 года в 20-летнем возрасте. В браке у пары родилось двое детей: принц Уильям (1982) и принц Гарри (1984). Принцесса Диана и принц Чарльз расстались в 1992 году, а официально оформили развод в 1996-м.
>
> Принцесса Диана погибла 31 августа 1997 года в результате автокатастрофы. Водитель автомобиля, в котором она ехала со своим возлюбленным Доди аль-Файедом, не справился с управлением, когда машину преследовали фотографы на мотоциклах, и врезался в стену туннеля перед парижским мостом Альма на набережной Сены.
>
> История о потере девственности – не единственная, которую принц Гарри описал в мемуарах. Ранее различные редакции получили разные фрагменты из книги, в которых, в частности, принц Гарри рассказал, как на него напал старший брат и как Чарльз III " садистски шутил о том, что не является его настоящим отцом". Кроме того, принц Гарри признался, что они с братом отговаривали отца жениться во второй раз , опасаясь, что его избранница будет им "злой мачехой".

Ученые обнаружили скелеты более 100 младенцев времен Древнего Рима

Текст: УЛЬЯНА ВИНОГРАДОВА, 21 февраля 2023, 15:00

Данный населенный пункт был древним морским портом, расположенным у побережья Средиземного моря. Он сохраняет как религиозное, так и историческое значение.

Археолог Росс Восс исследовал разветвленную канализационную систему города Ашкелон в Израиле и обнаружил останки более 100 младенцев. Об этом пишет Grunge.

В рамках этого исследования были обнаружены скелеты крошечных детей, которым на момент смерти было меньше недели. Анализ показал, что младенцы были совершенно здоровыми.

Так, исследователи предполагают, что древние секс-работники и их работодатели занимались детоубийством.

"На основе доказательств, найденных во время археологических раскопок, считается, что детоубийство было широко распространенной и социально приемлемой практикой среди древних римлян. Существует еще одно место под названием Гамблден (Hambleden), где также обнаружили примерно 97 скелетов младенцев, которые, похоже, умерли при схожих обстоятельствах.

Мы часто ассоциируем детоубийство с убийством младенцев женского пола во времена, когда девочкам предпочитали мальчиков. Но подавляющее большинство младенцев, найденных на этом месте, были мужского пола. Одна из теорий состоит в том, что они оставляли маленьких девочек жить, чтобы потом они выросли и работали в борделе, как их матери, но никто точно не знает", - заявили археологи.

Напомним, ранее в Мексике археологи в пещере, которая была затоплена в конце последнего ледникового периода, нашли скелет доисторического человека.

Хранят секрет уже 200 лет. Ученые стоят на пороге разгадки тайны детских мумий на Сицилии (фото)

Исследователи хотят узнать больше о жизни и смерти 163 детей, которые похоронены в гробнице ордена монахов-

Останки 41 ребенка из 163 детей, которые похоронены в катакомбах ордена капуцинов в Палермо ученые Стаффордширского университета будут изучать с помощью рентгена. Они хотят узнать кто были эти дети и от чего они умерли. Некоторые из детских тел мумифицированы, а от некоторых остались только скелеты. Вот уже 200 лет они хранят свои секреты, сообщает The Guardian.

Будь всегда в курсе событий вместе с телеграм-каналом Быстрый Фокус.

В знаменитой подземной гробнице в городе Палермо, на севере острова Сицилия находится 1284 тела. Из них там лежат 163 ребенка. Некоторые из тел подверглись мумификации, а некоторые тела разложились до костей. Это самая большая коллекция мумий в Европе.

Ученые под руководством Кирсти Сквайрс из Стаффордширского университета в январе этого года начинают исследовать эти тела в попытке рассказать истории 41 ребенка, которые были захоронены здесь в период с 1787 по 1880 годы. Ученые не знают ни личности детей, ни причины их смерти, ни истории их болезней, так как описательные ярлыки, прикрепленные к телам давно стерлись.

Фото: Facebook

"С помощью рентгеновского аппарата мы хотим сделать сотни снимков тел с разных ракурсов. Мы надеемся, что тайна жизни и смерти этих детей будет открыта. Есть архивные записи с именами и датами смерти, мы сопоставим полученные данные с этими записями и надеюсь узнаем, кем были эти дети и от чего они умерли", — говорит Сквайрс.

Эти катакомбы когда-то предназначались исключительно для умерших монахов ордена капуцинов. Со временем они стали популярной, хоть и мрачной достопримечательностью Палермо.

Монахи впервые обосновались в церкви Санта-Мария-делла-Паче в 1534 году. Они создали специальную могилу для своих умерших, но, когда она заполнилась, новых покойников поместили в отдельный склеп, пока не будет выкопана новая братская могила.

Когда дело дошло до перемещения тел из переполненного хранилища, монахи обнаружили, что 45 эксгумированных умерших монахов были мумифицированы естественным образом, и их лица были узнаваемы, что было воспринято как деяние Бога.

вдоль стен первого коридора новой могилы. В 1787 году жителям региона, включая детей, разрешили размещение в катакомбах после их смерти.

До сегодняшнего дня ученые уделяли особое внимание только мумиям взрослых.

"Многие мумии являются результатом естественного обезвоживания. Остальные подвергались химической обработке. Последние, как правило, лучше сохраняются", — говорит Дарио Пиомбино-Маскали, который работает вместе с британскими учеными.

По его словам, некоторые мумии детей действительно хорошо сохранились. Есть тела, которые даже похожи на спящих детей.

Последними покойниками, которых поместили в катакомбы, были умершие в начале 20 века.

Asmās : le plat emblématique des Almohades

Mehdi Ghouirgate
CNRS-UMR 8167

Résumé

Cet article se propose de mettre en lumière l'évolution sociale et politique des Almohades à travers la consommation d'un plat connu sous le nom berbère d'asmās. En effet, les sociétés de leur région d'origine, le Haut-Atlas occidental et l'Anti-Atlas, étaient restées jusqu'au début du V^e^/XII^e^ siècle en dehors de toute influence étatique notable : dans ces zones de montagnes, les décisions importantes mettant en jeu le devenir du groupe étaient du ressort des communautés villageoises. Or, dans un laps de temps relativement bref, les membres de tribus maṣmūḍa, prenant le nom programmatique et militant d'« Almohades », initièrent un mouvement qui aboutit à la diffusion de structures étatiques dans ces sociétés. En effet, les Almohades reprirent certaines institutions des Maṣmūda, en les détournant de leur emploi primitif. L'asmās en fait partie : la consommation de ce plat servait initialement à sceller un lien, soit pour faire la guerre à un autre clan ou à une autre tribu, soit pour conclure une alliance matrimoniale ; elle marque dorénavant le serment d'allégeance privée (bay'a ḫāṣṣa) prêté au calife mu'minide, et établit une séparation nette non seulement entre les gouvernants et les gouvernés, mais également entre les gouvernants.

Abstract

This article aims to highlight the social and political evolution Almohad through the consumption of a dish known by its Berber name asmās. Indeed companies in their region of origin, the Western High Atlas and Anti-Atlas, remained until the early fifth / twelfth century without any significant state influence: in these mountain areas, important decisions involving the future of the group rested with the village communities. However, in a short period of time, members of tribes Maṣmūda, taking the programmatic name of "Almohad" introduced him a movement that led to the diffusion of state structures in these countries. Indeed Almohades regained some institutions Maṣmūda, by diverting them from their primary job. The asmās in part: consumption of this dish was originally used to seal a link, either to make war on another clan or tribe to another, or to enter into a matrimonial alliance. It now marks the oath of allegiance private (bayʿa ḫāṣṣa) lent to the Muʾminid Caliph, and makes a clear distinction not only between government and the governed, but also between those who govern.

Quand on interrogeait un des plus grands saints (quṭb) qu'ait connu le Maghreb, le šayḫ Abū Yaʿzā[1] (m. 572/1177), contemporain des Almohades, sur la façon dont il avait obtenu tant de faveurs divines, il répondait invariablement : « En faisant don de nourriture (iṭʿām aṭ-ṭaʿām) »[2]. Ce saint personnage, ainsi que nombre d'autres santons berbères du Maġrib al-aqṣā, acquit auprès de ses coreligionnaires une réputation durable[3] en tenant tête aux autorités almoravides, puis almohades, en se distinguant comme censeur des mœurs et en accomplissant certains « miracles », par exemple en domptant des lions, symboles par excellence de la vie sauvage. Cependant, de l'aveu même de celui qui fut leur chef de file, la base de leur pouvoir charismatique, assimilé à des miracles (karāmāt), provenait non seulement de leur capacité à procurer de la nourriture, mais aussi de la distance qu'ils prenaient vis-à-vis des habitudes culinaires de leur temps. En effet ces soufis se démarquaient des pratiques de leurs contemporains (ḫarq al-ʿāda), en premier lieu de celles de la classe dirigeante, soit en refusant de partager les repas collectifs, soit en acceptant pour seule nourriture celle qu'ils avaient eux-mêmes produite, pour éviter, affirmaient-ils, de consommer des biens mal acquis ; le rapport à la nourriture et aux repas paraît être ainsi très clairement un aspect constitutif de la sainteté.

1 Afin de mettre en perspective l'importance de ce personnage dans le cadre de la vie spirituelle du Maghreb, on peut se référer à Émile Dermenghem, Le culte des saints dans l'islam maghrébin, Paris, Gallimard (« Tel »), 1954. 3 La majorité des saints les plus vénérés au Maroc ont vécu à l'époque almohade (Abū Yaʿzā, Abū ʿAbd Allāh Amġār, Abū Šuʿayb, Abū Muḥammad Ṣāliḥ, etc.).

Dans le contexte des sociétés du Haut et de l'Anti-Atlas, majoritairement peuplés de tribus maṣmūda, peu étatisées jusqu'au début du Ve/XIIe siècle, les repas pris en commun étaient des moments forts où se réglaient les différends et où des liens divers et des alliances se nouaient ou se dénouaient. Au cours de ces agapes, un plat semble avoir joué un rôle très important, mais il paraît disparaître dans le système du pouvoir almohade, à moins qu'il n'ait changé de nom : l'asmās. Des indices concordants permettent d'en cerner non seulement la composition, mais aussi l'usage social et la façon dont celui-ci s'est transformé. Il convient dans un premier temps de revenir sur la source qui évoque le plus clairement l'asmās, parce qu'elle présente bien des spécificités qui demandent à être éclairées.

L'asmās n'est mentionné que dans une seule source, dont on ignore jusqu'au titre[4] ; ce qui est fâcheux, si l'on considère que le titre avait, dans un contexte où régnait la controverse, une résonance souvent programmatique. L'absence de titre contraste avec la longueur de celui de la chronique d'Ibn Ṣāḥib al-Ṣalāt (m. seconde moitié du VIe/XIIe siècle) : Don de l'imamat à ceux qui étaient humiliés avant que Dieu n'en fasse des guides et des héritiers avec l'apparition d'al-Mahdī à la tête des Almohades contre les Voilés (al-Mann bi-l-Imāma ʿalā l-mustaḍʿafīn bi-an ǧaʿalahum Allāh aʾimma wa-ǧaʿalahum al-wāriṯīn wa-ẓuhūr al-imām al-Mahdī bi-l-muwaḥḥidīn ʿalā al-mulaṯṯamīn). Ce long titre exprime le parti pris de l'auteur et fonctionne comme un paradigme englobant l'ensemble des événements rapportés[5]. Telle est généralement la forme des titres des ouvrages courtisans, qui relèvent le plus souvent du panégyrique[6]. Or l'auteur de la chronique présentée ici, Abū Bakr ʿAlī al-Ṣanhāǧī, surnommé al-Bayḍaq, était très proche des Almohades, et cela devait nécessairement apparaître dans le titre.

4 Cet ouvrage a été publié une première fois sous le nom de Documents inédits d'histoire almohade, Fragments manuscrits du legajo 1919 du fonds arabe de l'Escorial, éd. et trad. Évariste Lévi-Provençal, Paris, Paul Geuthner, 1928. Il a fait l'objet d'une réédition en arabe en 1971 par ʿAbd al-Wahhāb b. Manṣūr, sous le titre de Aḫbār al-Mahdī Ibn Tūmart, Rabat, Dār al-Manṣūr, 1971.

Ce texte d'al-Bayḍaq a été découvert sous forme de fragments par Évariste Lévi-Provençal dans le fonds de l'Escorial, en 1924, dans des liasses (legajos) qui avaient échappé jusque-là aux différents recensements de manuscrits arabes, entrepris depuis le XVIII^e siècle[7]. Or le terme asmās est déjà mentionné dans le Supplément aux dictionnaires arabes de Reinhardt Dozy, publié en 1881, avec la définition suivante : « repas, festin »[8]. On ne peut établir avec certitude où l'orientaliste hollandais a pu rencontrer le terme. A-t-il eu accès aux legajos ? Plus vraisemblablement c'est dans le Vocabulista qu'il l'a découvert[9]. Ce dictionnaire arabe-latin, rédigé dans la première moitié du XV^e siècle est traditionnellement attribué, sans grande justification, au Catalan Ramón Martí[10]. À l'appui de cette hypothèse, la définition et l'orthographe du mot sont identiques dans le Supplément et dans le Vocabulista : asamas, sans alif long [ā]. Cette graphie est due sans doute à la volonté de Ramón Martí et des auteurs d'époque mérinide en général de se démarquer des chroniqueurs des époques almohade et suivantes, qui avaient pour règle de retranscrire toutes les voyelles du berbère par des voyelles longues en arabe : alif/ā pour a, yā'/ī pour i ou wāw/ū pour u[11].

6 À l'inverse, le fait de ne pas choisir un titre grandiloquent indique généralement chez l'auteur l'affirmation d'une position de neutralité, sans doute inspirée à la fois par la crainte de l'arbitraire du pouvoir en place et par le désir de marquer une certaine distance avec lui. C'est le cas par exemple de l'ouvrage de ʿAbd Allāh, le dernier souverain ziride de Grenade (r. 465/1073-483/1090, m. 488/1095) et de celui d'Ibn ʿIḏārī (m. après 711/1312) ; en effet ces deux auteurs utilisent respectivement les termes, assez neutres, de tibyān et de bayān, que l'on peut traduire tous deux par « exposé ».

À ce propos, l'auteur du Vocabulista, outre qu'il traduit ce terme par « convivium », soit repas, festin[12], fait une remarque intéressante, à savoir que l'on ne rencontrait l'asmās que dans dans la partie occidentale d'al-Andalus[13]. Or le manuel de chancellerie d'al-Balawī, al-ʿAṭāʾ al-ǧazīl, révèle la présence dans cette région[14] d'*iqṭāʿ*s attribués à des tribus almohades[15], ce qui est confirmé par al-Maḫzūmī (m. 658/1260), qui affirme que des membres de l'appareil d'État almohade, majoritairement des soldats, s'étaient implantés en al-Andalus avec femmes et enfants[16]. L'occupation d'al-Andalus n'était pas uniquement le fait de soldats et de leurs chefs : dès le début de la conquête de Séville par les Almohades, les parents d'Ibn Tūmart, les Ayt Umġār, s'installèrent dans l'ancien palais ʿabbādide avec leur famille, au sens le plus large du terme[17], et aussi leurs troupeaux, ce qui causait bien des désagréments aux citadins[18]. À partir de ces informations, on peut supposer que cette domination politique a incité leurs sujets andalous à adopter certaines habitudes culinaires de l'élite au pouvoir, d'autant plus que la présence des femmes et des esclaves[19] facilitait l'importation de plats typiquement maghrébins, à commencer par le couscous[20]. Il est peu probable que l'asmās ait été un apport des conquêtes musulmanes du IIe/VIIIe siècle, bien que le Šarq al-Andalus ait accueilli de nombreux Berbères[21].

D'après cette source, ces Almohades font l'objet de massacres de la part des Andalous au cours des troubles des années 1220. Un certain nombre d'Almohades cherchèrent alors refuge à Majorque où ils réussirent à conserver le pouvoir jusqu'à la prise de l'île par les chrétiens. Pour al-Maḫzūmī, cette mésentente entre Almohades et autochtones fut la cause de la perte de Majorque.

Même si, comme nous l'avons dit plus haut, l'ouvrage rédigé par Abū Bakr ʿAlī al-Ṣanhāǧī est incomplet, il est exceptionnel à bien des égards. En premier lieu, il a été rédigé par un compagnon d'Ibn Tūmart, c'est-à-dire un témoin direct des événements rapportés. L'auteur n'hésite pas d'ailleurs, le cas échéant, à se mettre lui-même en scène. Son œuvre se présente donc comme « une véritable chronique de faits vécus ». Cependant, dans les fragments qui nous ont été conservés, l'auteur ne précise pas d'où il était originaire, ni ce qu'il faisait en Ifrīqiya au moment de sa rencontre avec Ibn Tūmart. D'après les caractéristiques de la langue berbère qu'il utilise, G. Marcy a suggéré qu'il était probablement originaire de l'actuelle province d'Azilal[22], située entre la région où domine le tamaziḫt (Haut-Atlas central et Moyen-Atlas) et celle où domine le tašelḥit (Haut-Atlas occidental et Anti-Atlas). Cela va à l'encontre de l'hypothèse émise par Évariste Lévi-Provençal selon laquelle un autre compagnon d'Ibn Tūmart, à savoir ʿUmar Aznāg[23] pourrait être le frère d'al-Bayḏaq, du fait qu'il portait également l'ethnique d'al-Ṣanhāǧī ; rien ne peut étayer cette hypothèse et on ne sait si ʿUmar Aznāg était originaire des Ṣanhāǧa du midi, c'est-à-dire du Haut-Atlas central ou du versant nord du Haut-Atlas occidental, où se trouvaient également des Iznāguen. Par ailleurs, al-Bayḏaq écrit sa nisba sous une forme arabisée (al-Ṣanhāǧī) tandis que ʿUmar Aznāg conserve la forme berbère originelle.

Si al-Bayḏaq a été abondamment cité par les chroniqueurs ultérieurs, jusque dans la seconde moitié du VIIIe /XIVe siècle, par exemple Ibn al-Qaṭṭān (m. seconde moitié du VIIe/XIIIe siècle), Ibn ʿIḏārī (seconde moitié du VIIe/XIIIe siècle), Ibn Ḫaldūn (m. 808/1406) ou Ibn Simāk (m. 783/1381), on ne sait sur lui que ce qu'il a bien voulu nous en dire, soit très peu. Néanmoins son nom nous donne peut-être quelques indications. De prime abord, on pourrait penser, avec É. Lévi-Provençal, qu'il fait référence au pion du jeu d'échecs ; cependant on peut difficilement admettre cette étymologie parce qu'Ibn Tūmart était un vigoureux censeur des mœurs qui interdisait les jeux de hasard, le plus souvent associés à la consommation de vin. Comme l'a récemment proposé ʿAlī Ṣidqī Azaykū[24], il vaudrait mieux rapprocher ce surnom d'un autre sens possible de bayḏaq, à savoir celui de « guide », le surnom n'étant alors qu'une mauvaise traduction du berbère afadad. L'afadad avait comme fonction non seulement d'indiquer le chemin et de tenir la monture du voyageur, mais aussi de permettre à celui-ci de traverser en sécurité les territoires des différentes entités tribales ; cela passait par des négociations et sans doute parfois par le paiement de droits de passage. Cette fonction, caractéristique des sociétés sans État[25], n'existait pas en Orient, et cela expliquerait pourquoi on a eu des difficultés à lui trouver un équivalent en arabe.

22 Georges Marcy, « Les phrases berbères des Documents inédits d'histoire almohade », Hespéris, 14 (1932), pp. 61-77. Cet avis n'a pas été remis en cause par la recherche contemporaine qui a juste souligné la ressemblance entre l'idiome employé et celui des Ayt ʿAṭṭāb.

23 Aznāg, pl. iznāgan, est la forme originelle de Ṣanhāǧī. Cet ethnonyme signifie celui qui a la peau foncée en rapport avec leurs origines sahariennes.

Si cette hypothèse est juste, alors Abū Bakr ʿAlī pourrait avoir reçu le laqab d'al-Bayḏaq (« le Guide ») lors du retour d'Ibn Tūmart de son voyage en Orient. À l'aller, l'initiateur du mouvement almohade avait gagné l'Égypte par mer. Au retour, pour se rendre de l'Ifrīqiya au Maghreb central, puis occidental, Ibn Tūmart s'en serait remis à Abū Bakr ʿAlī al-Ṣanhāǧī qui connaissait bien le chemin. Par la suite, peut-être en souvenir de ce voyage, al-Mahdī (m. 524/1130) lui aurait confié la tâche de conduire sa mule Tamwīmaq[26]. À la lumière de ces données, il semble bien que le laqab d'al-Bayḏaq ait été lié à la fonction de guide, et c'est sans doute pour cela que les sources d'époque mérinide n'appellent plus Abū Bakr ʿAlī que par ce qui est devenu sa šuhra.

La langue maternelle d'al-Bayḏaq était le berbère ; cela explique qu'il en cite des phrases entières[27] ; avec le dictionnaire arabe-berbère d'Ibn Tūnart (m. 567/1172) achevé en 546/1151, son ouvrage est celui qui nous fournit le plus de données sur l'état du berbère médiéval. Nous ne devons donc pas nous étonner si le terme asmās y apparaît et seulement là. En outre il semble que ce soit uniquement un terme tašelḥit[28], parlé dans l'aire géographique de prédilection des Maṣmūda, c'est-à-dire le sud du Maġrib al-aqṣā ; le terme n'y désigne plus aujourd'hui un mets spécial. Selon le lexique d'Antoine Jordan[29], il désigne au début du XX^e siècle une « chaudière », ou le « fourneau du fondeur ou du teinturier ». De la racine berbère M.S, on peut dériver en tašelḥit un verbe, smuss, qui signifie « faire bouger, mettre en mouvement ou battre un liquide », dans un contexte évoquant un plat à base de céréales. Le terme asmās désignait ainsi vraisemblablement un plat à base de céréales, cuit soit dans une cuve bâtie sur une chaudière, soit dans un grand récipient de forme spécifique. Nommer le contenu (nourriture) par le contenant (cuve bâtie sur une chaudière) est une métonymie courante[30] en cuisine : voir le tajine au Maghreb, la terrine en France, ou la paella en Espagne.

25 Dans le Maroc pré-colonial, Charles de Foucauld a largement fait état de l'habitude, pour traverser le territoire de tribus ne payant pas d'impôts au gouvernement central, d'employer des *zettāt*s, qui, à la différence des afadad, devaient appartenir au groupe gentilice dont le territoire était traversé.

27 Marcy, « Les phrases berbères des Documents inédits d'histoire almohade », p. 61-77.

28 É. Lévi-Provençal affirme, dans le glossaire des Documents inédits d'histoire almohade, que le mot était employé à Salé pour désigner un « grand plat de terre » dans lequel on plaçait les peaux destinées à être tannées. Cette information n'a pu être confirmée.

Une autre hypothèse serait qu'asmās soit le nom archaïque du couscous ; il aurait d'abord désigné l'ustensile qui servait à le cuire, connu actuellement au Maghreb sous l'appellation de kaskās, et ensuite le plat lui-même. Mais il existe d'autres possibilités : ainsi Georges Marcy déclare-t-il : « Le terme asmās est à rattacher, avec préfixation d'un "s" instrumental, à la racine M.S qui signifie être fade, privé de sel. Asmās désigne donc – autant qu'il semble – un repas apprêté sans sel, non assaisonné »[31].

ʿAbd al-Wahhāb b. Manṣūr (1920-2008), historiographe du Royaume du Maroc, propose une troisième hypothèse : asmās serait un nom berbère du Sūs renvoyant à une sorte de bouillie faite avec de la farine séchée au feu (sawīq), accommodée avec du beurre rance (ou simplement du beurre)[32]. Même si cela reste invérifiable, il est important de noter qu'il présente toujours l'asmās comme un plat solidement ancré dans la tradition prophétique, donc à forte charge symbolique. En effet le sawīq est attesté, entre autres, par le célèbre traditionniste al-Buḫārī (m. 256/870), pour qui il est par excellence le plat de rupture du jeûne : « Le messager de Dieu dit à l'un des présents : "Untel, descends ! Et mélange-nous le sawīq avec de l'eau !" »[33]. Un tel hadith est bien dans l'esprit des sources pro-almohades qui cherchaient sans cesse à rattacher, si ce n'est à identifier, la geste d'Ibn Tūmart et la Sīra du Prophète[34]. Le voyageur tangérois Ibn Baṭṭūṭa (m. 770/1368-1369 ou 779/1377) précise que le sawīq était un plat que préparaient les pèlerins maghrébins et égyptiens au moment où ils arrivaient à destination : la consommation rituelle de ce plat marquait leur entrée dans l'aire sacrée du Ḥaram[35].

2 Le plat de l'engagement contractuel

Il convient d'abord d'analyser la conjoncture politique et anthropologique dans laquelle apparaissent les diverses mentions de l'asmās, de façon à savoir si elle a varié ou si elle est restée identique durant toute la période. La première occurrence du terme est liée à Ibn Tūmart et à un moment crucial pour l'histoire du mouvement almohade : celui de l'acte fondateur. Après un voyage de plusieurs années en Orient et au Maghreb, Ibn Tūmart revient dans son village natal d'Igīlīz-des-Harġa (Igīlīz n-warġān), situé dans l'Anti-Atlas central, à une soixantaine de kilomètres au sud-est de Taroudant[36]. Il est suivi de disciples venus de tous les horizons et viendrait d'affronter verbalement le pouvoir almoravide à Marrakech, puis à Aġmāt[37]. Afin de sceller le pacte entre lui et les différents membres de l'assistance, on ordonna de préparer l'asmās. Le plat une fois prêt, al-Mahdī y répandit du sel et dit : « "Ceci est le pacte de Dieu et celui du Prophète, qui nous lie, nous et vous, conformément au Coran et à la Sunna". Les gens[38] affirmèrent alors : "L'imām [le « guide »] ne mange, ni ne boit !" Il les dévisagea, puis saisit alors, dans sa main, une épaule de mouton (kabš), il en prit avec le bout de ses doigts (qaraṣa), et le mit dans sa bouche : "Je mange comme tout le monde, je bois comme tout le monde, je suis un homme parmi les hommes et il me faut ce qu'il leur faut !". Puis il ajouta : "Vous mangez comme mangent eux-mêmes les prophètes[39]". »

Ici l'Histoire et le mythe se confondent. Le chroniqueur nous propose une vision du monde où les individus et les groupes se distinguent selon des principes hiérarchiques clairs : le guide, les disciples et les autres ; le personnage principal apparaît comme le maître des symboles. Au moment où il pose l'acte fondateur de son mouvement, Ibn Tūmart est mis en scène ; son attitude, sa gestuelle et son discours créent un mythe appelé à se perpétuer dans des pratiques durables. Il s'arroge ainsi le pouvoir magique de définir et de délimiter des groupes (Dieu, les prophètes, dont lui-même et Muḥammad, les fidèles, les autres) par de simples gestes et par des déclarations performatives. Son attitude, la position de ses mains, certains mots et certaines formules prononcés à l'ouverture du repas, contribuent à nouer le contrat (ʿaqd) et inaugurent une pratique destinée à inscrire dans la réalité ce qu'il fait ou dit.

37 D'après Ibn Qaṭṭān, c'est dans cette ancienne capitale des Maṣmūda qu'il aurait dénoncé le serment d'allégeance qu'il avait prêté aux Almoravides, marquant ainsi ostensiblement son entrée en révolte.

38 Dans le contexte almohade, le terme arabe nās (« les gens ») renvoie aux personnes qui ne sont pas, ou ne sont pas encore, incluses dans la sphère du pouvoir almohade.

D'après le texte ci-dessus, trois éléments composent l'asmās : la viande, le sel et les céréales. La viande provient de l'espèce domestique par excellence : le mouton ou le bélier (le terme arabe ne fait pas la différence, mais il s'agit d'un mâle), comme pour la Fête du sacrifice (ʿīd al-aḍḥā). Il s'agit de la viande de prédilection pour sceller et célébrer les unions au Maghreb. Il n'est pas impossible qu'elle ait également été la viande la plus appréciée et qu'elle ait constitué un marqueur de la différence entre urbains et ruraux. Dans la notice qu'il consacre à Abū Yaʿzā, un šayḫ de la campagne, berbère et illettré, l'hagiographe Ibn al-Zayyāt at-Tādilī (m. 628 ou 629/1230-1231) rapporte les faits suivants : le šayḫ devine (miraculeusement) que l'un de ses hôtes, venu de Fès pour lui rendre visite – on peut donc le considérer comme un modèle de l'urbanité et de la civilisation (ʿumrān) –, se plaint du caractère rudimentaire du plat qu'on lui a présenté, un plat d'orge (ṭaʿām šaʿīr), agrémenté de mauve (ḫubbayzā) cela alors même qu'on leur a fait l'insigne honneur de manger seuls dans une pièce, isolés du reste des convives, sans-doute des ruraux. Le šayḫ, pour lui donner une leçon, lui sert en personne un plateau avec deux pains de froment (raġīf min al-burr) ainsi qu'une grande écuelle de viande de mouton grillé[40] (ṣaḥfa fīhā laḥm mašwī luḥūm al-ḍaʾn). Pour finir, il affirme pouvoir servir ce plat pendant un mois, ce qui indique le rôle prépondérant joué par la viande de mouton, en tant que viande de prestige associée aux élites urbaines mais aussi aux moments forts où à la campagne on recevait des invités de marque.

Au début de la période mérinide, Ibn Razīn al-Tuǧībī (m. seconde moitié du VII^e^/XIII^e^ siècle), fournit une indication qui va dans le même sens. L'auteur énumère les différents types de couscous (kuskusū), mais réserve l'épithète de « succulent » (laḏīḏ ǧiddan) pour le couscous à l'agneau gras[41]. Or il semble que son ouvrage soit le reflet d'une cuisine aristocratique, réservée à une élite. Quant au bélier, en milieu berbère, il pourrait avoir fait longtemps l'objet d'un culte, peut-être jusqu'au Ve/XIe siècle[42]. Il n'est donc pas étonnant que plusieurs tribus maṣmūda, et non des moindres, comme les Hazmīra[43] ou les Banū Izīmmar[44], aient un nom dérivant de la même racine que le terme qui désigne cet animal en tašelḥit : izīmmar. De même le prénom Izīmmarān est attesté dans la chaîne onomastique du dignitaire almohade Abū Bakr b. Izīmmarān[45] ou bien dans celle de Tīn Izīmmarān (« celle des béliers »), la mère de ʿAbd Allāh b. Yāsīn, le fondateur du mouvement almoravide. Enfin une importante bourgade des Dukkāla était appelée Ilā Iskāwan (« celui qui porte des cornes »), toponyme renvoyant à un ancien culte rendu au bélier[46].

Le sel quant à lui avait la réputation de chasser les esprits malfaisants ; dans le passage d'al-Bayḍaq, cette vertu lui vient directement de Dieu (baraka). Tout le terme bélier, le mot « sel » en tašelḥit, tīssīnt, servait à former un prénom chez les Maṣmūda. Ainsi, un membre du groupe des Cinquante (ahl al-ḫamsīn) s'appelait Abū Muḥammad ʿAbd Allāh b. Tīssīnt al-Ḫulāsī[47]. Enfin, les céréales formaient la base de l'alimentation, même si nous manquons d'informations sur leur préparation ; É. Lévi-Provençal[48] se demande s'il s'agissait de bouillie ou de couscous.

Par ailleurs, nous sommes très mal renseignés sur les rapports qui ont pu exister entre les pratiques d'Ibn Tūmart et celles des Maṣmūda, les sources arabes médiévales étant très limitées sur le sujet. Même si la comparaison avec la période contemporaine expose au risque d'anachronisme, on doit noter que la scène décrite plus haut présente des similitudes avec la cérémonie du 42 Sur cette question, voir Yassir Benhima, « Quelques remarques sur les conditions de l'islamisation du Maġrib al-Aqṣâ : aspects religieux et linguistiques », dans Islamisation et arabisation de l'Occident musulman médiéval (VIIe-XIIe siècle), éd. Dominique Valérian, Paris, Publications de la Sorbonne (« Bibliothèque historique des pays d'islam », 2), 2011, p. 315-331.

43 C'était une des tribus maṣmūda les plus nombreuses. Elle résidait en partie dans le Haut-Atlas occidental et en partie dans la plaine connue aujourd'hui sous le nom de Haouz. C'est sur son territoire qu'est construite la ville de Marrakech. Hazmīra est l'arabisation du nom Izīmmarān « les béliers » ou « les moutons ». De fait, les noms de tribus tirés du monde animal étaient fréquents au Maghreb (Haskūra, Haylāna, Banū Dġūġ, etc.).

44 L'auteur anonyme du Kitāb al-Ansāb précise que Banū Izīmmar correspond au berbère Ayt Izīmmar ou Idā w-Izīmmar. Cette tribu résidait au nord de l'Oued Sūs. Cet ethnonyme a aujourd'hui disparu.

maʿrūf, telle que Jacques Berque a pu l'observer dans le Haut-Atlas occidental[49] : « Il s'agit d'un rite saisonnier incombant à un groupe à l'égard d'un saint. Il comprend ordinairement un sacrifice sanglant (tiġersi), mais se différencie d'autres réunions, telles que tinubga[50] ou tiwilt[51] qui, elles, n'ont pas de portée religieuse »[52].

L'anthropologue marocain Abdallah Hammoudi précise qu'au cours de cette cérémonie, « des querelles et des litiges étaient exposés au groupe réuni, qui tentait de les résoudre à l'occasion de sacrifices et de repas collectifs[53]. »

La consommation d'une nourriture rituelle, dans la cérémonie du maʿrūf comme dans celle de l'asmās, scelle les rapports d'un groupe avec le mandataire du sacré. Dans ces sociétés, hier comme aujourd'hui, ce qui importe, ce n'est pas tant la communion avec le groupe que l'aspect contractuel du geste. Dans le texte d'al-Bayḍaq, le sacrifice sanglant, qui est sous entendu, ainsi que la consommation d'un repas en commun interviennent au moment précis où al-Mahdī voulait resserrer les rangs autour de sa personne pour créer une force capable de résister militairement aux Almoravides, en se prémunissant contre la défection ou la trahison de ses nouveaux partisans. Ce n'était pas là un risque imaginaire puisque, pour écraser la rébellion d'Ibn Tūmart, les Almoravides comptèrent d'abord sur l'appui d'une partie des Harġā, qui appartenait à un contingent dirigé par le gouverneur du Sūs[54].

Un autre source médiévale révèle comment Ibn Tūmart se servait des structures et des rouages de la société des Maṣmūda pour les rallier à son mouvement : il s'agit de la chronique almohade d'Ibn al-Qaṭṭān, qui relate comment al-Mahdī se rendit à Tifnūt[55] au pays des Hintāta[56], et proclama en berbère :

49 Il serait plus exact de dire : « se pratiquait ». En effet, Jacques Berque et Paul Pascon sont retournés chez les Seksawa dans les années 1970 et ils y ont constaté la dégénérescence, voire l'agonie, de ces rites, naguère si importants.

56 Hintāta (forme berbère Intān) était le nom d'une des plus puissantes et des plus nombreuses tribus du Haut-Atlas. Celle-ci contrôlait le col stratégique du Tizi n'Test, et donc les passages entre le Sūs et le Haouz, axe essentiel de l'économie du Maroc ancien. Elle joua

ARAB_062_Ghouirgate.indd 12 10/29/2014 7:15:13 PM

« “La lumière se trouve au pays des Harġa et vous, Hintāta, êtes dans l’obscurité”. On prépara à manger ; après quoi ils se joignirent à lui[57] ». Cette citation est à apprécier à l’aune du fait que d’après les sources arabes médiévales le surnom du Mahdī était asāfū en berbère[58], soit le « tison », la « lumière » ou le « flambeau »[59]. Plus tard, après la mort d’Ibn Tūmart, asāfū devint le cri de guerre, tazuggayt en berbère[60], servant à galvaniser les troupes juste avant le combat : « Le calife cria aux soldats assemblés avant la bataille “asāfū” et ils répliquèrent en “langue occidentale” : “O flambeau, nous approfondirons la sunna à ce propos ; ce n’est pas ainsi que nous avions déterminé le partage (an-neġzu s-sunnat wer-d-am-nabṭī[61])”. Et tous, fantassins et cavaliers, poussèrent des cris” »[62].

Nous ignorons les modalités pratiques du repas pris chez les Hintāta et nous ne savons pas si Ibn Tūmart y participa, mais il est clair que ce repas pris en commun est le moment fort où le pacte est scellé, rendant irréversible l’engagement des contractants. L’événement a une importance politique considérable, proportionnelle à la puissance de la tribu ralliée. De plus, la consommation d’un repas en commun est associée, dans une vision pro-almohade de la narration des faits, à la lumière. Le ralliement de cette tribu à la cause défendue par Ibn Tūmart est ainsi corrélé au repas pris en commun.

3 Le dévoiement d’une pratique

Ce récit, gestes et paroles compris, va dans le même sens que celui d’al-Bayḍaq, dont le propos est de démontrer que, dans une société aux ressorts relativement égalitaires et sans unité politique, al-Mahdī est parvenu à imposer sa un rôle de premier plan d’un bout à l’autre de l’histoire de la dynastie, d’où l’importance de la scène de ralliement.

volonté, ses directives, son commandement, ses institutions et son ordre non seulement à ses partisans, mais également à l'ensemble des habitants du sud du Maġrib al-aqṣā. Ce procédé permet de jeter le discrédit sur l'ennemi, voir de le diaboliser[63] : ennemis de l'intérieur, traîtres à la cause, considérés comme apostats, par exemple, Ibn Malwiyya (m. 524/1130) ou la tribu des Hazmīra ; ennemis de l'extérieur comme les Almoravides ou les chrétiens. Le chroniqueur rapporte comment le fondateur du mouvement almohade, juste avant la cérémonie de l'asmās, s'était installé dans une grotte[64] à l'entrée de son village natal, Igīlīz n-warġan ; là, « il édifia une maison, un magasin et les murs d'un jardin. Un rocher se trouvait près de l'entrée de la maison : l'Impeccable venait s'y asseoir et les gens de l'assemblée de la tribu (ǧamāʿa) faisaient un cercle autour de lui ». Un jour :

> Yalliltan[65], y avait étendu pour l'Imām, à même le sol, en guise de tapis, un burnous. Voyant cela, Ismāʿīl Igīg lui dit : "O mon frère, ce n'est qu'un burnous que tu donnes comme tapis à la lumière de la science ? La lumière ne doit être que sur la lumière !" Dépouillant alors son kisāʾ, il l'étendit à terre et dit à l'imām : "Assieds-toi là, tu es plus digne que moi de cette étoffe, et Dieu nous a ordonné de te traiter avec honneur. Puisse-t-Il te témoigner son agrément !"[66].

Le fait que le kisāʾ soit offert par un homme lettré, probablement doté d'une certaine influence, puisqu'il a été en mesure de fournir à Ibn Tūmart une escorte de deux cents hommes armés est significative. Tout comme pour l'asmās, la mise en scène est destinée à marquer une différence et à affirmer une supériorité, alors que les participants sont situés côte à côte, dans un même espace. Ibn Tūmart se retrouve ainsi en hauteur, sur un rocher, tout comme plus tard à Tinmāl, où il allait siéger sur une pierre carrée[67], dont la forme rompait avec la figure du cercle, qui symbolisait traditionnellement l'égalité de chaque membre de l'assemblée de la tribu. Cette rupture de l'ordre égalitaire du cercle de l'assemblée et la position en hauteur par rapport à celle-ci préfigurent le trône des souverains almohades et la hiérarchie du mouvement qu'ils ont mis en place.

Dans le cadre d'une civilisation matérielle où l'on s'assoit traditionnellement par terre, dans le meilleur des cas sur des tapis, s'asseoir sur le même burnous avait une forte charge symbolique, marquant l'égalité. Ainsi, quand les deux dirigeants almoravides, Abū Bakr b. ʿUmar (m. 480/1087-1088) et Yūsuf b. Tāšfīn (r. 453/1061-500/1107), décidèrent de négocier un accord à l'amiable, ils se rendirent à un endroit situé à équidistance de leurs positions respectives, entre Aġmāt et Marrakech, dans un lieu-dit qui prit par la suite le nom de la Plaine du burnous (Faḥs al-burnūs) ; ils descendirent de cheval et s'assirent sur un même burnous[68]. Ici, Ibn Tūmart s'installe sur un habit que l'on pressent plus raffiné que son fruste burnous ; même si les termes utilisés ne permettent pas de l'affirmer avec certitude[69]. Ce geste représente un acte de soumission, d'autant qu'Ibn Tūmart ne partage pas le burnous, mais s'y assoit seul. En outre ce passage insiste sur l'humilité d'Ibn Tūmart respectueux des traditions, alors que ce sont ses pairs qui l'élèvent au dessus d'eux sans qu'il ait besoin de réclamer la préséance, ce qui est un topos dans les sources médiévales musulmanes.

C'est d'ailleurs immédiatement après cet épisode qu'al-Bayḏaq, avec une grande cohérence, expose la scène de l'asmās[70] où al-Mahdī, dans son propre village natal, aurait mangé ostensiblement de la viande devant un public qui n'est pas expressément nommé, mais que l'on devine composé de l'assemblée (agrāw ǧamāʿā) des Harġa et de ses compagnons. Il s'agissait pour lui de couper court aux rumeurs qui lui attribuaient une nature divine, mais pour mieux proclamer son impeccabilité (ʿiṣma), qui était un attribut du Prophète[71]. Cette qualité, sujet d'incompréhension dans le reste du monde musulman, alimenta, 70 Cette scène est à rapprocher de ce que dit Claude Lévi-Strauss dans La Pensée sauvage : « Les repas dits totémiques instaurent la contiguïté, mais seulement en vue de permettre une comparaison, dont le résultat escompté est de confirmer les différences ». Cf. Claude Lévi-Strauss, La pensée sauvage, La Flèche, Agora, 2004, p. 116.

71 Cette notion ne cessa de poser des problèmes aux musulmans. D'après Ibn Ḫaldūn, elle constituait le seul aspect répréhensible de la doctrine d'Ibn Tūmart.

à travers les siècles, les rumeurs d'hétérodoxie, et de chiisme, entourant le fondateur du mouvement almohade. À ce propos, l'auteur d'époque mérinide, Ibn Abī Zarʿ (m. entre 710 et 720/1310-1320), parmi ses attaques contre Ibn Tūmart, note que les Maṣmūda invoquaient son nom au début (fātiḥa) de chaque repas[72] en lieu et place de celui de Dieu comme il était habituel de le faire. Cette mention concorde d'ailleurs avec les informations fournies par al-Bayḍaq, selon qui les Maṣmūda avaient tendance à rendre un culte quasiment idolâtrique à Ibn Tūmart. Preuve de la pérennité du culte rendu en milieu maṣmūda à Ibn Tūmart, un notable du Sūs, ʿAbd Allāh b. Ibrāhīm al-Tāsāftī (m. première moitié du XII^{e}/XVIII^{e} siècle), qui se rendit en pèlerinage à Tinmal au début du XVIII^{e} siècle se scandalise encore que des gens refusent de dire une parole de bénédiction quand ils évoquent al-Mahdī[73].

Comme l'affirme Abdallah Laroui, al-Mahdī n'était pas « un ambitieux sans scrupules qui aurait réussi dans un Maghreb à demi-païen, mais plutôt un théologien, un esprit féru de rigueur dogmatique qui vivait aux prises avec une Croisade en pleine expansion »[74] ; néanmoins Ibn Tūmart récupéra au nom de sa Cause tout ce qui pouvait être utilisé dans la société peu étatisée où il évoluait ; aussi, tout en renforçant son pouvoir personnel, il transforma celle-ci profondément. Il se servit des institutions sociales anciennes, de type horizontal, où les décisions étaient prises de manière collégiale, et les fit évoluer vers un système beaucoup plus vertical. Puis ʿAbd al-Muʾmin (m. 558/1163) semble s'être inscrit dans la continuité, tout en donnant une tournure plus personnelle à son pouvoir, pour le rendre moins dépendant de l'assemblée des premiers partisans d'Ibn Tūmart, majoritairement maṣmūda. Finalement, en nommant ses enfants aux principaux gouvernorats de l'Empire en 550/1156, le premier calife almohade fit évoluer le système prophétique des origines vers une monarchie héréditaire. L'instauration du pouvoir personnel du calife se fit graduellement, et on trouve la trace de ce processus dans un extrait de l'ouvrage d'al-Bayḍaq qui évoque la conquête du Maġrib al-aqṣā par ʿAbd al-Muʾmin ; à propos de ses relations avec la confédération des Gazūla[75], il rapporte les faits suivants : « Alors, le calife réunit un agrāw (conseil de la tribu en berbère) au cours duquel il les exhorta, puis leur dit : "Adhérez-vous au parti almohade ? – Oui, répondirent-ils" »[76].

Avant le développement de structures étatiques au Maghreb occidental et central, l'agrāw consistait en une assemblée où, dans un contexte guerrier, les hommes de la tribu se tenaient armés et échangeaient leurs points de vue sur les décisions à prendre[77]. Or ici, non seulement c'est le premier calife almohade qui convoque le conseil, mais en plus il ne donne la parole que dans la mesure où il est certain d'emporter l'assentiment des hommes assemblés. Il faut noter que si l'État au Maghreb, même au stade embryonnaire, ne pouvait se passer de l'esprit de corps de la tribu (ʿaṣabiyya), il s'est construit aussi, plus ou moins ouvertement, contre lui. Nous sommes là en présence d'une logique de dévoiement des anciennes institutions tribales dans le sens d'un exercice plus solitaire et beaucoup plus autoritaire du pouvoir.

La seconde occurrence de l'asmās se trouve dans un passage portant sur une série de mariages contractés par des Almohades à Mahdiyya[78] avec des femmes qui faisaient partie du butin fait sur les Almoravides. C'est à cette occasion que le premier calife almohade, ʿAbd al-Muʾmin, prit pour épouse la fille du dignitaire almoravide Māksan[79] b. al-Muʿizz (m. avant 1143), gouverneur de Melilla[80]. Même si nous avons peu de renseignements sur ce dignitaire, il semble que le premier calife almohade ait pratiqué une véritable politique matrimoniale : il prit des épouses de différents lignages, en privilégiant ceux qui contrôlaient des territoires importants. C'est ainsi que l'important gouvernorat du Sūs fut confié au fils que ʿAbd al-Muʾmin avait eu d'une femme de la tribu des Lamṭa qui dominait la région depuis le Ve /XIe siècle au moins[81] et avait été la première tribu almoravide à se rallier aux Almohades en faisant défection à Tāšfīn b. ʿAlī (r. 537/1143-539/1145 ou 541/1147). Cet exemple permet de supposer que tous ces mariages s'inscrivaient dans une politique de contrôle des territoires, politique dont profitaient jusque-là les Almoravides. S'il en est bien ainsi, ces unions avec les filles des dignitaires almoravides soumettaient celles-ci certes à une forme de domination, mais qui n'avait rien à voir avec l'asservissement que représente l'esclavage. C'est dans ce contexte qu'intervient le repas, qui, avec la dot (ṣadāq), constituait le nœud de l'engagement pris et le point central de la cérémonie.

75 Cette tribu, une des plus puissantes du sud marocain, dominait toute la partie sud-est de l'Anti-Atlas ; si l'on en croit le géographe Ibn Saʿīd al-Maġribī, cette montagne portait le nom de Ǧabal Ǧazūla. Aujourd'hui seule une vallée porte ce nom. Igzūlen (sing. iguzūl), signifie « ceux qui sont de petites taille ». Après sa participation à l'aventure almoravide, une fraction de cette tribu s'installa dans la région de Cadix où un village porte encore le nom d'Alcalá de los Gazules. Ils devaient ainsi assurer la sécurité de l'axe Algésiras-Séville. Toujours dans le cadre de l'appui donné aux Almoravides, ils étaient aussi installés dans la trouée de Taza, axe vital entre le Maghreb occidental et central. D'où l'importance de leur ralliement aux Almohades et de la cérémonie qui l'accompagne.

Un autre passage de cet extrait met en lumière la magnanimité du Prince : quand le premier calife almohade s'empara d'un groupe de femmes, épouses ou filles de seigneurs almoravides, l'une d'elles, connue sous le nom de Tamāgūnt, le prit violemment à partie, ce qui entraîna leur libération, sans qu'on leur eût fait aucun mal. On peut néanmoins déceler dans cette anecdote la volonté du calife de ménager une fraction des Almoravides. Certains d'entre eux firent d'ailleurs défection par la suite et rejoignirent les Almohades, à commencer par Anegmār[82]. D'après ce qui précède, il est assez remarquable qu'É. Lévi-Provençal ait traduit directement asmās par « grand repas pris en commun »[83]. Similaires sont les traductions, espagnole proposée par Ambrosio Huici-Miranda : comida en común[84], ou anglaise, plus récente, d'Henry Terence Norris : common meal[85].

On retrouve ce plat dans un autre contexte politique, toujours lié au caractère contractuel des rapports du pouvoir avec les tribus : après avoir maté l'insurrection des Gazūla et étouffé une tentative de restauration almoravide, ʿAbd al-Muʾmin reçoit à Salé les *šayḫ*s de la tribu rebelle ; il attend le moment où l'on consomme l'asmās pour leur pardonner solennellement et leur octroyer la baraka, terme qui renvoie ici certes probablement à la faveur divine liée au pouvoir charismatique du calife, mais plus matériellement aussi au don de biens, d'habits, de chevaux, de numéraire, etc., qui allaient les attacher plus sûrement encore.

81 Cela dura jusqu'à l'arrivée des tribus arabes Maʿqil qui les vassalisèrent à la fin de la période almohade, en profitant des troubles occasionnés par l'affaissement de l'État central dans les années 1220-1230.

82 Le nom de ce personnage signifie en berbère « le chasseur ». C'est à lui qu'on confiera la délicate mission de réduire la révolte d'Ibn Hūd al-Māssī.

L'asmās est évoqué une dernière fois dans un cadre bien éloigné du sud du Maġrib al-aqṣā, puisque la scène se déroule dans l'enceinte du palais almohade de Séville, en 557/1162 : le gouverneur de la ville, Abū Yaʿqūb (futur calife, r. 1163-1184), apprenant la mort de son père, accueille une délégation de dignitaires qui viennent lui remettre le pouvoir et lui prêter allégeance (bayʿa). L'asmās est alors consommé, probablement pour renouveler le geste du fondateur du mouvement almohade, en terre étrangère, et galvaniser l'esprit de corps (ʿaṣabiyya) des Maṣmūda. La chose était d'autant plus nécessaire que la situation était critique ; le gouverneur de Séville voulait s'emparer du pouvoir par une sorte de coup de force[86] en éliminant l'héritier présomptif, Abū ʿAbd Allāh Muḥammad (m. 571/1175), qui était probablement le petit-fils d'un dignitaire almoravide. Il semble qu'en accord avec son frère utérin Abū Ḥafṣ (m. 575/1179), il ait entrepris de s'emparer du trône et d'affermir son pouvoir en s'appuyant sur les règles fondamentales de l'almohadisme, en même temps que sur les solidarités tribales. En effet l'héritier présomptif buvait du vin, ce qui était contraire au rigorisme mis en place par al-Mahdī, et pouvait justifier qu'il soit déchu. En outre, de tous les fils du premier calife almohade, Abū Yaʿqūb et Abū Ḥafṣ étaient les seuls à descendre d'une Maṣmuda, et pas des moindres puisque leur mère, Ṣafiyya (m. seconde moitié du VI[e]/XII[e] siècle), était la fille d'un compagnon d'Ibn Tūmart, Abū ʿImrān Mūsā b. Sulaymān[87] (m. avant 558/1163).

Pour se concilier les *šayḫ*s almohades, dont le soutien était indispensable, les deux frères firent appel à l'esprit de corps des Maṣmūda. Il se pourrait qu'en berbère, le terme gʷma ait été utilisé à l'origine pour désigner uniquement le frère utérin[88], ce qui renforçait la position des deux frères et leur permettait d'exclure tout élément étranger au legs tūmarto-maṣmūdien, à commencer par leur principal rival, l'héritier présomptif Abū Muḥammad, soutenu par ʿAbd 86 Huici Miranda, Historia política, I, p. 220-221.

87 Cet homme était originaire d'Ansā (près de l'actuelle Taliouine) ; bien qu'il fût aveugle (kafīf), il était qāḍī de son état ; on peut donc supposer que, pour étudier la jurisprudence, tout comme Ibn Tūmart, il avait quitté le sud du Maġrib al-aqṣā à la recherche du savoir. Alors qu'à l'origine il appartenait à la tribu des Imādidān, il fut incorporé aux Ahl Tinmāl ; c'est là une preuve de la faveur dont il jouissait auprès d'Ibn Tūmart, et aussi auprès de ʿAbd al-Muʾmin.

al-Salām al-Gūmī (m. 554/1159), le vizir du premier calife almohade[89]. La place accordée à l'asmās dans le dispositif narratif permet à al-Bayḍaq de mettre en avant la double fidélité qui lie désormais intrinsèquement ceux qui le consomment à Ibn Tūmart, aux Maṣmūda et à leurs valeurs. En effet l'immense majorité des *šayḫ*s almohades étaient des Maṣmūda et les deux termes étaient souvent utilisés indifféremment dans les sources. Du point de vue des Almohades qui n'appartenaient pas aux Maṣmūda, ou qu'à moitié comme Abū ʿAbd Allāh Muḥammad la consommation de ce plat pouvait être considérée comme un élément de distinction, permettant d'inclure des personnes dans la sphère du pouvoir, ou de les en exclure : il y avait ainsi d'un côté ceux qui consommaient l'asmās et de l'autre ceux qui faisaient partie de la masse des conquis, ou éventuellement des élites qui n'avaient pas été conviées.

D'ailleurs, parmi ces derniers, les propres frères d'Abū Yaʿqūb furent éliminés physiquement un peu plus tard. La consommation de l'asmās n'était qu'un moyen parmi d'autres pour créer un ordre qui résultait de rapports dissymétriques. Dans le récit, le partage de ce plat apparaît comme partie prenante de stratégies institutionnalisées de distinction par lesquelles le groupe dominant tentait de rendre permanentes et naturelles, donc légitimes, les différences de fait, en redoublant symboliquement les hiérarchies de position dans la structure sociale des gouvernants. En outre l'emploi du berbère, puisque les Almohades donnèrent une traduction institutionnelle à leur langue, le berbère des Maṣmūda[90], et le port d'un habit distinctif[91] participent d'une logique de pouvoir similaire.

Enfin, le Kitāb al-Ansāb[92], source anonyme de l'époque almohade, évoque un incident survenu entre le premier calife almohade et les membres de la tribu d'origine d'Ibn Tūmart, les Harġa. Si ce passage ne mentionne pas explicitement l'asmās, il y fait peut-être allusion. Les événements se situent à un moment crucial, puisqu'il s'agit de la succession d'Ibn Tūmart, alors que personne n'avait encore réussi à s'imposer définitivement à la tête du mouvement almohade. Un repas en commun est présenté comme un enjeu de pouvoir très important, permettant de situer la position des différents participants au sein de la structure almohade :

> Dès avant cette époque, le [futur] calife ʿAbd al-Muʾmin était lié aux Harġa, auxquels l'imām al-Mahdī, de son vivant, l'avait attaché par des liens de fraternité. Sa généalogie a été donnée plus haut[93]. Après la mort de l'imām al-Mahdī, un événement relatif à ces liens de fraternité se déroula chez les Harġa ; ils préparèrent un repas commun [ʿamalū ṭaʿām] et n'avertirent point le [futur] calife d'avoir à préparer sa part avec eux. Quand il apprit cette nouvelle, il les appela et leur dit en « langue occidentale » (al-lisān al-ġarbī)[94] : « Si je passe, ne vous taisez pas, ou bien celui [Ibn Tūmart] qui nous a réunis à vous aurait-il douté de notre destin commun[95] ? ». Puis, il les quitta pendant trois jours ; ensuite, il les appela, ordonna que sa part figurât dorénavant [dans les repas communs] et leur interdit de recommencer[96].

Cet extrait souligne l'antagonisme des différentes légitimités : celle de ʿAbd al-Muʾmin qui a quitté son pays, le Maghreb central, pour suivre Ibn Tūmart[97] et celle des parents du fondateur du mouvement almohade. ʿAbd al-Muʾmin se dresse face à tous ceux qui auraient pu se réclamer d'Ibn Tūmart à travers une légitimité de sang – père, frères, sœurs, cousins au sens large. Ainsi, il se pose aux yeux de tous comme le véritable continuateur d'al-Mahdī, en invoquant l'idéologie justificative et la fidélité au message délivré, en faisant passer les Harġa pour des fauteurs de trouble qui brisent l'unité des Almohades. En agissant de la sorte, ils nuiraient à la réalisation du projet de leur parent. Le repas en commun est ici l'occasion de mettre en relief le choc de deux légitimités :

93 Il faut entendre par là qu'il n'était pas à l'origine membre d'une des tribus Maṣmūda.

94 Il s'agit de la langue berbère des Maṣmūda qui fut institutionnalisée par les Almohades.

95 Telle est la traduction que nous proposons pour « maz kkeġ wer aneġ tefisem, neġ yucek wa n di ikker-aneġ id-wen yes-nn ilkemen ? ». G. Marcy proposait pour cette phrase : « Si je triomphe, vous n'observerez point à notre égard le même silence; celui qui s'est levé pour vous aurait-il donc mis en doute que le but poursuivi puisse être atteint ? » (p. 70).

96 Lévi-Provençal, Documents inédits d 'histoire almohade, trad. p. 57.

97 Lui-même était originaire de la tribu des Gūmiya qui se trouvait localisée dans les environs de Tlemcen. Il était donc un étranger pour les Maṣmūda. Cette thématique a été traitée, entre autres, dans un article de Constant Hamès, « De la chefferie tribale à la dynastie étatique. Généalogie et pouvoir à l'époque almohado-hafside (XII^e^-XIV^e^ siècles) », dir. Pierre Bonte, Édouard Conte, Constant Hamès et Abdel Wedoud Ould Cheikh, Al-Ansāb : la quête des origines : anthropologie historique de la société tribale arabe, Paris, Maison des Sciences de l'Homme, 1991, p. 101-137.

ARAB_062_Ghouirgate.indd 21 10/29/2014 7:15:14 PM

celle de ʿAbd al-Muʾmin et de ses descendants et celle des *šayḫ*s almohades. Il est remarquable que ce conflit, ici plus ou ou moins feutré, caractérise l'histoire almohade dans toute sa durée. Cette cohabitation finit par exploser dans les années 620/1220, en dépit des tentatives de réconciliation, qui allaient de pair avec des projets de restauration. Non résolue, cette tension initiale fut une des causes de l'affaiblissement de l'empire.

Ainsi la consommation de l'asmās telle qu'elle apparaît dans les sources est conforme à la conception ḫaldūnienne de l'histoire : pratique caractéristique des communautés villageoises (al-badw), elle fut instrumentalisée à une tout autre échelle, dans le cadre de la civilisation urbaine et des structures d'État, comme élément de distinction non seulement entre gouvernants et gouvernés, mais aussi entre gouvernants eux-mêmes. La consommation d'un plat de céréales avec de la viande, qui servait à sceller des alliances conjoncturelles, ou à mettre un terme aux hostilités entre tribus belligérantes, en vint à être le symbole de l'intronisation du nouveau calife. Dans le contexte almohado-hafside, ce repas partagé était le signe de la caution des *šayḫ*s almohades les plus éminents ; c'était d'ailleurs à cette époque, selon toute vraisemblance, l'une des composantes de la cérémonie de l'allégeance privée (bayʿa ḫāṣṣa). Cette cérémonie symbolisait le consensus autour du nouveau souverain par l'évocation de la personnalité fondatrice d'Ibn Tūmart et par la réactivation des coutumes tribales maṣmūda. Par la suite, ce plat n'est plus mentionné dans les sources, peut-être parce que les chroniques, le Bayān en particulier, s'étaient rapprochées des topoï orientaux du genre, et auraient éliminé les pratiques issues trop manifestement du monde berbère. Cependant on peut gager que cette pratique du repas collectif, vécu comme un moment fort visant à raviver l'esprit de corps de l'élite dirigeante et à sceller des alliances, perdura bien après la seconde moitié du VI^e^/XII^e^ siècle, ce que semble confirmer par ailleurs sa présence dans le Vocabulista.

#الحشاشون

بعد مقال امس حدث خلط بسيط عند المتابعين بين فرقة الخناقين وفرقة الحشاشين ، لهذا اخترت لكم مقالا عن الحشاشين وقلعة ألموت ومؤسس الفرقة حسن الصباح

تعريفها:
الحشاشون بمثابة فرقة أو طائفة دينية تتبع المذهب الإسماعيلي، ظهرت أواخر القرن الحادي عشر الميلادي، واستمر وجودها إلى حدود القرن الثالث عشر الميلادي، وكانت تشتهر بتنفيذ عمليات الاغتيالات السرية الموجهة ضد الشخصيات البارزة سواء المسيحية منها أم المسلمة.

مؤسس فرقة الحشاشين:
يُعد حسن الصباح هو مؤسس فرقة أو طائفة الحشاشون، واسمه الكامل حسن بن علي بن محمد الصباح الحميري، ولد سنة ١٠٣٧م بمدينة الري في بلاد فارس (قرب طهران في إيران حالياً)، وقد كان حاد الذكاء والفطنة وسرعة البديهة.

مقرهم :
ألموت" هو اسم القلعة التي اتخذها حسن الصباح مقرا ومركزا له ولأتباعه، وتعني كلمة ألموت عش النسر، وقد بنيت هذه القلعة في فترات سابقة فوق قمة" جبل البورج الشاهق على ارتفاع ٦٠٠٠قدم، ولا يمكن الوصول إليها إلا عن طريق واحد.

استراتيجياتهم :

كانت استراتيجيات فرقة الحشاشين تختلف عن تلك التي كانت سائدة لدى الفرق الأخرى في العصور الوسطى، فقد كان الحشاشون يتجنبون المواجهة المباشرة مع الأعداء، واعتمدوا على استراتيجية اغتيال الأمراء والوزراء والشخصيات البارزة، ولتنفيذ هذه العمليات كان الحشاشون يتدربون بشكل جيد على استعمال الخناجر والأسلحة ومختلف فنون الفروسية وعلى أساليب التنكر واللسانيات والتأثير في الآخرين.

كانت مهمة الفدائي (الحشاش) تمتد لسنوات، حيث يقوم بالمراقبة وجمع المعلومات عن الشخصية التي يريد اغتيالها، وأحيانا يقوم بالاندماج في جيش الخصم أو بلاط الحاكم من أجل تنفيذ المهمة.

كان الحشاشون ينفذون هجماتهم في الأماكن العامة أمام الجميع وذلك بغية إثارة الرعب في قلوب العامة فضلا عن الخاصة، مستعملين أساليب التنكر من أجل الوصول إلى هدفهم، وهو ما أكسبهم قوة وجعلهم مهابين من طرف خصومهم، وأحيانا كانوا يعمدون إلى الانتحار تجنبا للسقوط في براثن أعدائهم.

إغتيالات قام الحشاشون بها لشخصيات نافذة:
نفذ الحشاشون عدة عمليات ضد رموز وقيادات هامة سواء المسلمة أو المسيحية، والتي كانوا في خلاف وصراع معها، ومن أشهر عملياتهم اغتيال المركيز الصليبي كونراد مونفيراتو ملك بيت المقدس سنة ١١٩٢م ، حيث تسلل مغتالوه في زي رهبان مسيحيين.

كما قاموا باغتيال الوزير السلجوقي نظام الملك سنة ١٠٩٢ م، لأنه كان يحارب الحركات والمذاهب الباطنية ومن بينها الاسماعيلية النزارية.

كما حاولوا اغتيال #صلاح_الدين_الأيوبي غير مرة، وذلك بعد التنكر والتسلل إلى معسكره، لكنهم فشلوا في ذلك وأصابوه بجروح فقط نظرا لإرتدائه درعا قويا، الأمر الذي اضطره إلى بناء برج خشبي للنوم فيه للحفاظ على حياته وتجنب غدرهم.

نهايتهم:

كانت نهاية الحشاشين على يد المغول بقيادة زعيمهم هولاكو، وذلك سنة ١٢٥٦ م حيث قام الزعيم التتري بالسيطرة على معقلهم قلعة ألموت في بلاد فارس وتدميرها،
في حين قام سلطان مصر الظاهر ركن الذين بيبرس بالقضاء عليهم في الشام سنة ١٢٧٣ م.

طبعا معلوماتك فيها أخطاء فظيعة وهذا مو ذنبك هذا ذنب التاريخ المزور بكل الاحوال
اولا الحشاشون مصطلح أخذ من اللاتينية من جذر القتله لانهم كانو يقتلون الكثير من الصليبين وبسبب تشابه المصطلح اللاتيني وليس له علاقة بتعاطي الحشيش ومن المضحك أن يستطيع شخص تناول الحشيش تنفيذ عملية بهذه الدقة تحتاج انتباه وتركيز لا متناهي
من ناحية أخرى الخليفة الفاطمي اسمه الحاكم بأمر الله وهو إمام الاسماعيلية فكيف يقتلونه معلوماتك تحتاج تدقيق كثير كونها متناقصة
كمان أن موضوع صلاح الدين ليس له علاقة بقلعة ألموت بل بقلاع الساحل السوري وسنان راشد الدين وقد حاربهم صلاح الدين وحاصر قلاعهم وتوقف كل شيئ عندما استيقظ صباحا ليجد خنجرا مغروزا في وسادته مع رسالة لو اردنا قتلك لفعلنا معركتك ومعركتنا مع الصليبين
عموما لست في باب تفنيد منشورك فمعلوماته تناقض نفسها

من المعروف أن صلاح الدين شن حملة أو حملتين على الحشاشين ولكن فشل بسبب تمكنهم من الوصول الى فراشه ووضعوا خنجر ورغيف خبز . وهذه رسالة فهمها صلاح الدين اي تعني انسحب وإلا الخنجر هو مصيرك وعلى إثرها هرب لينفذ بجلده . وهذا هو السبب الرئيس لتزييف التاريخ من قبل الحكومات في ذلك الوقت لإظهار الحشاشين على أنهم مجموعة إرهابية والعكس هو الصحيح . 4

Atlantic voyage of the predecessor of Mansa Musa

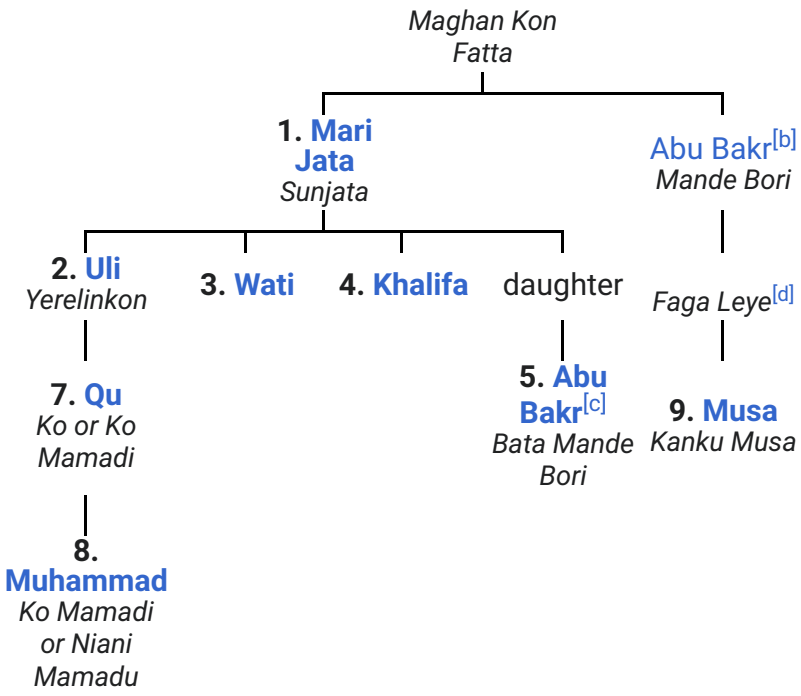
In 1324, while staying in Cairo during his hajj, Mansa Musa, the ruler of the Mali Empire, told an Egyptian official whom he had befriended that he had come to rule when his predecessor led a fleet in an attempt to cross the Atlantic Ocean and never returned. This account, recorded by the Arab historian al-Umari, has attracted considerable interest and speculation as a possible instance of pre-Columbian trans-oceanic contact. The voyage is popularly attributed to a Mansa Abu Bakr II,[a] but no such mansa ever reigned. Rather, the voyage is inferred to have been undertaken by Mansa Muhammad ibn Qu.

A precise date for the suggested voyage is not known, though it is interpreted as having occurred in or shortly before 1312, the year Musa is inferred to have become mansa. No clear evidence of the fate of the voyage has been found.

Musa's account

Mansa Musa stayed in Cairo for three months in 1324 while en route to Mecca for the hajj.[1] While there, he befriended an emir named Abu al-Hasan Ali ibn

Amir Hajib, who was the governor of the district of Cairo Musa was staying in.[2] Ibn Amir Hajib later recounted to the scholar al-Umari what he had learned of Mali from his conversations with Musa. In one such conversation, Ibn Amir Hajib had asked Musa how he had become king, and Musa responded:



> We belong to a house which hands on the kingship by inheritance. The king who was my predecessor did not believe that it was impossible to discover the furthest limit of the Atlantic Ocean and wished vehemently to do so. So he equipped 200 ships filled with men and the same number equipped with gold, water, and provisions enough to last them for years, and said to the man deputed to lead them: "Do not return until you reach the end of it or your provisions and water give out." They departed and a long time passed before anyone came back. Then one ship returned and we asked the captain what news they brought. He said: "Yes, O Sultan, we traveled for a long time until there appeared in the open sea [as it were] a river with a powerful current. Mine was the last of those ships. The [other] ships went on ahead but when they reached that place they did not return and no more was seen of them and we do not know what became of them. As for me, I went about at once and did not enter that river." But the sultan disbelieved him. Then that sultan got ready 2,000 ships, 1,000 for himself and the men whom he took with him and 1,000 for water and provisions. He left me to deputize for him and embarked on the Atlantic Ocean with his men. That was the last we saw of him and all those who were with him, and so I became king in my own right.[3]

Al-Umari's record of this conversation is the only account of this voyage, as it is not mentioned by other medieval Arab historians or West African oral tradition.[4] Nonetheless, the possibility of such a voyage has been taken seriously by several historians.[4][5][6]

Identity of Musa's predecessor

The identity of the mansa responsible for the voyage has been subject to some confusion.[1][5] Al-Umari's record of Musa's account does not mention mansa's name, giving no indication of his identity other than that he was Musa's predecessor.[3] According to the Arab historian Ibn Khaldun, writing several decades later, Musa's predecessor as mansa was Muhammad ibn Qu. As such, several historians have attributed the voyage to Mansa Muhammad.[15][4][16]

Genealogy of the mansas of the Mali Empire up to Musa, following Levtzion's interpretation of Ibn Khaldun.[7] Bolded individuals reigned as mansa of the Mali Empire, with numbers indicating the order in which they ruled. The sixth mansa, Sakura, is not included as he was not related to the others. The upper, non-italicized name is the name given by Ibn Khaldun, the lower name is the name given in oral tradition.[8][9]

Many sources call the mansa in question Abu Bakr II.[15] However, the inclusion of a Mansa Abu Bakr II in the list of Malian rulers is an error that originated in a mistranslation of Ibn Khaldun's text by the 19th-century European historian Baron de Slane.[17] De Slane translated Ibn Khaldun as saying that the kingship passed from Muhammad to Abu Bakr, then to Musa. However, in the original Arabic text, Abu Bakr is only mentioned in his role as the progenitor of Musa's lineage, not as a ruler. The Abu Bakr in question was a brother of Sunjata, the founder of the Mali Empire, and apparently never himself ruled. Another figure named Abu Bakr did rule as mansa, but he was the predecessor of Sakura, not Musa.[18]

Additionally, some historians have suggested without elaboration that the voyage should be attributed to Mansa Qu,[19][4][20] who was the father and predecessor of Muhammad ibn Qu according to Ibn Khaldun.[21]

Interpretation

No uncontroversial evidence of pre-Columbian contact between Africa and the Americas has ever been found.[22] Regardless of whether any of the Malian ships ever reached the Americas, they apparently never returned to Africa and there were not any long-term economic consequences of the voyage.[5]

The river on the sea described by the survivor of the first expedition is presumably the Canary Current.[6] The inclusion of this fact in Musa's account indicates that Musa had some awareness of the oceanographic conditions of the open Atlantic. The Canary Current flows from West Africa to the Americas, which would have facilitated travel from Africa to the Americas but prevented it in the opposite direction.[23]

Ivan van Sertima and Malian researcher Gaoussou Diawara proposed that the voyage reached the New World.[24][25] Van Sertima cites the abstract of Columbus's log made by Bartolomé de las Casas, according to which the purpose of Columbus's third voyage was to test both the claims of King John II of Portugal that "canoes had been found which set out from the coast of Guinea [West Africa] and sailed to the west with merchandise" as well as the claims of the native inhabitants of the Caribbean island of Hispaniola that "from the south and the southeast had come black people whose spears were made of a metal called guanín ... from which it was found that of 32 parts: 18 were gold, 6 were silver, and 8 copper."[26][27]

However, most archaeologists, anthropologists, ethnohistorians, linguists, and other modern pre-Columbian scholars say that there is no evidence of any such voyage reaching the Americas, and that there are insufficient evidentiary grounds to suppose there has been contact between Africa and the New World at any point in the pre-Columbian era.[22] For views representative of this point of view, see the considerations on the question advanced in Haslip-Viera et al. (1997), who for example note "no genuine African artifact has ever been found in a controlled archaeological excavation in the New World". See also the supporting responses in peer-review printed in the article, by David Browman, Michael D. Coe, Ann Cyphers, Peter Furst, and other academics active in the field. Ortiz de Montellano et al. (1997, passim.) continues the case against Africa-Americas contacts. Other prominent Mesoamerican specialists such as UC Riverside anthropology professor Karl Taube are confident that "There simply is no material evidence of any Pre-Hispanic contact between the Old World and Mesoamerica before the arrival of the Spanish in the sixteenth century".[28]

Legacy

Mansa Musa himself appears to have considered his predecessor's plan to be impractical.[5] The main point he appears to have been trying to make to Ibn

Amir Hajib is that his predecessor's failed voyage paved the way to his becoming king.[15] Likewise, it has been speculated that the lack of information in oral tradition about the voyage reflects a view that the mansa's voyage was a shameful abdication of duty.[25]

In modern times, the voyage has become more celebrated.[29] The Malian historian Gaoussou Diawara has remarked that the mansa should be looked up to by modern politicians as an example of a ruler who valued science and discovery over holding onto power.[25]

a. Variously spelled as Abu Bakr II or Abubakari II

b. In 1959, D. T. Niane regarded Sunjata's brother Abu Bakr/Mande Bori as having reigned between Khalifa and Sakura.[10] However, Ibn Khaldun said that the Abu Bakr who reigned between Khalifa and Sakura was the grandson of Sunjata through his daughter, not the brother of Sunjata, and only mentions Sunjata's brother Abu Bakr as being the ancestor of Musa.[11] Niane later accepted Levtzion's interpretation that Abu Bakr/Mande Bori and the Abu Bakr who reigned between Khalifa and Sakura were different figures.[12]

c. In 1959, D. T. Niane, following De Slane's mistaken interpretation that there were two mansas named Abu Bakr, identified the Abu Bakr I (who reigned between Khalifa and Sakura) with Mande Bori, Sunjata's brother, and Abu Bakr II (who De Slane regarded as reigning between Muhammad and Musa) with Bata Mande Bori, a figure who is said to be a son of Sunjata by the jeliw of Dioma.[10] The word "Bata" indicates that Bata Mande Bori was not the biological son of Sunjata, but related to him through the female line.[10] De Slane's translation called Abu Bakr II a son of Sunjata's sister, and Niane accepted this interpretation of Abu Bakr/Bata Mande Bori's relationship.[8][10] However, with Levtzion's 1963 discovery that De Slane had mistranslated Ibn Khaldun, only one Abu Bakr was recognized as having reigned, placed between Khalifa and Sakura.[8] This Abu Bakr is said to be the son of Sunjata's daughter by Ibn Khaldun, and is interpreted as corresponding to the Bata Mande Bori of oral tradition, with Mande Bori never having reigned. Niane later agreed with this identification.[12]

d. The literal translation of Ibn Khaldun is that Musa is the son of Abu Bakr, but the line can also be read as more generally indicating Abu Bakr as an ancestor of Musa.[13] Oral tradition names Musa's father as Faga Leye.[10] Regarding Musa as Abu Bakr's grandson is more chronologically plausible.[14]

Ferdinand de Magellan et la Bataille d'Azemmour/1513/(الرحالة ماجلان ومعركة ازمور):
En 1505, Ferdinand embarque sur l'un des vingt-deux navires d'une importante flotte commandée par Francisco De Almeida, en partance de Lisbonne pour les îles de la Sonde, par la route maritime portugaise des Indes orientales, jalonnée de ports fortifiés établis sur les îles. Il passe sept années à maintenir par la force la mainmise portugaise sur les « îles des Épices », passant d'un comptoir commercial à un autre, d'une bataille à la suivante. Il survit à de multiples blessures et il apprend ce qui lui sera fort utile pour la suite : rester en vie dans un environnement hostile.
De retour à Lisbonne, toujours aussi ambitieux, Magellan entame une nouvelle carrière militaire comme officier de cavalerie. Il s'engage dans la lutte menée par le Portugal pour dominer l'Afrique du Nord. En 1513, il trouve une occasion idéale de démontrer sa loyauté et son utilité quand l'autorité marocaine de la ville d'Azemmour refuse tout net de payer son tribut annuel au Portugal. Le gouverneur Moulay Zayam, de la dynastie des Wattassides, déploie autour de la ville une puissante armée. Le roi Manuel 1er, répond en dépêchant vers la cité la plus grande flotte navale ayant jamais navigué sous la bannière de son petit pays. Son neveu, le Duc de Bragança, commande une Armada de 500 navires de type Caravelle ayant à bord 2000 cavaliers, 13 000 fantassins et une importante artillerie. Le 29 août 1513, le corps expéditionnaire débarque à Mazagan, puis marche sur Azemmour pour l'assiéger et la soumettre. Le 2 septembre 1513, après d'intenses et nombreux combats, la cité tombe, les Portugais l'occupent, la fortifient et y installent une garnison. Magellan participe à la riposte aux escarmouches livrées par les Marocains qui sortent régulièrement du bled pour harceler les soldats chargés de défendre la ville. Il fait preuve d'un grand courage en s'engageant dans des luttes au corps à corps. Un coup de lance dans le genou gauche atteint l'articulation et sa jambe restera pour toujours à demi ankylosés.
Un témoin oculaire : ElHassane Ibn Mohamed El Wazzane connu sous le nom de Léon l'Africain a assisté à ce combat entre les troupes du Sultan Wattassi et les troupes portugaises d'Azemmour et Safi « Je me trouvais sur cette route, étant présent à ce combat …, mais je m'en tenais le plus loin qu'il m'était possible, pour ne pas courir de danger, contempler cet horrible spectacle, sur une jument fort légère et agile, car je me dirigeais vers Marrakech, pour aviser le gouverneur de cette cité, que mon seigneur le roi de Fès n'attendait que l'heure pour que son frère dût arriver à Doukkala, pour attaquer les portugais. »
C'était la première guerre entre une armée menée par les Beni Wattas et les conquérants portugais dans la province de Doukkala.
- Après l'occupation d'Azemmour, la chasse au butin humain à l'intérieur de Doukkala.
Suite à la conquête d'Azemmour au mois de Septembre 1513 et la soumission des villages voisins. Emmanuel fût offert par le Pape Léon X, au début de l'année 1514 , "le tiers et le sixième des revenus de toutes les églises et de tous les monastères de son royaume pour tout le temps qu'il ferait la guerre aux marocains'' . L'ordre de la guerre contre les Marocains fut donné ; Rui Barreto Capitaine de la place d'Azemmour voulait suivre une politique d'apprivoisement entretenue par le système d'otages, pour soumettre les habitants de l'intérieur de Doukkala . L'année 1514 passa pour lui et pour Joâo (Joam) de Meneses capitaine de la région avec des alternatives de succès et de revers. D'après les récits de Marmol et de De Goes, un jour du mois de février à l'aube l'armée portugaise d'Azemmour avait attaqué deux Cités situées au pied de Jbel Lakhdar, nommées Bencafis et Tafuf. Les portugais n'avaient laissé à leur retour à Azemmour avec 200 captifs (des enfants, des femmes et des vieillards) et un butin constitué essentiellement de bétail, deux places ruinées et incendiées. Plusieurs citoyens étaient tués par les armes, sous les décombres ou noyés en voulant traverser vers la rive droite de l'oued El Faregh en crue. Un tel acte contre des citoyens pacifiques que Marmol nomma « Guerre sainte » ne peut être désigné aujourd'hui que par le terme de « Terrorisme ».

Magellan avec Ses états de services au combat et ses blessures de guerre lui valent le respect et une promotion au rang de « maître de manœuvre ». Ce grade lui permet de partager les prises de guerre.
Il décide de récompenser certaines tribus alliées en leur donnant une partie des animaux pillés . Après cette transaction, Magellan est accusé d'avoir secrètement revendu 400 chèvres au Marocains et d'avoir gardé les bénéfices pour lui. L'accusation est en soi scandaleuse puisque en tant que maître de manœuvre, il a effectivement droit à sa part de butin. Refusant de se défendre sur place, il quitte Azemmour sans autorisation pour Lisbonne où il surgit devant le roi. Il ne présente aucune excuse pour sa conduite et exige en revanche une augmentation de sa maradia, une pension qu'il perçoit en tant que membre de la maison royale. Il rappelle au souverain qu'il est un noble ayant voué sa vie au service de la couronne, ce dont témoignent ses blessures. Le monarque est cinglant : Magellan sujet aussi insolent que stupide, doit immédiatement retourner à Azemmour, répondre des accusations de trahison, de corruption et de désertion. Après enquête sur les faits, le tribunal le lave de tout soupçon et il revient à Lisbonne muni d'une lettre de recommandation de son officier supérieur. Avec un entêtement hors norme, Magellan retourne voir son altesse et exige l'augmentation de sa moradia avec plus de véhémence que jamais. Bien évidemment le roi refuse.
Après la bataille d'Azemmour, les Portugais quitteront définitivement la ville en 1549. Mazagan sera la dernière ville forteresse portugaise du littoral marocain à résister jusqu'au traité de paix signé avec le sultan Mohammed III. Le 10 mars 1769, les occupants évacuèrent définitivement les fortifications par la Porte de la mer , après avoir miné l'entrée principale du fort qui explosa lorsque les Marocains pénétrèrent, ce qui provoqua la destruction du bastion du gouverneur et d'une grande partie du rempart. La ville resta inhabitée pendant près d'un demi-siècle et fut appelée Al-Mahdouma (la ruinée).

tido Civil was a "party of notables" (Honoratiorenpartei) in the Weberian sense. But the power of the notables was limited by their dependency on the loyalty of the party's clubs throughout the country.

Mücke deals with three major issues. First, by describing the development of what he calls a modern bourgeoisie and a civil society, and by presenting the key political ideas and demands of this Lima bourgeoisie, Mücke outlines the historical development and the social composition of the Partido Civil. Second, he devotes a chapter to analyzing elections and electoral campaigns in Lima and the provinces and shows how local political clubs were systematically established and maintained. Finally, for the period after 1872, when Manuel Pardo was elected president, Mücke turns his attention to the relationship between party officials in government positions and the party's rank and file. By analyzing Pardo's correspondence with regional party leaders, Mücke impressively presents the clientelistic relations between party members.

There are two particularly strong elements of Der Partido Civil. One is that the author effectively demonstrates how the party mobilized voters and established roots in the hinterland. This analysis contains findings that will greatly enrich debates over the meaning and significance of elections in nineteenth-century Latin America. The other strength of the book is its analysis of how Pardo attempted to stabilize his power as president by attracting groups such as artisans to his party and by attempting to maintain good relations with provincial supporters. Mücke nicely shows that provincial party members were not subordinate to Lima officials but, instead, were well aware of the fact that the Lima party depended on their loyalty. The book's arguments are convincingly supported by numerous graphs and tables and by informative statistical appendixes.

Minor shortcomings of this book are due to the fact that it is the author's unchanged dissertation. Some parts sound like an introduction to Peruvian history and others are so filled with detail that the reader tends to lose the thread of the argument. But these flaws could easily be corrected if, as it deserves, this book is translated into English or Spanish.

In my view, this is one of the most important books written on the political history of nineteenth-century Peru in recent years.

Afro-Bahian communities, Nina Rodrigues, Melville and Frances Herksovits, Gilberto Freyre, Ruth Landes, and Pierre Verger helped build the foundations for contemporary studies of Brazil and the African Diaspora. At a time when a self-identified Afro-Bahian culture has assumed a central role in regional and national (as well as increasingly transnational) identity politics and economic planning, Bahia continues to attract the attention of Brazilian and foreign scholars interested in the African experience in the Americas.

Afro-Brazilian Culture and Politics, a collection of eight articles edited by historian Hendrik Kraay, contains some of the most recent scholarship on Afro-Bahians and their place in Brazilian society. Kraay's introductory essay outlines the central roles played by Africans and Afro-Brazilians in Bahia from the early days of the transatlantic slave trade through today's proliferation of houses of candomblé, capoeira, and blocos afros. It also provides a brief demographic and economic history of colonial and nineteenth-century Bahia, where slave-based plantation agriculture gave rise to a New World society in which people of African descent were the majority population. Although Kraay is careful to point out that not all blacks in Bahia were slaves and not all Bahians were black, he makes clear that early Bahian society was formed out of the slave regime. The legacy of slavery would have lasting ramifications on the region's economic and cultural development in the post-abolition period.

The articles, led by Kraay's study of downward social mobility among free black militia officers during the era of independence, focus upon individual and collective biographies of Afro-Bahians in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. None of the articles deal exclusively with enslaved Afro-Brazilians; manumitted slaves and free people of color are the main subjects in the studies authored by Kraay and Mary Ann Mahony. However, the culture of slavery pervades these authors' analysis of the ideological and legal mechanisms that limited the social ascent of free people of color during the Empire and early Republic. The culture of Brazilian slave society—located at a nexus between African cultural imports and practices born on American plantations—also looms large in Dale Graden's and Fayette Winberley's studies on the spread of Afro-Brazilian religion in the decades preceding the abolition of 1888.

The articles on modern Bahia squarely locate Afro-Bahian political organization within cultural practices not immediately associated with such conventional political actors as political bosses, parties, labor unions, commercial associations, and the armed forces. Jocélio Teles dos Santos links capoeira to local strategies of political empowerment under the authoritarian political culture of the 1970s and 1980s. Kim Butler assesses the ideological and economic transformations that have accompanied the growth of Afro-Bahian cultural organizations such as Olodum. Michel Agier's case study of the rebirth of the Vila Flaviana terreiro [candomblé house]—a highly compelling work of ethnography—illuminates the institutional and associational spaces in which Afro-Bahians have built cultural identities and support networks from which black activists and community leaders can build political movements. In all cases, the authors lead the reader to consider the potential for political empowerment embedded in the cultural expressions of blackness that propel the associational life and economic prosperity of Salvador and, increasingly, much of the Brazilian northeast.

Kraay merits recognition for his fine original scholarship, translations, and editorial choices. The collection should serve as a point of departure for humanists and social scientists interested in a region located at the intersection of the African Diaspora and Brazilian national identity.

Cinematograph of Words: Literature, Technique, and Modernization in Brazil. By FLORA SÜSSEKIND. Translated by PAULO HENRIQUES BRITTO. Writing Science. Stanford: Stanford University Press, 1997. Photographs. Illustrations. Notes. Bibliography. Index. xi, 129 pp. Cloth, $15.95.

The period between the fall of the Empire in 1889 and the first burst of modernism in 1922 has often slipped between the cracks of the cultural and intellectual historiography of Brazil. Its cultural artifacts are usually described tangentially, as premodernist, postromantic, or neo-Parnassian. Süssekind, in contrast, identifies the literature of the period as a coherent and crucial stage in the development of Brazilian letters, one characterized primarily by literary reactions to new technologies. She argues that this period gave birth to literature as technique, meaning, on the one hand, the professionalization of writers as journalists and admen, and, on the other, the development of authorial voices deeply shaped by technology.

The book is divided into two principal sections. The first traces the reflections of technology in novels, poetry, and crônicas, or short journalistic essays, a form that Süssekind describes as particularly marked by new technological modes of perception. Much of this section is a mere catalog of references to phonographs and cinema. The second section, far more ambitious and compelling, analyzes "how literary technique changed as it incorporated procedures characteristic of photography, film and poster art" (p. 4).

Süssekind identifies three types of literary approximation of technology—imitation, stylization, and displacement. Imitation involved attempts to reproduce the effects of modern technology (cinema, most prominently) in prose. Stylization involved more subtle adoptions and adaptations of the clipped phrasing, jumps in point of view, and the two-dimensional characters common in the advertising, poster art, and cinema of the period. Displacement involved the rejection of technology and mechanical efficiency in favor of ornate, recondite language. This framework is engaging and lucid, and allows Süssekind to tie together efforts as diverse as João do Rio's offhand crônicas and Olavo Bilac's overwrought poetry. The author is most convincing in her discussion of the influence of journalism and advertising on literary production. She links these industries to her concern with technology by pointing out that in this period both changed rapidly as a result of breakthroughs in photographic reproduction. But as she

«BEHANZIN (1845-1906), roi d'Abomey, résistant et héros national du Bénin» par M. Amadou Bal BA - http://baamadou.over-blog.fr/

«Tout acte posé par un homme doit entrer dans l'histoire» dit un dicton du Dahomey. Héros national et résistant, Béhanzin-Hossou-Bowélé (le germe du monde) a été le 10ème et dernier roi du Dahomey du 6 janvier 1890 au 15 janvier 1894, un règne bref, mais qui a marqué les esprits. Son règne est «sans conteste le plus éclatant à cause de l'exemplarité de son combat pour l'intégrité territoriale et la liberté de la patrie» dit Jean Roger AYOYO. «C'est une vérité d'expérience banale que l'imagination populaire déforme l'histoire. Les personnages qui l'émeuvent ou excitent sa curiosité, elle les exagère, les grandit, parfois même démesurément, en fait des types surhumains. Le recul des siècles aidant, le mythe divinise le héros. Il ne s'agit pas ici de faire de Béhanzin un Priam, ou un Xerxès vaincu. On voudrait seulement le replacer dans le cadre de la vérité historique» écrit, fort justement, Daniel MASSE. Né vers 1845, sous le nom d'Ahokponou Gnacadja, il prend, en 1875, le titre de prince Kondo et décèdera, en exil, à Blida, en Algérie, le 10 décembre 1906. Son corps n'a été rapatrié au Bénin, à Djimé (Abomey), que le 9 mars 1928. Son nom, «Gbéhanzin Aïdjré» signifie «l'univers porte l'œuf que la terre désire». Béhanzin est arrivé au trône, dans un contexte particulier. Depuis le début du XVIème siècle, le royaume du Dahomey vivait en partie de l'huile de palme, mais aussi du trafic des esclaves. Or, en 1888, le Brésil, un ancien allié du Dahomey, a aboli l'esclavage. Les ancêtres de Béhanzin négociaient avec les Européens, d'égal à égal, sur la base des traités de commerce. En effet, le roi du Dahomey a témoigné, par ses actes, d'un grand esprit d'indépendance : «Le dédain avec lequel le Dahomey a, de tout temps, considéré les puissances européennes est un trait saillant de la fierté indigène» écrit Alain FOA. Cependant, à partir de 1885, les Européens se sont partagés l'Afrique ; le colonialisme est triomphant. Les Français, en particulier, avec peu de moyens militaires au départ, ont mis en place une stratégie, qu'ils appliqueront après l'indépendance, à travers la Françafrique, entreprendre, progressivement, la conquête du Dahomey, par les royaumes côtiers. Le roi de Porto-Novo, Toffa, est jugé accommodant et servile et a signé un traité de protectorat avec les Français. Glélé, le père de Béhanzin, alors malade, avait tenté de résister contre cette prédation. Béhanzin, peu malléable, nourri de cet héritage de résistance au colonialisme, a poursuivi et amplifié, vainement, l'action de son père. Le roi requin, avait déclaré la guerre aux Français sous forme d'allégorie «Le requin audacieux a troublé la barre». Béhanzin s'est toujours déclaré ami de la France et voulait le commerce avec ce pays, mais la donne avait changé, la France ne reconnaissant que ses serviteurs dociles, pour conforter son projet de conquête coloniale. «Un certain nombre de petits chefs de peuplades voisines des côtes, entre autres le roi Toffa, s'étaient mis sous le protectorat français. Or, le roi du Dahomey, habitué à être considéré comme le plus puissant souverain des parages, fut sans doute fort mécontent de nous voir établir aussi près de son territoire» écrit François DESPLANTES. Par conséquent, «la mise en dépendance», pour longtemps, de l'Afrique, avait bien commencé, pour reprendre une expression du professeur Catherine COQUERY-VIDROVITCH.

La littérature des administrateurs coloniaux ou des voyageurs européens, est pleine de préjugés, de caricatures et d'instrumentalisations à l'égard du royaume de Béhanzin, tant attaché à la souveraineté et à l'intégrité territoriale du Dahomey. La résistance et l'esprit d'indépendance de Béhanzin ont été occultés ou minimisés. En effet, tout en reconnaissant la valeur et l'adresse dans les combats des guerriers dahoméens, tant redoutés, le colonisateur considérait que la nation de Béhanzin, avec ses sacrifices humaines, l'esclavage et le fétichisme, serait uniquement un pays barbare : «Sous cet odieux despote, comme sous les rois Glélé et Guézo, le pays était le théâtre des faits de cruauté les plus révoltants, le sang coulait à flot certains jours» écrit la Semaine des familles du 21 mars 1896. Cette renommée insultante et outrageuse à l'égard de Béhanzin est largement imméritée. Béhanzin est capable de générosité et bienveillance, notamment à l'égard de ses hôtes et prisonniers Européens. Il a tout simplement défendu courageusement la souveraineté de son pays, face à l'expansion coloniale. Pour ce fait, il a été déporté et mort en exil. «Ce n'est pas par raison d'humanité qu'on lui (Béhanzin) a fait la guerre. On a bien invoqué, pour faire accepter par l'opinion l'entreprise guerrière qui devait aboutir à la spoliation qu'on sait, le prétexte larmoyant de l'œuvre de civilisation contre des potentats qui se baignaient dans le sang. La vérité, il nous gênait dans notre désir d'expansion coloniale ; il nous barrait la route» écrit Daniel MASSE. En effet, Béhanzin, par sa bravoure et sa résistance, est comparé à Vercingétorix : «L'un et l'autre se sont opposés à l'envahisseur et à domination de leur pays. Tous les deux méritent également l'admiration de l'Histoire. Les Français considèrent Vercingétorix comme un héros national. Au nom de quoi commettrions-nous la grossièreté de considérer Béhanzin et Samory comme des Nègres sauvages et poltrons incapables de résister à César ?» écrit Albert TEVOEDJRE. Par conséquent, contrairement à cette propagande coloniale, le Dahomey est un peuple fier, guerrier et discipliné. Dans ce combat entre oppresseurs et opprimés, entre tondeurs et tondus, vainqueurs et vaincus, le pays de Béhanzin a traversé les siècles, et témoigne d'une histoire glorieuse : «Le royaume du Dahomey mériterait l'honneur de tenir la première place parmi les peuplades. Par son organisation, vraiment extraordinaire pour un pays noir, il les avait déjà surpassés de beaucoup. Ses rois, dont l'autorité justement redoutée ne s'employait pas uniquement à un arbitraire brutal et irraisonné, avait su lui donner une administration fortement hiérarchisée, une armée permanente et des embryons de services douanier et de justice*» écrit Auguste LE HERISSE. Un prisonnier de Béhanzin pendant trois mois, E. CHAUDOIN, a reconnu ses qualités de diplomates : «Le Dahoméen, sous son masque noir, cache un profond politique. Diplomate consommé, avant d'attaquer une question, il l'étudie à fond, en voit le pour et le contre, la tourne de tous les côtés pour en connaître les points faibles et pouvoir répondre et parer à toutes les questions qui peuvent lui être posées».

Akaba (règne 1679-1708) fondateur du Royaume du Danxomé, un ancêtre du Roi Béhanzin, un roi jugé apathique et indolent, est le premier roi à avoir introduit le fusil dans son pays et entrer en contact avec les Européens. Son successeur, Agaja (règne du 1708-1728) étendit le Dahomey jusqu'à la côte, y compris Ouidah. Appelé d'abord par les Français «Côte des esclaves», puis Dahomey, lors de la fondation de cette colonie le 22 juin 1894, à la suite d'une campagne militaire des Français, ce pays, devenu République populaire du Bénin en 1975, pour réconciliation entre Fons et Yorubas, est coincé entre le Nigéria et le Togo ; sa partie septentrionale borde le Niger à l'Est et le Burkina Faso à l'Ouest. Les Fons, peuple guerrier et discipliné, ont conquis, progressivement, leurs voisins. Le Danxomé, ou Dahomey, avec comme capitale Abomey et ne formant qu'un cinquième du territoire, va progressivement vassaliser Allada ou Adanwssa dont Sawi est la capitale, ainsi Xweda ou Ouida. En effet, l'ancien royaume du Dahomey, Abomey avait une devise : «faire un Danhomé toujours plus grand» ; ce sont des guerriers aussi braves que fourbes, particulièrement attachés à leur pays. Le royaume du Dahomey «fondé par la ruse et la trahison, agrandi par une suite de guerres, enrichi par le pillage, maintenu par la violence, a été pendant deux siècles la terreur de ses voisins, comme le roi lui-même a été la terreur de ses voisins» écrit E. LEVASSEUR, dans la préface de l'ouvrage d'Alain FOA. L'histoire a retenu le nom du premier roi, Dako (règne vers 1625-1640). Il surprit son ennemi, Aïzonou-Dénou, en train de préparer l'indigo. Il le tua, mit son corps dans une jarre à indigo qu'il fit rouler ensuite sur le sol. Le deuxième roi est Ouegbaja, de 1650 à 1680. Au début du XVIIème siècle le peuple Fon avait un roi, dénommé Dan (serpent en langue Fon, règne de 1640-1650), détenteur du «Gongon» ou cloche sacrée, respecté par ses sujets. A la guerre, bien que peu nombreux, ce roi électrisait ses sujets, triomphait même quand il avait l'infériorité du numérique, et revenait de la guerre avec de nombreux prisonniers et un riche butin. En effet, Ago ou encore Tacoudonou, à qui Dan avait accordé l'asile, a obtenu du roi, toutes les faveurs qu'il demandait, sauf la cloche sacrée : «Vous me demandez un objet sacré que personne ne peut obtenir que mon successeur ; demain vous voudrez régner à ma place, et bientôt vous me demanderez mon ventre pour bâtir dessus votre maison !» dit Dan à Ago. Le roi Dan subira une première défaite devant Tacoudonou, un ancêtre de Béhanzin, à qui il avait accordé asile qui l'a trahi, emprisonné et fait décapiter : «Vous m'avez donné un territoire, j'en ferai un immense royaume ; vous m'avez refusé votre cloche en fer, je l'ai prise, elle m'appartient de droit, je vous demande votre ventre, pour y bâtir, non ma maison, mais les murs de ma capitale. Nous l'appellerons Dahomê», dit-il. En violation des règles de l'hospitalité, «il mit à mort Dan, suivant le serment qu'il avait fait de l'éventrer, et plaça son corps sur le toit du palais qu'il fit construire à Abomey, en mémoire de sa victoire» écrit Charles WALKENAER. Littéralement, «Dahomey» signifie «Dan» (roi des Fons), et «Homê» ventre de Dan, ou le ventre du serpent. L'usage modifiera la prononciation, des noms primitifs surgirent Dahomey et Abomey.

Béhanzin devient donc monarque après la mort de son père survenue le 28 décembre 1890. «Il fait nuit sur le royaume !» telle est la formule annonçant la mort d'un Roi. Le demi-frère du prince Kondo, Ahanhanzo, héritier direct, est mort dans des circonstances non élucidées, sans nul doute empoisonné par Béhanzin, seul fils de sa mère, mais il n'était pas l'aîné de son père, un polygame. Son père, Glélé, avait régné de 1858 à 1889, et excellait dans les allégories ; il se comparait «au lionceau qui sème partout la terreur aussitôt que ses dents ont poussé». Glélé vendait à prix d'or, comme esclaves les princes vaincus ainsi que tous ses prisonniers, notamment aux maisons françaises Victor Régis et Cyprien Fabre de Marseille, qui faisaient fonction de consuls. Glélé a fait nommer, en 1880, un Portugais, un «*Yévoga*n», Juliao Felix DA SOUZA (1832-1887), comme Premier Chacha, en qualité de conseiller.

Le règne de Béhanzin démarre, dans la tradition du Dahomey, avec des sacrifices humains ; il faut honorer les ancêtres, à date fixe, chaque année ; ces fêtes ont été baptisées «coutumes» et les Dahoméens les appellent «funérailles du Roi». Dans une des grandes salles du palais étaient agenouillés, prisonniers de guerre ou condamnés à mort, les mains liées derrière le dos, cinquante hommes et cinquante femmes, ayant auprès d'eux un soldat le sabre nu. «Sur le geste du souverain tout puissant, les cent têtes roulèrent sur le pavé» écrit Alfred BARBOU. Les cérémonies pour célébrer l'avènement du nouveau roi et honorer la mémoire du monarque défunt, durent trois semaines : «Le roi, entouré d'un nombreux cortège, se rendit près de la tombe de son père, sur laquelle fut aussitôt amené un messager bâillonné, garrotté, que l'on décapita, afin qu'il allât, sans retard, annoncer au monarque défunt le commencement des réjouissances» écrit Alfred BARBOU qui considère que cette année 1890 est une des «plus belle et une des plus célèbre». Si ces coutumes, qui nous glacent le sang de nos jours, apparaissent comme des fêtes religieuses en l'honneur des morts et de la dynastie régnante, leur signification déborde largement du cadre guerrier ou religieux proprement dit ; elles expriment la civilisation dahoméenne dans sa totalité. Les jugements des administrateurs coloniaux s'avèrent parfois totalement erronés : «L'étude des coutumes et des mœurs du pays n'était pas la spécialité de ces colonisateurs qui se contentaient de donner un avis, sans prétendre faire œuvre d'ethnologue» écrit Théodore MONOD. La richesse et la munificence qui présidaient aux fêtes faisaient l'admiration des visiteurs de la cour de Béhanzin. Ces fêtes, à la fois d'intronisation et de funérailles, revêtent une dimension nationaliste. On enseigne à tous, l'histoire du Dahomey, les noms des fondateurs de la dynastie, leurs grandes conquêtes, leur bonté et générosité à l'égard du peuple, ainsi que les punitions à l'égard des méchants. Ainsi, cette leçon sur l'identité nationale entretient l'orgueil, cimente la bravoure et la résistance face aux envahisseurs.

Béhanzin, roi-dieu adulé et vénéré, dégageait une aura qui faisait trembler Blancs et Noirs. Le roi du Dahomey, un être sacré, porte plusieurs titres, notamment : «Dada», père de toute la Nation, le «Dokounnon», détenteur et dispensateur de biens, le «Sèmèdo», maître du monde, «l'Aïnon», maître de la terre, le «Jèhossou», maître des perles. Le Roi a «une autorité absolue, despotique même, ayant droit de vie et de mort sur tous les sujets. Ce qui pousse un attachement de ses sujets jusqu'à la vénération» écrit Eduard DUNGLAS. «La vie et la fortune de tous les habitants appartiennent, sans restriction, au Roi, qui est une espèce de Dieu, pour ses sujets» écrit Adolphe BADIN. Le nationalisme et la puissance de Béhanzin découlent de la conception dahoméenne du pouvoir monarchique. Le roi, dans la plénitude de sa souveraineté, n'écoute que sa volonté. Il tient entre ses mains capricieuses et la tranquillité de tous les sujets. «Le roi n'est plus un homme : c'est un dieu tout-puissant, et qui est plus triste encore, un dieu malfaisant, sans remords, ni conscience. Il règne par la crainte, et, malgré tout, par le respect. C'est un être sacré, enveloppé d'une atmosphère surnaturelle et de fétichisme*», écrit Alain FOA qui a résidé au Dahomey de juin 1886 à mai 1890. Béhanzin est un roi qui a su garder, en toutes circonstances, son rang et sa dignité : «Les Européens mêmes, qu'il devrait accueillir avec affabilité, en raison de l'argent et des cadeaux, sont reçus avec froideur et indifférence ; il a l'air de craindre que toute gracieuseté de sa part soit reçue comme une reconnaissance tacite de son infériorité. Il ordonne à ses représentants de faire sentir son pouvoir aux Européens, dans toutes les occasions, et son royaume est devenu une souricière, où tout le monde est libre d'entrer, mais dont personne ne sort sans sa permission» écrit Alain FOA. Nous avons de nombreuses photos authentiques de Béhanzin, dans lesquels on le voit, souvent, abrité par un immense parasol, avec sa longue pipe en argent, son costume traditionnel, ses sandales. Fumeur, il crache dans un vase d'argent porté par une de ses femmes. Béhanzin est décrit comme «un beau nègre, quoi que de taille moyenne. La physionomie paraît intelligente, le regard est droit et luisant, comme un éclair d'acier. Il est habillé simplement à la façon des guerriers de son pays. Il fume la pipe qu'il garde à la bouche en parlant» écrit le père DORGERE qui a été son prisonnier. Si la production littéraire et historique des ouvrages français est empreinte de partis-pris, de préjugés et de censures, les nombreuses lettres de Béhanzin, avec un style inimitable, ont été reproduites par ces témoins directs. Une partie de ses correspondances a été regroupée par la Fondation Zinsou, en 2017. On y entend, de façon intelligible et sans intercesseur, la voix de ce héros et grand nationaliste dahoméen.

La cour de Béhanzin est «aussi aristocratiquement, aussi hiérarchiquement, aussi féodalement ordonnée que celle d'un Louis XIV ou d'un François 1er» écrit Louis NOIR. «Le Dahomey constituait un royaume parfaitement organisé, possédant tout ce qui fait le prestige d'une monarchie» écrit le révérend père DORGERE (séjour au Dahomey en 1881 à 1896). Le roi a, à sa disposition, le «Mingan», ministre de la justice et grand prêtre du fétichisme, le «Méhou», ministre du commerce et des douanes, le «Cambodé», trésorier, le «Gaôu», général en chef, le chef des eunuques, ainsi que les «Cabécères» ou «A*gorigan*s», des conseillers ou chefs supérieurs, résidant dans chaque ville à la Gore (Préfecture, mairie et palais de justice), en charge de l'administration subalterne. Les interprètes, les domestiques et les espions jouent un rôle non-négligeable : «Lorsque les ministres du Roi communiquent avec lui (le dignitaire), ils se traînent jusqu'au trône et, quand ils y sont arrivés, ils se jettent à plat ventre, embrassent la terre, couvrent leur tête de poussière et, après avoir fait craquer leurs doigts à trois reprises, attendent dans la plus humble posture que le Roi daigne leur parler» écrit Jean BAYOL qui a connu Béhanzin. Il authentifiait ses messagers en leur procurant un «Makpo», une récade, un spectre royal en forme de crosse ou de hache pour garantir l'authenticité du message du souverain.

L'esprit de résistance et le nationalisme de Béhanzin sont peut-être inspirés de la mythologie de son pays. «Le Roi, quoi que maître absolu de ses sujets, est lui-même esclave des coutumes et des ministres du fétichisme : un empoisonnement serait à craindre s'il s'écartait de cette ligne de conduite» écrit Eduard DUNGLAS. En effet, le Dahomey des temps anciens, c'est le règne des forces de l'esprit, de l'animisme, ou la force du destin. Dans la cosmogonie dahoméenne, on raconte qu'à la création du monde, Blancs et Noirs eurent à choisir entre le pays de l'or et «Celui où on lit les livres». Les Noirs choisirent le pays de l'or croyant que c'était le meilleur. Depuis lors, les Africains doivent lutter en permanence contre la domination des Blancs. Quand Armand DUBARRY écrit que «La religion du nègre est comme sa vie, décousue et insensée», c'est une méconnaissance profonde de la cosmogonie chez Béhanzin. En effet, les Dahoméens croient au Bien ou le «Maou», mais aussi au Mal (maladie, haine, vengeance, démon, jalousie), le «Vaudou». Obala ou Onsé, fils du Ciel, est le dieu créateur et le justicier ; il rend des oracles et prédit l'avenir. «*Chang*o», ou «Hévioso» chez les Fons, le tonnerre, est la divinité la plus redoutée. Pour punir les méchants, Chango charge son fils, Ara, la foudre, d'aller châtier ceux qui le méritent. «Ifa», dieu du mariage et de l'accouchement, est consulté pour tous les événements de la vie. Chez Béhanzin, l'Afrique est maternelle ; «Odoudoua» la terre, la mère des êtres, déesse de la maternité. Les Dahoméens, comme les anciens grecs, ont de nombreuses autres divinités (Olokun dieu de la mer, Olossa, la lagune, Oké, les montagnes, Oko, agriculture, Odjo, la pluie, Tchamana, la petite vérole, Kpaté, naufrage, Ogoun, médecine et guerre, Ogoungoun, dieu des morts, Eléda, intelligence, Djaoun, nourriture, Ipousi, la marche, etc.). Le «Dangbé» ou Dieu serpent, est le plus aimé, après la divinité du Créateur. La famille royale qui a conservé son statut coutumier et religieux, est garante de la religion du Vaudou, un culte du paganisme, qui s'est transporté aux Antilles et à Haïti. Des prêtres du fétichisme, mot venant du portugais, «fetiço» ou charme, ont un rôle primordial dans le royaume de Béhanzin. Lorsque la guerre est déclarée, il appartient au grand féticheur d'apaiser les esprits pour une issue heureuse et écarter les maléfices. Il pratique aussi la médecine traditionnelle ou fabriquer du poison. «Ces histoires de fétiches et de féticheuses, c'est bel et bien bon ; mais que, pour expliquer la résistance acharnée des troupes de Béhanzin» écrit BADIN.

d'esclaves, métier lucratif quand il se trouvait dans les comptoirs de la côte des traitants européens toujours prêts à acheter cette marchandise*» écrit Alain FOA. L'huile de palme du Dahomey se vend à Marseille et au Havre pour la fabrication des bougies et du savon. L'histoire du pays de Béhanzin est liée aux convoitises des Marranes portugais, installés à Cotonou et à Ouidah, sur l'huile de palme et les esclaves, «Un père vendra son fils pour une bouteille de rhum, un fils livrera son père ou sa mère à un marchand d'esclaves pour le même prix» écrit Armand DUBARRY dans «Voyage au Dahomey». Anglais et Français se concurrencent à Porto-Novo. Béhanzin est éduqué par un père national et jaloux de la souveraineté du Dahomey : «Les Blancs ont leur roi et moi je suis le roi des Africains. Il est bien que V.M. s'oppose à ce que les Blancs viennent s'emparer des terres des Africains. Si les Européens continuent de la sorte, les Africains sauront bientôt fabriquer de l'eau-de-vie, des tissus, du genièvre, de la verroterie et autres articles qu'ils transporteront là où les Européens vendent leurs articles. Il vaut mieux que chaque nation gouverne ses terres, les Blancs dans les leurs avec leur roi et moi, Roi du Dahomey, avec les miennes. Les Blancs ont pris les terres des Nègres, mais ceux-ci ne peuvent pas faire de même» écrit Glélé à Dom Louis, roi du Portugal, le 16 juillet 1887. Le père de Béhanzin ne reconnaît que la démarche de coopération, à travers l'accord commercial de 1841. Béhanzin, associé au pouvoir, avant de devenir roi, hérite de cette fibre nationaliste de son père, et défendra, tout au long de son règne, la souveraineté de son pays : «Cotonou appartient à mes pères. Je ne puis le céder à qui que ce soit, car ce serait un grand malheur pour moi : d'autant plus que, cédant ce territoire, le tonnerre tuerait tous ceux qui l'habiteraient, ce n'est pas possible» dit-il.

Dans la période de 1851 à 1884, un traité de commerce du 1er juillet 1851 est conclu entre la France et le roi d'Abomey, Ghézo (règne de 1818 à 1858) ; la France paye des impôts et taxes au Roi du Dahomey. Un traité du 19 mai 1868 avec le Roi du Dahomey cède à la France le territoire de Cotonou. Ce traité de 1868 est confirmé par un autre en date du 19 avril 1878, avec liberté pour la France de s'installer dans les ports. Cependant, les Français n'ayant encore suffisamment de forces armées, continuent de verser des taxes au Roi du Dahomey et la justice est rendue en son nom. La seule exception notable c'est que les sujets français sont dispensés d'assister aux cérémonies de sacrifices humains. Dans les racines de ce dissentiment avec le colonisateur, Béhanzin a pour ennemi le roi Toffa Houenou Baba Dassy de Porto-Novo, (1850-1908). Les Français ont surnommé Toffa, «Le Doux». Il est malléable et accommodant. Pour Alexandre d'ALBECA, «ce Noir n'avait pas la même morgue belliqueuse de son parent Glélé». Le roi Sodji conclut un traité de protectorat du 23 février 1863 avec la France pour échapper aux pays des Anglais qui ont bombardé son pays. Fils du Sodji (1848-1864), Toffa doit s'exiler lorsque Mikpon s'empare du pouvoir en 1864. En dépit, des recommandations des Anglais, Toffa transige avec Da Glélé Kini-Kini, le père de Béhanzin. Quand le roi, Toffa, très favorable aux Français, arriva au pouvoir en 1875, confirma l'accord de 1863 plaçant Cotonou sous le protectorat français, Glélé considérant que ce territoire vassal relevant de sa souveraineté, contestera alors les nouveaux droits de douane imposés par le colonisateur : «Toffa, roi de Porto-Novo, pour se mettre à l'abri des incursions des Dahoméens, ses turbulents voisins, avait sollicité notre protectorat. Ceux-ci n'avaient pas vu d'un bon œil cette alliance d'un roi nègre avec les blancs exécrés, cette main mise sur le royaume de Porto-Novo» écrit le père DORGERE. Lorsque Victor BAYOL, représentant de la France, se rend à Abomey, Glélé refuse de lui accorder une audience privée. Il est seulement reçu par le prince Kondo, le futur Béhanzin. Par ailleurs, Toffa se méfiant des Anglais et du roi d'Abomey qui le maintient dans la suzeraineté, signe le 8 février 1882, un traité avec les Français, les dynasties régnantes de Dangbo et Kétenou, sont déportées à Gorée, au Sénégal. Toffa déclare céder dans Porto-Novo, le 13 mai 1883 «le titre et le pouvoir d'agent intérimaire de la République française et du chef de protectorat de mon royaume, sont transmis, à ce jour, à M. Henri GUILMIN».

Pour le royaume du Dahomey Porto-Novo relève de sa juridiction : «Les habitants, de famille Fon, avaient origine commune. Les souverains étaient cousins, et un lien de vassalité subordonnait Porto-Novo au Roi d'Abomey» écrit Alexandre d'ALBECA. En mars 1887, quand Toffa exerce des tracasseries et vexations sur les Dahoméens, Glélé riposte par l'envoi de son armée et Toffa s'enfuit au Nigeria. Béhanzin rejette, fermement, le protectorat français qui risque d'aboutir à la perte de souveraineté de son pays, et donc à la confiscation de ses terres, ainsi que la suppression d'une partie importante de ses revenus découlant des taxes en application du traité du 1er juillet 1851. C'est donc cette intrusion des Français qui provoquera, en avril 1889, un raid du royaume de Dahomey, contre Porto-Novo, dont Toffa est devenu le jouet du colon. En effet, les troupes dahoméennes se trouvent dans les environs de Porto-Novo, Toffa s'enfuit de son palais pour se réfugier en territoire britannique. Après un calme relatif, Toffa regagne Porto-Novo. Entre-temps, à la mort du roi Glélé, il est remplacé par son fils, Béhanzin. Les Français sont contraints de renégocier cet accord, avec le prince Kondo en 1889, le futur Béhanzin. Le 25 mars 1889, le roi du Dahomey attaque : «un feu terrible de l'ennemi assaillit la compagnie Lemoine et abattit quatorze hommes, dont trois mortellement atteints. Le commandant ne dut son salut qu'au dévouement de son ordonnance» écrit AUBLET dans «Guerre au Dahomey».

Jean BAYOL profitant du passage du commandant TERRILLON, avec 400 tirailleurs sénégalais, convoque le 21 février 1890, des chefs indigènes Dahoméens, qui furent arrêtés et expédiés, immédiatement auprès de Toffa qui sera d'une grande brutalité à l'égard de ceux-ci. L'orgueil de Béhanzin en fut blessé ; il voua une haine féroce à Jean BAYOL. Notre amitié avec la France a toujours été grande (…) C'est M. Jean Bayol qui a fait la guerre de Cotonou, poussé par le roi Toffa. (…) Toffa est le roi de Porto-Novo à cause de nous. Son peuple ne voulait pas l'accepter, et sur notre message qu'il est monté sur le trône» écrit Béhanzin, le 30 avril 1890. Ce fut la guerre. L'Amazone, Nausica, la favorite de Béhanzin, est tuée pendant ces combats. Béhanzin prend en otages huit Français, et parfaitement au courant des règles internationales de la diplomatie, il refuse de s'en prendre aux autres nationalités. Béhanzin qui se déclare encore ami de la France n'en veut qu'à Toffa et Jean BAYOL. Il écrit directement au président de la République, pour tenter de négocier : « Jean Bayol est venu de la capitale du Dahomey pour faire un contrat touchant la question de Cotonou, et quand, pour la première fois, nous avons causé ensemble, le même Jean Bayol m'a raconté que les deux contrats qui se trouvaient au pouvoir de la France, avaient été reconnus comme entachés de fourberies. (…) J'ai capturé huit Européens et j'attendrais que Jean Bayol ait élargi mes autorités pour mettre également en liberté les prisonniers. J'attendrai que Votre Excellence justifie cette façon d'agir de Jean Bayol vis-à-vis de moi. Je regrette, qu'étant antique ami de la France, on ne m'ait pas transmis de sentiments de condoléance en ce qui regarde la perte de mon père » écrit-il, le 17 avril 1890 à Sadi CARNOT.

Béhanzin attaque à nouveau Toffa qui sera sauvé par les Français. Compte tenu des rapports de forces encore favorables au Dahomey, la France envoie, le 11 mai 1890, le père DORGERE négocier une paix précaire, une paix armée. Béhanzin estime que les Français sont venus troubler la paix de son royaume «* Dieu, dans le principe, a créé le Noir et le Blanc, chacun pour habiter la terre qui lui a été désignée. Le Blanc s'occupe de commerce et le Noir doit faire commerce avec le Blanc, que les Noirs ne font aucun mal aux Blancs, et de même que les Blancs ne doivent faire aucun mal aux Noirs » écrit Béhanzin, le 18 août 1890, à l'Amiral de CURVILLE. A partir de janvier 1890 de nombreux navires français investirent la côte de Cotonou. De plus, des espions de Béhanzin avaient surpris des conversations des Blancs où il était clairement question d'arracher au Dahomey le contrôle de Cotonou. Béhanzin, avec le soutien des Allemands, attaque en février 1890, les postes français de Cotonou. Comble de la provocation, Jean BAYOL (1849-1905) ordonna l'enlèvement de deux chefs territoriaux de Cotonou et de Ouidah. Excédé par cet énième affront, Béhanzin, jusque-là patient, réunit son conseil et décida de partir en guerre malgré la désapprobation de l'oracle. Les Français avaient commencé à raser Cotonou et à en brûler les cases. Béhanzin et ses troupes composées de plusieurs milliers de guerriers et d'Amazones décidèrent enfin de riposter. Ses troupes séquestrèrent un groupe de français à Ouidah avant de lancer une violente attaque contre les installations françaises le 4 mars 1890 à Cotonou. La bataille fut sanglante : on compte 600 morts et plus de 1000 blessés dans les deux camps. Terrifiés par la violence de la riposte, Jean BAYOL et le commandant Sébastien TERRILLON (1846-1917) réclamèrent des renforts pour pallier à toutes attaques futures. Forts de leurs nouveaux renforts, les français revinrent à la charge et brûlèrent plusieurs villages des rives de l'Ouémé. Le 4 avril 1890 la France décrète un blocus à l'encontre du Dahomey.

S'avançant dangereusement vers Dahomey, les Français rencontrèrent une résistance si farouche que Oulard, le capitaine du navire bombardier commandé par TERRILON, en perdit la vie. Ce nouvel échec provoqua la chute du sulfureux Jean BAYOL et de Sébastien TERRILLON. Mais leurs successeurs toujours aussi passionnés par la guerre lancèrent de nouvelles attaques. Béhanzin riposta cette fois-ci en attaquant le 25 Avril 1890 un territoire Porto-Novien, Atchoukpa. La défaite infligée aux troupes françaises bien que aidées des guerriers de Toffa fut cinglante. La bataille terminée, Béhanzin se servit des otages français enlevés à Ouidah et emprisonnés à Allada, pour obtenir une trêve : «*Tant que les otages ne nous sont pas rendus, nos troupes dévasteront les palmiers du territoir*e» écrit, le 2 mai 1890 Béhanzin à Victor BALLOT (1853-1939), administrateur de Porto-Novo. Aussi se lia-t-il d'amitié avec le père Alexandre DORGERE, l'un des otages qui, opposé aux velléités colonisatrices de la France, décida de négocier la paix entre Dahomey et le gouvernement français.

L'Armée dahoméenne est repoussée, mais les Français sont obligés de signer un accord du 3 octobre 1890 avec Béhanzin au terme duquel, le Dahomey s'engage à respecter le protectorat français du royaume de Porto-Novo. En contrepartie, le blocus est levé et la France s'engage, à titre compensatoire, pour l'occupation définitive de Cotonou, de verser, annuellement, 20 000 F (or ou argent) au Roi du Dahomey. Mais cet accord ne sera pas ratifié par le parlement français à la suite d'une polémique en métropole. «*Le Dahomey a une fois de plus occupé la chambre. Il s'agissait de ratifier le traité conclu avec Béhanzin, monarque de ce pays. D'après ce traité, nous avons encore à lui verser annuellement une somme de 20 000 F. Quelques députés trouvaient ce cadeau inutile et ils avaient raison. Qu'avons-nous à gagner avec le Dahomey ? Rien, mais rien, absolument. Nous favorisons simplement les intérêts de deux ou trois grosses maisons de Marseille. (..) Nous avons des milliers d'ouvriers mineurs qui luttent pour obtenir un salaire leur permettant de vivre, et c'est à ce roitelet africain, sans importance, qu'on pense à envoyer de l'argent, au lieu de secourir les nôtres !» écrit L. SOURDILLON, dans le journal, «Le Cri du peuple». Le Parlement ayant refusé de ratifier le traité (108 pour, 389 contre), Sadi CARNOT ne payera pas la somme exigée par Béhanzin, considérée comme «un tribut payé à la France au roi du Dahomey et une marque de vasselage». C'est donc une grande crise entre la France et le Dahomey.

A la suite du départ de l'amiral CAVELIER de CURVILLE du Dahomey, une mission AUDEOUD est dépêchée auprès de Béhanzin. Le roi du Dahomey demande si les 20 000 F lui seraient payés et quand ? Béhanzin réclame la restitution du trésor en cauris de Cotonou. Béhanzin se prépare à la guerre en achetant des armes aux Allemands et aux Anglais, et en se constituant un trésor de guerre avec la vente d'esclaves, à la suite de l'expédition d'Abeokuta de juin 1891. Les Français décident, le 27 septembre 1891, de construire aussi un port à Cotonou, une base logistique pour leurs expéditions militaires contre Béhanzin. Le Secrétaire d'Etat aux colonies avait déjà fait voter, les 12 et 13 avril 1891, des crédits de 3 millions, en prévision de cette guerre : «Une opération sur Abomey pouvait seule mener au but, c'est-à-dire la puissance Béhanzin et assurer la sécurité de nos possessions du Bénin» mentionne un rapport, du 15 avril 1891. Dès le 3 mai 1891, une compagnie de 144 tirailleurs sénégalais avait déjà débarqué à Cotonou. Le 30 avril 1891, le colonel DODDS est pressenti en qualité de commandant supérieur au Bénin, avec des pouvoirs civils et militaires. «Ces gens-là se battent bien et ne craignent pas la mort. Il faudra du monde, beaucoup de monde, un corps expéditionnaire nombreux pour réduire le Dahomey» dit le colonel TERRILLON.

Astucieux, vindicatif, très attaché à la souveraineté de son pays, d'un fort caractère et résolu, Béhanzin, le requin résistera, vaillamment, au colonisateur français. Béhanzin adresse aux Français des provocations et injures : «Est-ce que j'ai été quelque fois faire la guerre contre vous ? Moi, je reste dans mon pays. (..) Je suis le roi des Noirs et les Blancs n'ont rien à voir à ce que je fais. Les villages dont vous parlez sont bien à moi, ils m'appartiennent et voulaient être indépendants, alors que j'ai envoyé les détruire et vous venez toujours vous plaindre. Je désirerai savoir combien de villages français indépendants ont été brisés par moi ? roi du Dahomey» dit-il. En septembre 1891, Béhanzin reprend ses incursions dans les territoires dépendant de Porto-Novo ainsi que dans les pays des Watchis sous influence française. Le Résident français proteste, mollement, dans une lettre du 21 septembre 1891. En novembre et décembre 1891, Béhanzin attaque la région d'Athiémé et de Grand-Popo. C'est la grande panique parmi les commerçants français. Le Résident français lance, le 10 décembre 1891, une mise en garde au Roi d'Abomey : «Vos soldats viennent encore de piller Ouatchicomé, un pays des Ouatchis avec lequel le Dahomey n'a rien à faire. La France commence à se fatiguer de votre manière de faire et vous nous forcez à déchirer le traité, ce sera très mauvais pour vous». Dans sa réponse datée du 2 janvier 1892, Béhanzin écrit : «*Obligé de vous demander une explication sur ce qu'on parle là et qui vous a obligé de m'écrire une lettre semblable. Alors, je suis le roi de tous les Noirs, et si quelconque de cette nation m'offense et que je veuille le punir, serait-il nécessaire que je donne satisfaction aux Blancs ? On a parlé beaucoup que je veux piller Grand-Popo et le territoire de Béta. Grand-Popo est mon pays. Je ne suis pas de votre égalité pour me faire une semblable insulte. Je trouve mieux, votre Excellence, rester à Porto-Novo tranquille~~t~~ et faire commerce et de me laisser et ne me déranger plus».

En mars 1892, Victor BALLOT est nommé lieutenant-gouverneur du Dahomey et adresse une lettre de protestation, du 28 mars 1892, à Béhanzin à la suite de l'attaque de Porto-Novo : «Nous n'avons dû notre salut qu'à la bravoure de nos soldats et à la maladresse de nos guerriers» et enjoint de s'abstenir de toute nouvelle incursion, dans ce territoire, relevant du «drapeau français». Dans sa réponse du 31 mars 1892, Béhanzin estime que ce territoire est dahoméen : «Est-ce que j'ai été quelquefois en France faire la guerre contre vous ? Moi, je reste dans mon pays, et toutes les fois qu'une nation africaine me fait mal, je suis en droit de la punir. Cela ne vous regarde pas» dit-il. Béhanzin écrit à nouveau : «Je suis le roi des Noirs et les Blancs n'ont rien à voir à ce que je fais. Les villages dont vous parlez sont bien à moi» lettre du 19 avril 1892 au lieutenant-gouverneur, Victor BALLOT.

Victor BALLOT monte l'expédition dirigée par Alfred Amédée DODDS (6 février 1842 à Saint-Louis – 18 juillet 1922, à Paris), un métis franco-sénégalais par ses deux parents (père Emery et mère, une Signare, Marie-Charlotte BILLAUD), qui débarque à Cotonou avec sept compagnies d'infanterie de 15 000 personnes, 800 légionnaires et escadrons de Spahis Sénégalais ; ce qui va changer, considérablement, la donne. Alfred DODDS, arrivé le 28 mai 1892, écrit à Béhanzin en sa qualité de commandant supérieur, pour l'enjoindre de libérer les trois otages français détenus à Ouidah. DODDS conteste les limites territoriales du royaume de Dahomey, telles que le conçoit Béhanzin : «La première fois, je ne savais pas faire la guerre, maintenant je sais. Si vous commencez la guerre, j'ai des troupes prêtes pour cela. J'ai tant d'hommes qu'on dirait des Vers qui sortent des trous. Je suis le Roi des Noirs et les Blancs n'ont rien à voir à ce que je fais» écrit Béhanzin. Dans une lettre du 2 juin 1892, DODDS intime l'ordre à Béhanzin de libérer les otages et retirer ses troupes de Cotonou et divers endroits. Béhanzin accepte l'échange de prisonniers, mais réaffirme sa souveraineté sur le Dahomey : «Je vous ai déjà dit que ce pays est le mien. Je l'ai fortifié car j'ai appris que la France veut en secret, faire la guerre au Dahomey» dit-il dans une lettre du 10 juin 1892. Les colons posent un blocus complet, à compter du 18 juin 1892. Alfred DODDS hausse le ton : «Nous sommes en droit de ne plus attacher plus d'importance à vos prétendus droits de propriété sur le Bas-Ouémé» écrit-il. Le 16 juillet 1892, le Ministre des colonies accorde à DODDS les renforts en effectifs demandés. Le 9 août 1892, par mesure de diversion, DODDS attaque par la côte et l'ouest de Cotonou.

Les Français déclareront la guerre à Béhanzin, son armée est composée de 22 000 combattants, sans cavalerie, avec un élément permanent les femmes, appelées Amazones, et tous les sujets du Roi sont appelés au moment de la guerre : «Chose étrange, c'est dans le pays où la polygamie est telle que le Roi peut avoir trois ou quatre mille épouses, c'est la région où elle est la plus maltraitée que la femme occupe la plus haute et la plus redoutable mission. (…) Les Amazones passent, à bon droit, pour le meilleur élément de l'armée dahomane, et leur roi avoue volontiers, que sans elles il ne gagnerait toujours pas des victoires» écrit Armand DUBARRY. Les Amazones en référence à la mythologie, encore appelés «Les Minos», «nos mères» ou femmes du Roi, en langue Fon, sont des vestales renonçant aux plaisirs de la vie, comme les vierges antiques de Thémiscyre, et se vouant entièrement à la guerre. «Les Amazones du Dahomey n'a rien à voir avec celle de l'Antiquité ; on les recrute parmi les pires mégères du pays. Une femme est-elle débauchée, acariâtre, indocile, insupportable, son époux ou ses parents en font cadeau au Roi qui l'enrégimente aussitôt» prétend Alfred BARBOU. En fait, contrairement à cette propagande coloniale, l'origine de ces troupes de femmes remonte au XVIIIème siècle, sous le roi Agadja (1673-1740) confronté à un manque d'effectifs masculins. Pour Alain FOA, les origines de cette armée permanente, composée de femmes, remontent au règne de Ghézou, traumatisé par la révolte populaire qui avait détrôné le roi Adonozan, las de sa tyrannie et de ses cruautés. Une armée stable rendrait le Roi maître de la situation. Le roi Ghézo en fit une troupe d'élite. Elles sont recrutées soit parmi les enfants des chefs, soit parmi les jeunes captives confiées aux femmes du Roi. Ces Amazones, garde d'honneur accompagnant le Roi, ont un statut sacré et sont conditionnées pour résister à la douleur et ignorent la pitié. Les Amazones doivent rester vierges, et leur amant est aussitôt décapité, et généralement, «elles ont la voix abominablement rauque, une voix de rogomme. Elles fument la pipe comme de vieux troupiers» écrit Adolphe BADIN. Equipées d'un fusil et de longues machettes tranchantes, elles décapitent leurs ennemis et exhibent leur tête tranchée ; ce qui peut démobiliser l'adversaire. «Ce sont elles qui ont lutté avec le plus d'énergie contre nos troupes, et il a fallu souvent les tuer à coups de baïonnette pour leur faire abandonner le malheureux soldat sur lequel elles s'acharnaient, au cours d'une bataille » écrit Jean BAYOL. En effet, la bravoure et surtout la loyauté des Dahoméens est reconnu par les colons : «Tout sait que pendant la campagne de 1893, nos troupes ne rencontrèrent pas d'adversaires plus redoutables, plus vaillants, plus tenaces, que les bataillons féminins dont plusieurs accomplirent de vrais prodiges de bravoure» écrit Paul MIMANDE. Un prisonnier des Dahoméens raconte, une scène au cours de laquelle son régiment avait fait prisonnier une Amazone, qui se débattait et d'un coup de dent enleva la moitié du nez d'un soldat français : «Mais, tuez-là donc ! », nous cria le capitaine. Les fusils s'abaissèrent. Elle nous regarda fixement et tomba morte sous les balles, sans avoir seulement sourcillé. Elle avait sur la tête, celle-là, une sorte de bonnet rouge bordé de jaune, avec une tête d'animal fantastique dessiné grossièrement et surmontée d'une paire de cornes. Je regrette même de ne l'avoir pas ramassé, ce bonnet, attendu que j'avais promis à ma fiancée de lui en rapporter un» écrit Adolphe BADIN. Les Amazones ont leur chanson préférée «*Dahomey ! Dahomey ! Tes filles sont plus courageuses que les hommes. Les lionnes sont plus terribles que les lions, car elles ont leurs petits à défendre. Et, nous les Amazones, nous avons à défendre, le Roi, notre Roi et notre Dieu».

Désormais, les forces françaises allaient se heurter à l'armée de cet État africain fortement organisé et dont les troupes d'élite étaient composées de femmes-soldats, les amazones. «Vaincre ou mourir» telle est la devise des Amazones. «Le courage indomptable des guerriers et des Amazones, l'orgueil du roi Béhanzin, ont fait que l'armée dahoméenne a toujours tenu tête à nos troupes» écrit Jean BAYOL. Elles se battent «comme de véritables furies, en donnant à leur compagnon, l'exemple du courage et de la férocité. Leur rôle, à elles, est de viser l'ennemi aux jambes, puis de bondir sur les blessés, et de les achever en les égorgeant» écrit Adolphe BADIN. En effet, au mépris de la supériorité du feu français, elles se ruent à l'assaut. Certaines passent les lignes en rampant par terre sous les tirs pour chercher le corps-à-corps dans lequel elles excellent. «_Ces amazones sont des prodiges de valeur, elles viennent se faire tuer à 30 mètres de nos carrés_», écrira le capitaine JOUVELET dans ses mémoires. Avec lui, tous les hommes qui les ont combattues, impressionnés, saluent «_l'extrême vaillance_», «_l'indomptable audace_» de ces guerrières. «_Les guerriers du Dahomey ont une grande confiance en eux, n'ayant que très rarement subis d'échec contre les Noirs_» écrit Eduard DUNGLAS. «_Il y a quelques bons tireurs ; on les appelle les chasseurs d'éléphant et ce sont eux qu'on fait monter en haut des arbres pour mieux viser et canarder nos officiers. Leur arme véritable, l'arme nationale du Dahoméen, c'est le couteau-manchette. D'un coup, ils abattent la tête d'un homme avec la même facilité qu'un simple bambou. Ce sont de véritables soldats, très bien entraînés. Ils sont organisés méthodiquement et formés en bataillons_» écrit Alain BADIN. Le colonisateur, conscient de la grande valeur professionnelle des soldats dahoméens, les enrôlera dans son armée, une fois Béhanzin déchu de son titre. Ils ont «_résisté avec un héroïsme farouche aux troupes courageuses du général Dodds_» écrit Jean BAYOL.

Le courage des Amazones ne peut pourtant suffire à lutter contre les fusils et les pièces de canon de l'armée coloniale. Le 20 septembre 1892, Béhanzin attaque, mais ses troupes laissent sur le terrain 130 morts. En novembre 1892, les troupes d'Alfred DODDS se mettent en route sur Abomey et les Dahoméens, en dépit de l'inégalité des moyens, ont résisté : «_Les Dahoméens tiennent bon cependant. Les pertes sont : tués, le lieutenant Mercier, un légionnaire, deux tirailleurs ; blessés : trois artilleurs, deux soldats d'infanterie de marine, dix légionnaires, sept tirailleurs_», écrit Edouard AUBLET pour la journée du 2 novembre 1892. Cet auteur signale, pour la journée du 3 novembre 1892 «Trois heures durant, le carré résiste à chaque attaque générale sur toutes les faces qui sont enfilées et prises à revers, l'intérieur du camp est couvert de projectiles, le capitaine Rouget et le lieutenant Jacquot tombent blessés. L'acharnement mis par les soldats de Béhanzin dans leur attaque a été grand. (..) Béhanzin a encore assez de prestige et d'autorité pour lancer ses troupes à l'assaut des Blancs et de la défensive opiniâtre repasser à l'offensive la plus audacieuse». Les pertes du côté français : tués deux artilleurs et deux légionnaires ; blessés : un capitaine, un médecin, deux lieutenants, 25 Européens et 29 Tirailleurs.

Le colonel DODDS, nommé général de brigade le 9 novembre 1892, après avoir quelques jours hésité à entrer dans Abomey, engage des pourparlers avec Béhanzin. L'arrivée des Français, le 17 novembre 1892, dans Abomey, sonne le glas de ces combattantes de légende que sont les Amazones. Le général DODDS proclame, dans une note du 18 novembre 1892 que «les intérêts du peuple dahoméen sont désormais entre les mains de la France». Béhanzin est déchu de son titre de monarque : «En vertu des pouvoirs qui nous sont conférés, déclarons que le roi Béhanzin-Ahy-Djéré est déchu du trône de Dahomey et banni à jamais de ce pays ; le royaume de Dahomey est, et demeure placé sous le protectorat exclusif de la France» écrit, à Porto-Novo, le 3 décembre 1892, le général Alfred DODDS. Les conditions de la paix jugées inacceptables, Béhanzin met le feu à Abomey et se retire vers le Nord.

Les Français ont installé, le 15 janvier 1894, le prince Goutchili, intronisé sous le nom d'Agoli-Agbo (1850-1950), un frère de Béhanzin, en qualité de roi fantoche ; il restera au pouvoir jusqu'en 1900. Goutichilli sera, par la suite déporté au Gabon. Le royaume du Dahomey fut morcelé en cercles administratifs, placés sous l'autorité d'administrateurs coloniaux. La résignation obséquieuse du nouveau roi, est perçue par les Dahoméens, comme un désastre national : «Prends garde Dahomey, Allada a trébuché, mais n'est pas tombé grâce aux Français !*». Réfugié dans la forêt, Béhanzin a échappé un certain temps aux poursuites d'Alfred DODDS. La tradition orale veut que le roi du Dahomey ait été protégé, pendant ce temps, par des pouvoirs magiques, il aurait emporté avec lui, l'amulette du Dahomey, un bétyle aux grands pouvoirs. Le prince Goutchili dévoile aux Français la cache de Béhanzin qui se rend à Alfred DODDS. Béhanzin «fut livré par un de ses frères, ancien général en chef de son armée, qui n'hésita pas entre l'offre qu'on lui fit de le proclamer roi et la trahison» écrit Paul MIMANDE. Sur les indications de Goutchili, Béhanzin est capturé, dans la nuit du 25 au 26 janvier 1894, au village d'Acachapca. Le traité du 29 janvier 1894 marque la fin du conflit. La déclaration de réédition de Béhanzin, homme de culture et talentueux, est émouvante : «Compagnons d'infortune, derniers amis fidèles, vous savez dans quelles circonstances, lorsque les Français voulurent accaparer la terre de nos aïeux, nous avons décidé de lutter. Nous avions la certitude de conduire notre armée à la victoire. Quand mes guerriers se levèrent, par milliers, pour défendre le Danhomé et son Roi, j'ai connu avec fierté, la même bravoure que manifestaient ceux d'Agadjia, de Tegbessou, de Ghézo et de Glélé. Dans toutes les batailles, j'étais à leurs côtés. Malgré la justesse de notre cause et notre vaillance, nos troupes compactes furent décimées en un instant. Elles n'ont pu défaire les ennemis blancs dont nous louons aussi le courage et la discipline. Et déjà ma voie éplorée n'éveille plus d'écho. Où sont maintenant les ardentes Amazones qu'enflammait une sainte colère ? Où, leurs chefs indomptables : Goudémé, Yéwé, Kétungan ? Où, leurs robustes capitaines : Godogbé, Chachabloukou, Godjila ? Qui chantera leurs splendides sacrifices ? Qui dira leur générosité ? Puisqu'ils ont scellé dans leur sang le pacte suprême de fidélité, comment accepterais-je, sans eux, une quelconque abdication ? Comment oserais-je me présenter devant vous, braves guerriers, si je signais le papier du Général ? Non ! A mon destin, je ne tournerai plus le dos. Je ferai face et je marcherai. Car la plus belle victoire sur une armée ennemie ou des adversaires condamnés au silence du cachot. Est victorieux, l'Homme resté seul et qui continue de lutter dans son cœur. Je ne veux pas qu'aux portes du pays des morts, le douanier trouve des souillures à mes pieds. Quand je vous reverrai, je veux que mon ventre s'ouvre de joie. Maintenant advienne de moi ce qui plaira à Dieu ! Qui suis-je pour que ma disparition soit une lacune pour la terre ? Partez-vous aussi, derniers compagnons vivants. Rejoignez Abomey où les nouveaux maîtres promettent une douce alliance, la vie sauve et, paraît-il la liberté. Là-bas, on dit que déjà renaît la joie, il paraît que les Blancs vous seront aussi favorables que la pluie qui drape les flamboyants de velours rouge ou le soleil qui dore la barbe soyeuse des épis. Compagnons disparus, héros inconnus d'une tragique épopée, voici l'offrande du souvenir : un peu d'huile, un peu de farine et du sang de taureau. Voici le pacte renouvelé avant le grand départ. Adieu, soldat, adieu !*».

Béhanzin, toujours attaché à l'amitié avec la France, on lui a fait croire qu'il allait à Paris, négocier avec Sadi CARNOT. En fait, de 1894 à 1906, il a été déporté sur l'île de la Martinique où, avec sa famille et sa suite, il résidait au Fort Tartenson. Le budget pour les dépenses de son installation et l'entretien quotidien de sa cour a été progressivement diminué. Il sera transféré dans une autre villa. En 1897, il licencie son interprète et, en 1899, à la mort de son secrétaire, son fils, Ouanilo, devient son secrétaire particulier. Pendant cet exil de douze années, Béhanzin entreprend alors d'écrire aux autorités françaises afin de lui permettre de revenir au Dahomey. Béhanzin, qui se présente comme un «ami de la France» abusée par le roi Toffa, ne cesse d'écrire aux autorités françaises pour solliciter son retour au Dahomey : «Depuis mon départ du Dahomey, les climats étrangers ont fatigué ma santé. Mes sentiments ne doivent pas rester inconnus après une si longue absence. (…) Il me tarde à rendre à mon père les honneurs funéraires qui sont dus aux Rois de mon pays*» écrit-il le 17 octobre 1898 au président français. Il écrit aussi, le 10 octobre 1902, au député de la Guadeloupe Gaston REACHE-GERVILLE (1854-1908) considéré comme «influent» et «généreux» ; les huit années d'exil ont ruiné sa santé. Il écrit aussi au gouverneur du Dahomey en invoquant son entière ?? dans son humanité et son esprit de justice et relate que sa santé décline. «Je serai pour la France, pour la politique française un agent dévoué et un fidèle ami, propagateur de ses idées» écrit-il au gouverneur le 28 février 1903. Il adressera également une lettre le 10 août 1903 au gouverneur du Dahomey.

Agé, malade et après des interventions du député Gaston REACHE-GERVILLE, Béhanzin reçoit un appui du député Gaston GERVILLE-REACHE et Hildevert-Adolphe LARA, directeur d'un journal. Mais Victor BALLOT, consulté, émet à chaque fois, un avis défavorable pour le retour de Béhanzin au Dahomey. Cependant, la France décide de le renvoyer, en 1906, en Algérie, en passant par l'Exposition coloniale de Marseille. L'abbé DUCROCQ a écrit un ouvrage sur le séjour en Algérie intitulé «Béhanzin s'ennui». Suivant cet auteur : «Malgré ses pipes, malgré ses alcools, malgré ses femmes, malgré sa cour, malgré mille divertissements organisés en son honneur, le Roi se déprime, il dépérit. D'aucuns prétendent l'avoir entendu fredonner l'air fameux : Rendez-moi ma patrie ! ou laissez-moi mourir !» écrit-il. Béhanzin meurt d'une pneumonie le 10 décembre 1906, à l'âge de 64 ans, à Blida, en Algérie. Sa dépouille retrouve le sol ancestral : il est solennellement inhumé à Djimé (Abomey), le 9 mars 1928.

Lors de la réédition de Béhanzin, les objets saisis par l'armée arrivent sur le territoire français, mais aucun inventaire ne permet de connaître l'étendue du «butin de guerre». Certaines collections privées et publiques attestent toutefois une grande dispersion des objets, dans l'espace et dans le temps, après le retour des officiers français. Entre 1893 et 1895, le général DODDS et le capitaine FONSSAGRIVES donnent au musée d'Ethnographie du Trocadéro à Paris vingt-sept objets pris pendant la conquête coloniale du nouveau Dahomey (Statues en fer du dieu Gou, le siège royal saisi à Cana). Ces objets ont été transférés, par la suite au Musée Jacques CHIRAC, Quai Branly. A l'occasion du centenaire de la mort de Béhanzin, une exposition, en collaboration du Musée du Quai Branly et la Fondation Zinzou, s'est tenue à Paris, pendant trois mois, en 2006-2007, autour du thème : «Béhanzin, roi d'Abomey». 275 000 visiteurs sont venus honorer cet événement. La France refuse toujours de restituer ce trésor au Bénin : «Les biens que vous évoquez ont été intégrés de longue date, parfois depuis plus d'un siècle, au domaine public mobilier de l'Etat français» estime la France.

Le «Dowomé», le palais de Béhanzin a été rénové, en 2006, en coopération avec le Japon et l'UNESCO, et déclaré patrimoine mondiale de l'humanité, en hommage à sa résistance au colonialisme. «L'Adoxo» ou la tombe de Béhanzin est dans la troisième cour. Un problème majeur de notre temps, reste celui de la souveraineté des Etats africains, riches en matières premières, mais maintenus encore en esclavage.

Le message marquant de son action anticoloniale est représenté par sa statue, érigée sur la place Goho à Abomey, au Bénin ; cette statue représente Béhanzin, drapé dans son pagne royal, la main tendue vers l'avant intimant l'arrêt. Ce monument se trouvant à l'entrée de la ville d'Abomey, représente la résistance face au colon ainsi que le refus de laisser sa patrie aux mains de l'étranger. «Le Requin se rend. Mais, les fils du Requin ne trahiront pas», tel est son message testament. «GBÊHANZIN, le combattant de la liberté, est plus grand que son vainqueur, plus grand couché que debout. Il a acquis sa stature de héros en affrontant l'armée d'un Etat puissant, la France, comme Toussaint LOUVERTURE, le champion de l'indépendance de Haïti, originaire du Danxomé, qui tint tête aux troupes de NAPOLÉON 1er*» dira Jean PLIYA,

Benin City

Benin City is the capital and largest city of Edo State in southern Nigeria. It is the fourth-largest city in Nigeria after Lagos, Kano and Ibadan, with a total population of 1,782,000 as of 2021.[1] It is situated approximately 40 kilometres (25 mi) north of the Benin River and 320 kilometres (200 mi) by road east of Lagos. Benin City is the centre of Nigeria's rubber industry, and oil production is also a significant industry.[2]

It was the most important city of the Edo kingdom of Benin, which flourished during the 13th to the 19th century. It had important trade relations with Portugal during the last centuries before being razed in 1897 by a British punitive raid. Many treasures and artifacts, including the Benin Bronzes were taken by the British who followed up their victory with a military occupation of the area.[3]

The indigenous people of Benin City are the Edo people (the Benin People), and they speak the Edo language and other Edoid languages. The people of the city have one of the richest dress cultures on the African continent and are known for their beads, body marks, bangles, anklets, raffia work and the subsistence farming of yam, plantain and cassava.[4]

History

Edo people

The original people and founders of the Ẹdo Empire and the Ẹdo people initially were ruled by the Ogiso (Kings of the Sky) dynasty who called their land Igodomigodo. Igodo, the first Ogiso, wielded much influence and gained popularity as a good ruler. He died after a long reign and was succeeded by Ere, his eldest son. In the 12th century, great palace intrigue and the battle for power erupted between the most cherished wife of the last Ogiso's and prince Ekaladerhan, son of the last Ogiso . In anger over an oracle that was framed to indict the crown prince instead of the Ogiso's diabolic wife. The judgement was that that Prince Ekaladerhan should be killed. The men that was sent to kill him released him towards Ekewan and was left to escape. Meanwhile, an Oracle has said that Ife should wait for their King patiently. When he arrived at Ife He was made their King, in accordance to the Oracle. That is while the yoruba's could not determine where he came from. He gave himself a new name Izoduwa, meaning, I have found prosperity. This what the Yoruba's now call Oduduwa. When his father Ogiso died, the Ogiso dynasty was ended as the people and royal kingmakers preferred their king's son as natural next in line to rule.[5]

The exiled Ekaladerhan, now Oduduwa, refused to come to Benin because of how he was treated, having found out that he wasn't killed. He divided to send one of his son, Oramiyan. He refused to return from Ile ife but sent his son Ọranmiyan to become king in his place.[6] Prince Ọranmiyan took up residence in the palace built for him at Uzama by the elders, now a coronation shrine.

Soon after he married a beautiful lady, Ẹrinmwide, daughter of Osa-nego, the ninth Enogie of Egor.[7] He and Erinmwide had a son. After some years he called a meeting of the people and renounced his office, remarking that the country was a land of vexation, Ile-Ibinu, and that only a child born, trained and educated in the arts and mysteries of the land could reign over the people.[8] The country was afterward known by this name. Allegedly Ọba Ẹwẹka later changed the name of the city of Ile-Binu, the capital of the Benin kingdom, to "Ubinu." This name would be reinterpreted by the Portuguese as "Benin" in their own language. Around 1470, Ẹwuare changed the name of the state to Ẹdo.[9] This was about the time the people of Ọkpẹkpẹ migrated from Benin City. Alternatively, Yorubas believe Oduduwa was from the Middle East and migrated from that area to the present Ile Ife.[10] Because of his power and military might, he was able to conquer the enemies invading Benin. That was why the people of Benin made him the King or Oba of Benin. In any case, it is agreed upon by both the Yoruba and Edos that Oduduwa sent his son Prince Oramiyan of Ife to rule Benin City and found the Oba dynasty in Benin City.[11][12]

The Benin imperialism started in the last decade of the thirteen century by Oba Ewedo.[13]

European contact

The Portuguese visited Benin City around 1485. Benin grew rich during the 16th and 17th centuries due to trade within southern Nigeria, as well as through trade with Europeans, mostly in pepper and ivory. In the early 16th century, the Ọba sent an ambassador to Lisbon, and the King of Portugal sent Christian missionaries to Benin. Some residents of Benin could still speak a pidgin Portuguese in the late 19th century. Many Portuguese loan words can still be found today in the languages of the area. A Portuguese captain described the city in 1691:"Great Benin, where the king resides, is larger than Lisbon; all the streets run straight and as far as the eye can see. The houses are large, especially that of the king, which is richly decorated and has fine columns. The city is wealthy and industrious. It is so well governed that theft is unknown and the people live in such security that they have no doors to their houses". This was at a time when theft and murder were rife in London.[14][15]

Drawing of Benin City made by a British officer, 1897

On 17 February 1897, Benin City fell to the British.[4] In the "Punitive Expedition", a 1,200-strong British force, under the command of Admiral Sir Harry Rawson, conquered and razed the city after all but two men from a previous British expeditionary force led by Acting Consul General Philips were killed.[16][17] Alan Boisragon, one of the survivors of the Benin Massacre, included references of the practice of human sacrifice in the city in a firsthand account written in 1898 (one year after the Punitive Expedition).[18] James D. Graham notes that although "there is little doubt that human sacrifices were an integral part of the Benin state religion from very early days," firsthand accounts regarding such acts often varied significantly, with some reporting them and others making no mention of them.[19][20]

The "Benin Bronzes", portrait figures, busts and groups created in iron, carved ivory, and especially in brass (conventionally called "bronze"), were taken from the city by the British and are currently displayed in various museums around the world.[4] Some of the bronzes were auctioned off to compensate for the expenses incurred during the invasion of the city. Most of these artifacts can be found today in British museums and other parts of the world. In recent years, various appeals have gone to the British government to return such artifacts. The most prominent of these artifacts was the famous Queen Idia mask used as a mascot during the Second Festival of Arts Culture (FESTAC '77) held in Nigeria in 1977 now known as "Festac Mask".[21]

The capture of Benin paved the way for British military occupation and the merging of later regional British incorporation of African kingdoms into the Niger Coast Protectorate, the Protectorate of Southern Nigeria and finally, into the Colony and Protectorate of Nigeria. The British permitted the restoration of the Benin monarchy in 1914, but true political power still lay with the colonial administration of Nigeria.[22]

Nigerian independence

Following Nigeria's independence from British rule in 1960, Benin City became the capital of Mid-Western Region when the region was split from Western Region in June 1963. In 1976 when the region was renamed as Bendel State, it remained the capital of the region and became the state capital of Edo State when Bendel state was split into Delta state and Edo state in 1991.[23]

Geography

Climate

Climate refers to the characteristic conditions of the earth's lower surface atmosphere at a specific location; weather refers to the day-to-day fluctuations in these conditions at the same location. The commonly used variables that are by meteorologists to measure daily weather phenomena are air temperature, precipitation (for example, rain, sleet, snow and hail), atmospheric pressure and humidity, wind, and sunshine and cloud cover.[24][25] Benin City has a borderline tropical savanna climate (Köppen Aw) bordering upon a tropical monsoon climate (Am). The weather is uncomfortably hot and humid year-round, and generally very dull, especially between July and September.

Environmental issues

Climate change

The city is already feeling the effects of climate change, with increases and temperature, humidity and precipitation trends between 1981 and the 2015.[37]

Flood management

Benin city experiences regular flooding.[38] Studies have consistently highlighted the problem since at least 1993.[39] Experts have recommended a number of ways to improve flood management, including better controls on land use, construction and development,[39] improved Community-based programs designed to improve city adaptation and disaster management,[38] and improvements in individual preparedness.[40]

In June 2020, a significant number of communities and individuals were left homeless because of city flooding.[41] At the time, residents and the city blamed poor storm drains and a failure to continue flood adaptation programs.[41]

Urban heating

The city, on average is .5 degrees Celsius warmer than the surrounding rural areas, and these temperature differences are greater during workweeks when human activity increases pollution in the urban area.

Waste management

A 2021 study published in Nature, highlighted that the city has not met the standards for waste management set by the Edo State Waste Management Board. After surveying 2720 inhabitants of the city, the authors found that most people in the city didn't understand proper waste management practices.[42] Moroever, the study found that survey participants didn't understand how waste management was connected to other issues like greenhouse gas emissions.[42] An additional study, found that most residents didn't understand the health impacts of bad waste management.

Culture

Attractions in the city includes the National Museum, the Oba Palace, Igun Street (Famous for bronze casting and other metal works). Other attractions include various festivals and the Benin Moats (measuring about 20 to 40 ft), the King's Square (known as Ring Road)[43] and its traditional markets.

The Binis are known for bronze sculpture, its casting skills, and their arts and craft. Benin City is also the home of one of the oldest sustained monarchies in the world. Various festivals are held in Benin City yearly to celebrate various historic occasions and seasons. Igue festival is the most popular of the festivals where the Oba celebrates the history and culture of his people and blesses the land and the people. It is celebrated at a time between Christmas and New Year.[44]

Festival

Benin city has a popular festival called Igue festival. The festival is an annual event held in Benin to usher in the new year. The festival is an integral part of the culture of the people in Benin City (formerly referred to as Benin Kingdom or the Kingdom of Benin). The festival is believed to renew Oba Ewuare magical powers and it celebration comes between Christmas and New Year celebrations. The festival includes the Oba's blessing of the land and his people.[45][46][47][48]

Aside the cultural festival, the City also play host to the Benin City Film Festival. The festival create room for the promotion of works produced by local film community. It also promote contents of National and International emerging filmmakers to showcase their works in an environment where they have access to experienced industry professionals.[49][50]

Bini market days

The "Bini" people have four market days: Ekioba, Ekenaka, Agbado, and Eken.

Transportation

Benin Airport serves the city with three commercial airlines flying to it, including Arik Air, Air Peace and Azman.
